
On the mound, Walker, a Hollis native, has posted an 11–10 mark with a 2.38 ERA. She too is a control pitcher having walked only 11 batters in 123–1/3 innings thus far.

While Beckman and Walker have been serving double duty, Deb Nasitka just hits, and that's good enough for Boston College coach Jennifer Finley.

Nasitka, a junior from Irvine, Calif., is hitting .341 with a team-high seven home runs and 35 runs batted in. She also leads the Eagles with 13 doubles, and is BC's only threat to steal a base having not been caught this spring in six attempts. Nasitka is one of the Eagles' better defensive players as well, notching a .969 fielding percentage.

There is a severe drop off in production behind the Eagles' terrific trio. Senior first baseman Kelly Cross (.288–0–9) and junior outfielder Laura Thompson (.255–0–13) are the only other truly consistent offensive threats.

There has been little or no drop-off in the performance of any of the Minutewomen this season. Sophomore Kim Gutridge (1B), a strong candidate for A-10 Player of the Year, has been stellar all season, offensively (.368–1–29) and defensively (.981). Sam Cardenas (.333–2–39) is still on an offensive tear that started right around the beginning of the Atlantic 10 schedule for the Minutewomen, though she has cooled off a bit lately.

Freshman hurler Danielle Henderson (18–5, 1.15) hasn't lost a game since a one–run loss to Missouri on Mar. 2 at the NSCA Lead-Off Classic in Columbus, Ga. Her cohort on the hill, Liz Wagner (14–6, 1.10) has won nine of her last 10 and has been consistently good all season.

The only Minutewoman who has had anything that would resemble an inconsistent sea-

Time to play the numbers game, NHL playoffs style:

0 — That's how many Canadian teams advanced to the second round. Last time that happened, Richard Nixon was on the verge of impeachment in 1974.

1 — For the Toronto Maple Leafs, the only higher–seeded team not moving on.

2 — The Blues and Panthers were the ones I didn't pick to win their opening series. Six out of eight isn't bad.

3 — The amount of Original Six teams left in the round of eight.

4 — This is a big one — it's how many overtime periods Pittsburgh needed to defeat Washington in Game 4, and it's the number of consecutive games won by the Penguins and Rangers, one of which will see its streak end when the teams meet for a place in the Eastern Conference Finals.

5 — This doesn't concern the playoffs, but in deference to his Cup–clinching performance last year, this is the total of goals scored against Martin Brodeur by Germany in the World Championships. The reputed Bavarian snipers routed the French–Canadian jinxed by my awarding him the Vezina Trophy faster than you can say Stefan Ustorf.

6 — Joe Sakic scored a half–dozen goals on Vancouver in leading the Avalanche into the Western Conference semifinals.

7 — It's the number of a game not yet played in these playoffs.

8, 9 and 10 — The rank I give Gary Thorne among hockey broadcasters.

The great Gary gets his wish as ESPN has its dream series between the Messiers and Marios. Wonder what blatant favoritism he can force on us in this one. Love that "Forget it, Canadiens" call as Mike Richter made three straight saves. An impressive display it was, but does Thorne remember who he's working for? If this were the MSG network or the Atlanta Braves on TBS, I could accept him calling a game like King Homer. Not on a national station, however. His on air New Yoa–awk love affair is an embarrassment to his profession, and until he curbs it my mute button stays on.

Kottler on the NHL

As for what we'll see, Mark Messier and Mario Lemieux, the Michael and Magic of the NHL, have not done their best work yet. Survivor in Australia reflects on massacre

HOBART, Australia (AP) — When the shooting stopped, Dennis Olson crawled through the chaos and ran outside. His terrified wife, Mary, still lay on the floor inside the cafeteria. What had happened started to sink in.

"I looked inside the restaurant and saw bodies lying all over. My wife saw much more," Olson said. "She doesn't want to talk about it."

So Olson, a delivery driver from Vancouver, Wash., tells about how a 28-year-old man identified by police as Martin Bryant slaughtered 20 people with a high-powered rifle in the cafeteria at Port Arthur colonial prison 30 miles south of Hobart.

He tells about how he and his wife crouched on a cafeteria floor, listening to the muttering gunman pick off victims one at a time — each with a shot to the head.

"It was really quiet because people had the feeling that if you say anything you would draw his attention and he'd shoot," Olson recalled yesterday. "There were no heroes in there. There were people cowering, hoping they wouldn't be his next target."

Olson, 54, and Mrs. Olson, 49, who manages a greeting card store, were in line to buy sandwiches in the cafeteria when a loud bang echoed through the room.

Christian rally in DC continues despite rain

WASHINGTON (AP) — Scripture readings and choir music reverberated around the Capitol yesterday as thousands of people carrying Bibles and umbrellas endured a downpour to proclaim their faith and reaffirm Christian values.

"Let it rain. But see that we're still here," said Anne Gimenez, a preacher from Virginia Beach, Va., and a coordinator of the two-day "Washington for Jesus" rally.

"We're still worshiping and loving God, even in the rain." People wore plastic ponchos, raincoats and garbage bags as they sang and danced. A group of about 20 young people spread a sheet of clear plastic over their bodies as they lay on the ground and rested after Monday's all-night youth rally.

"This is a pep rally. The kids are still here, and their moms and dads have shown up for the celebration," said the Rev. Jerry Falwell, who spoke on America's religious heritage. "I want the members of Congress to understand... that the solution to America's serious moral and spiritual problem is not political. We're in need of a religious awakening."

U.S. Park Police estimated 75,000 people attended the two-day rally. Organizers had predicted the rally would draw 250,000 people.

The rally was coordinated by One Nation Under God Inc., a nonprofit, nondenominational evangelical Christian organization based in Virginia Beach.

UMass coach John Calipari recognized at statehouse

BOSTON (AP) — A day after losing their best player, University of Massachusetts basketball coach John Calipari and his staff were recognized at the Statehouse for the team's best season ever. The team went 35-2 and battled all the way to the Final Four before being eliminated by Kentucky. But star center Marcus Camby said Monday he was going to try his luck in the NBA, rather than stay another year at the university.

Calipari looked on the bright side. "It's like one celebration after another," he said.

"What we did yesterday is celebrate Marcus Camby's career and future. We are absolutely in agreement with what he did. We're happy for him and we supported him," he said.

Calipari said that if Camby had returned, UMass would have been the team to beat in college basketball, but "we're not going to fall off the face of the Earth."

"Obviously, we're not going to be as good, but we'll still be pretty good," he said.

Calipari and his coaches, who were accompanied by UMass President William Bulger, were celebrated in both the House and Senate chambers and at a reception. Calipari said the players were unable to attend because they were catching up on their studies after a "whirlwind" year.

Bulger said Camby's decision to pass up his senior year was, in his words, "a very reasonable, very understandable decision."

"I'm confident, knowing him, he'll be back to take care of the unfinished business of education," he said.

Bulger, speaking before the House, told Calipari, "You are a shining example for young people."

Calipari told the House, "We represent the Commonwealth. When we go out and play, it's Massachusetts playing somebody on national TV. I just hope we've made you all proud."

Rat race won; Rodents lying low in Big Dig

By Jon Marcus
Associated Press

BOSTON— Boston is winning the rat race.

When they started ripping up the middle of the city last year in a colossal highway project known as the Big Dig, everyone was certain rats the size of small dogs would come swarming out of the ground and go scurrying through the streets and into buildings. But so far, that hasn't happened.

"I've only seen one lonely rat since then. I almost felt sorry for him," said Avis Ashton, co-owner of the Country Life Vegetarian, a restaurant so close to the harborside construction site that its patrons have to navigate around the concrete barriers.

If anything, people are seeing fewer rats now than before the construction started.

Boston's municipal Pied Piper, John Eade, credits computer mapping and an alley-by-alley cleanup strategy.

"Anyone who speculated that we were going to be overrun with rats was on the winning side of any bet," said Eade, commissioner of inspectional services and commanding general of the war on rats. "You would have had to give odds to get somebody to bet against the rats."

Long before the backhoes started digging the tunnel in which Boston's elevated Central Artery will be buried, planners and businesses fretted about the Norway rats that have been known to grow as big as Yorkshire terriers, survive a 40-foot fall and develop an immunity to poisons.

Worse, the multibillion-dollar construction project is under the oldest section of this colonial city and passes restaurants and food-processing plants.

UPC discusses concert decision

Lack of funds, people, organization factor into RSO's problems

By Jonathan Liberty
Collegian Staff

The decision to not have the spring concert was discussed at a general committee meeting of University Productions and Concerts (UPC) last night.

UPC Multicultural Talent Coordinator Aren Lee Hong began the meeting by reading a letter from Delphine Quarles, director of the Campus Activities Advising Center. The letter said, "We commend the collective strength, wisdom and courage involved with the decision to not have a spring concert. We support and respect the decision."

Over 50 people were in attendance for the meeting, many of whom were on the UPC staff. Others came to voice their opinions and have their questions answered.

"Money was definitely only part of the issue," said Stacey Peck, UPC Production Manager. "Ten years ago UPC was a very large organization, but year by year we have lost volunteers, which is a major reason why we will not have a concert."

Only 22 people had signed up to volunteer to work security at the Spring Concert by last Sunday, when the decision was made.

Peck added that UPC has had internal problems throughout the year. "We are presently at a standstill; we need to take the time to restructure our entire organization, from our goals to how we can better reach out to the community to our constitution."

Lee Kong said, "I can almost guarantee that UPC will be better next year. We need to take one step back before we can take two steps forward."

UPC is currently beginning their restructuring process by hiring new staff members.

Part of the money which UPC retains by not having a spring concert will be kept in the revenue account for the next fiscal year.

Several people in attendance questioned why UPC did not put together a spring concert composed of local bands.

"We looked into local bands but there are 23,000 people at this University that we have to please," Lee Kong said. "But even with just local bands, we still would have had so many other problems."

UPC Promotions Director Dana Salmon added, "We could have had $1 million, but if we did not have enough volunteer security, we would be shut down anyway."

"Also, I think that if we had a show of only local bands

Taste of Amherst Day to mark 5th year anniversary

By Daniel E. Levenson
Collegian Staff

From Thursday to Sunday, the fifth annual Taste Of Amherst celebration will take place on the Amherst Town Common and on sidewalks in the center of town.

The Retail Promotions Committee, which is made up of eight to 12 individuals, is in charge of running the event.

According to Cherel Rybolt from the Town of Amherst chamber of commerce, the group is composed of "people that are interested in promoting the retail businesses of Amherst."

The event will start on Thursday evening at 5 p.m. and run until 9 p.m., Friday and Saturday from 11 a.m. to 9 p.m. and Sunday from 12 p.m. to 5 p.m.

Judie Teraspulsky, from Judie's Restaurant has chaired the event for the past four years. She is organizing it this year.

The event is aimed at drawing students and the general public. It is a way of letting residents see what the town has to offer in the area of retail and restaurants.

Approximately 25 restaurants and 25 retailers from the area will be participating, said Rybolt. Local restaurants were sent invitations a couple of months ago and retailers were visited. The restaurants will be setting up on the town commons. Retailers will have their sales on the sidewalks in front of their respective stores.

The event will also feature a variety of entertainers from magicians to musicians. John Fuller and The Swift Kick Band, The South End Jazz Band, The Blue Nile Jazz Band and Richard Dubois and The Snake Charmers will be playing. Trevor the Games Man will also be performing at the celebration of local businesses.

D'Angelo Sandwich Shops, which participated in last year's event, will not be doing it this year. Manager Blaine Applebee cited "staffing reasons and timing" for not participating in Taste Of Amherst.

Antonio's Pizza, which has participated in the event for the past four years, will be selling pizza on the Amherst Town Common along with the other restaurants involved in the event. Chris Sarage, manager of Antonio's, expressed enthusiasm about this year's celebration.

"We're just gonna go and keep up the good work that we always do," Sarage said.

Justice Department task force to investigate gas price increases

By Michael J. Sniffen
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Congressional leaders promised a vote by Memorial Day to roll back gasoline taxes as the Justice Department opened an investigation yesterday into the causes of the recent surge in prices at the pump.

"We believe with the skyrocketing prices of gasoline, jet fuel and other fuels that the most certain way to give consumers relief is to repeal the gas tax... and do it as quickly as we can before the summer driving season starts in earnest," said Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, President Clinton's GOP challenger in the fall election.

In a contest to win votes by lowering prices, Republicans have called for a repeal of the 4.3-cent-a-gallon gasoline tax increase that Clinton won in 1993 as part of a deficit-reduction package. Dole and House Speaker Newt Gingrich said Congress would vote quickly for a repeal through the end of this year. And they said a permanent repeal would be included in their fiscal 1997 budget package.

said it is willing to discuss repeal. At the same time, it has moved to drive prices down by increasing supplies.

And yesterday, Assistant Attorney General Anne K. Bingaman, head of the Justice Department's antitrust division, named a five-person task force of lawyers and economists to conduct the investigation of price increases.

She acted at the request of Associate Attorney General John Schmidt and in response to inquiries by three members of Congress, department spokesman Carl Stern said.

Two Senate Democrats from Connecticut, Christopher Dodd and Joseph Lieberman, and Rep. Charles Schumer (D-N.Y.) wrote Attorney General Janet Reno requesting an investigation.

The task force, whose members were not identified, "will first study whether market forces account for the increase in prices," Stern said. "If not, then they will determine whether there is evidence of collusion, which is illegal under antitrust laws."

Reno told reporters yesterday afternoon that she was not aware of anyone in the Justice Department discussing the probe with the White House before the yesterday morning decision to open the investigation. As inquiries from Capitol Hill mounted, Reno said, "We asked Anne [Bingaman] to look into it to see if there's any new information."

Schmidt said, "There was enough unusual activity that Anne thought, and I agreed, this was something the antitrust division should look into, to see if there was evidence of collusion as opposed to market forces at work."

During gasoline shortages in past years, the antitrust division has found no basis for taking action against oil companies. In those instances, either market forces were responsible for price increases or the companies raised prices independently of each other, thereby avoiding violations of antitrust laws that prohibit competing businesses from agreeing on price actions and strategies. The Justice investigation is the third move by the Clinton administration in two days to respond to the price surge, which has become an election-year issue.

On Monday, Clinton authorized the orderly sales of about 12 million barrels of oil from the nation's strategic petroleum reserves, a move that, by increasing supplies, might drive down prices. He also asked Energy Secretary Hazel O'Leary to report within 45 days "about the factors that led to the run-up in prices."

Hospital to begin new expansion

By Melanie B. Arruda
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — Cooley Dickinson Hospital will begin a new expansion this August.

"There is a need for more out-patient space," Director of Public Relations Peter Schoenberger said. "[The expansion] will make it easier for people to come in and out of out-patient services."

The hospital typically receives an annual total of 7,000 in-patients and 150,000 outpatients, according to Schoenberger.

"It is very crowded right now and this will relieve some of the congestion," Schoenberger said.

It will also be more convenient for patients because of a new front entrance with easy access to elevators in the reception area, he said.

"The facility will be as high in care as the quality we can provide," Schoenberger said.

The new three-story building will be located between the Emergency Department and the McCallum Building.

The project's new building will also include new reception and admitting areas, a new coffee shop and gift shops, and a new central sterile supply department, according to Schoenberger. There will also be new space for pre- admission testing, cardiopulmonary testing and rehabilitation services, and a more convenient reception area for the Radiology Department, he added.

The central sterile supply department deals with sterilizing, cleaning and redistribution of various hospital supplies, Schoenberger said. These supplies include different tools, tubing from ventilators and bedpans, he added.

A new Childbirth Center will be also created in the new building to replace the old Childbirth Center built in the 1930s, Schoenberger said.

The new Childbirth Center will include five birthing rooms, one room for Caesarean births, 11 post-partum rooms, one room that can be converted, plus a family room where family members can stay with the newborn after the mother has been discharged, said Carolyn Szafranski, nurse manager of the Childbirth Center.

We are "dehospitalizing the few days people have after birth," Szafranski said. The care will be less clinical and more home-like with a continued focus on family care and help to support families from pregnancy to parenting, she said.

"Sometimes peoples' first exposure to the hospital is during childbirth," Schoenberger said.

After services move into the new building, the space in the old building will be taken up mostly by the Emergency Department and Surgical Day Care Unit, Shoenberger said.

Employees were involved in planning the set-up of the new building with the architects, Shoenberger said.

"They're the ones who really know how to lay things out," he said. The hospital consists of 1,000 employees and 300 physicians on the medical staff, he added.

The hospital was originally built when in-patient care was the dominant force, Schoenberger said.

"Healthcare is constantly changing," Schoenberger said. "We know we're doing the right thing."

Project 2000 is expected to be completed in the spring of 1998.

Hadley Farm competitions welcome spring

By Liz Anderson
Collegian Correspondent

HADLEY — Spring, the season when old organisms generate new life, has arrived. What better place to witness the creation of life then at the Hadley Farm?

Caretakers of sheep, pigs, cows and horses, the Hadley Farm has held numerous livestock and dairy competitions operated exclusively to dairy, veterinary and poultry science majors in the past.

Now, the livestock competitions are open to all University of Massachusetts students. Last weekend, the Hadley Farm held its 61st Annual Livestock Classic. The competition began Friday evening and continued until Saturday afternoon.

Meredith Kotanchik, a computer science major at UMass, signed up for this year's Livestock Classic during the first week of April in the campus concourse. During the next three weeks she trained and groomed a pig she named Marcus Hamby.

Kotanchik was committed to cleaning Hamby and providing him with clean bedding and fresh food three times a week. Within her first few visits to the Hadley Farm, Hamby began to follow Kotanchik around and slowly a friendship was created.

"I grew up on a farm. When I go to school, I get animal withdrawal. It is refreshing to be working on a farm again," Kotanchik said. "Pigs are real characters. They are really smart and set in their ways."

Motivated not only by "animal withdrawal," but by the novelty of a livestock competition, Kotanchik and a group of her friends became regulars at the Hadley Farm. They learned how to clip, groom, and condition their animals.

"Hadley Farm is a really cool environment to have fun and hang out with my friends. Not only did I learn a lot about pigs, I got to play with other animals as well," Kotanchik said. "I even saved three piglets from a conveyer belt."

At the competition on Friday night, the pigs were judged on their appearance and obedience to their exhibitors. Under the guidance of a long pole, the pigs were controlled to move forward and side to side in front of the judges. They were judged on their clipped ears as well as the fullness and shine of their coats.

The pigs were narrowed down into a select group of finalists and on April 27, the winner was chosen. However, Kotanchik's pig did not make it to the finals.

"This was a great experience," Kotanchik said. "It is not only fun but it is a different way to celebrate spring!"

the Asian, Latino, African, and Native American (ALANA) community would not have been pleased," Lee Kong said.

Student Government Association (SGA) Speaker Dan Castellano spoke in support of UPC. "In regards to the Student Activities Trust Fund (SATF) relief there has not been a more dedicated group than UPC. But the spring concert is a dead issue. It is time to start thinking about next year."

"Our intent is to make sure that UPC will not become extinct and that we can make a strong next year," said Peck.

Castellano and Salmon recommended that students come to represent for UPC at the SGA Senate budget meeting tonight at Campus Center room 163 at 7 p.m.

Movie delves into a cyber world

Ghost in the Shell an excellent introduction for anime genre

COURTESY MANGA ENTERTAINMENT INC

Ghost in the Shell features a gloomy, macabre mood in a futuristic cybercity.

By Justin Daniel Smith
Collegian Staff

GHOST IN THE SHELL
Directed by Mamoru Oshii
Playing at Academy of Music

Except for a die hard cult following akin to Trekkies, anime (or more crudely, Japanimation) has yet to establish itself with American audiences. Often the post apocalyptic, cyber-fiction world of anime seems too hyperreal for most. Ghost in the Shell is a great accessible introduction to this cult media.

The beautiful "Major" Motoko Kusanagi, a cyborg officer of Section 9, and her unit are assigned to hunt down the notorious hacker known as the Puppet Master. Created as Project 2501 by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the Puppet Master developed his own being (or as the film states, his own "ghost") and defects from the M.O.F.A.'s agenda.

Kusanagi and the rest of Section 9 must find the Puppet Master before he finds a host to live in and leaves the "sea of information" forever.

Problems arise when Kusanagi begins to question her own existence and the fate of her "ghost." She begins to find that there is really is no difference between her and the Puppet Master.

Ghost provides intense visuals that combine traditional cel animation with state of the art computer-technology. Mamoru Oshii, who produced the Citizen Kane of anime, Akira, in 1989, has since become a guru in the field.

The images are supported by a great soundtrack that strengthens the gloomy, macabre mood of the cyber-city. The Brian Eno/U2 collaboration known as the Passengers provide the dark "One Minute Warning" that carries one of the most beautiful scenes to occur in animation history. Images bounce from the grey buildings to the rain-soaked streets as Kusanagi wanders in her confusion.

Ghost in the Shell is clearly not for everyone. But for those willing to enter a new world where technology and the superhumans that thrive on it create visions of destruction at a level that can only be enacted through animation, this is a great introduction to the world of anime. A–

Actress not blue about TV movie role

By Bob Thomas
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Most viewers know Sharon Lawrence as the coolly efficient assistant D.A. and patient wife of the moody detective Andy Sipowicz on "NYPD Blue."

They might have trouble recognizing her Sunday in "A Friend's Betrayal," an NBC movie in which she appears as a troubled New York designer who sleeps with her best friend's teen-age son. The friend is Harley Jane Kozak of Parenthood, and her mixed-up, amorous son is Brian Austin Green of "Beverly Hills, 90210."

Viewers will see a different Sharon Lawrence in the movie — vulnerable and sexy.

"The sexuality in this piece was not the most attractive aspect to it, really," Lawrence said in an interview at her publicist's Century City office.

Lawrence, 34, is obviously staking her future on television. Last month, she signed "a seven-figure deal" with NBC to develop two series and two TV movies. She'll remain with "NYPD Blue" for two seasons, although her appearances may be reduced. She is considering a sitcom called "Fired," which may air next midseason.

"I didn't go in search of it," she said of the deal. "They came to me after I did a guest spot on 'Caroline in the City.' That came about because I met a couple of the writers at a Christmas party. They saw me in a very different light from Sylvia (on 'NYPD Blue'), because I'm not her.

"I did this very broad, extreme, out-there, harsh, brash woman... It allowed me to employ a lot of the skills I had honed in musical theater. Comedy is so much about timing, and there's a musicality to it that makes a lot of sense to me. It was very physical, so I felt like I was dancing."

Lawrence grew up in Charlotte and Raleigh, N.C., and studied journalism at Chapel Hill. She had been active in high school musicals and church choir, but believed a theatrical major would have been impractical. She did plays in college and worked in summer stock.

After graduation, she headed straight for New York.

"I always had a sense that I could learn what I needed to learn and I was safe wherever I went," she said. "And I was right.

"There were times when I didn't know how I'd pay my rent, and I was afraid that maybe my dreams wouldn't come true. But I never felt intimidated by a city. That's something my family instilled in me."

After two weeks as a waitress, she was hired to sing and dance on a Caribbean cruise ship. Her first big job was touring with Anthony Quinn in Zorba. She played leads in My Fair Lady, "Camelot" and Sweet Charity, then came to Hollywood in 1992.

Three "day player" jobs in television led to an interview with Steven Bochco's company. Dennis Franz had been wanting a love interest on "NYPD Blue" to smooth some of Sipowicz's rough edges.

A meeting between Franz and Lawrence established a compatibility, and they have become one of television's oddest but endearing couples.

Former 007 in quest to revive career

By Bob Thomas
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Roger Moore came to the decision when he would call for dinner reservations and maitre d's started responding: "Roger who? Would you spell it, please?"

Double-O-Seven had fallen to obscurity purgatory.

"I realize that working with UNICEF, my value is that I am well known," said the star of seven James Bond films. "When I started hearing that on the telephone, I said, 'Uh-oh, I'd better make another movie.'"

So he did. He co-stars with Jean-Claude Van Damme in The Quest, which the Belgian muscleman also directed. Moore plays a former British navy officer turned pirate and con man, who sponsors Van Damme in a tournament of the best fighters of countries around the world.

Van Damme personally delivered a script to Moore at his home in Gstaad, Switzerland. Moore agreed to the film, partly because he wouldn't be called on for the action stuff. "That was the beauty of it," Moore commented smugly.

"Also, not playing the hero, I realized I did not have to be there every day. I was doing what I had always envied in every film I've done."

Roger Moore became well-known in the 1950s, appearing in such movies as The Last Time I Saw Paris (Elizabeth Taylor).

Then, in 1973, he took over for Sean Connery as 007 in Live and Let Die. He made six more of the Bond action flicks until checking out with A View to a Kill in 1985.

Moore has made only three movies since removing Bond's fancy duds: Bed and Breakfast, about a castaway who charms a houseful of Maine women; Bullseye, a lookalike comedy with Michael Caine that went directly to video; and Fire, Ice and Dynamite, a German-made sci-fi film that had limited distribution. He also starred in a two-hour TV movie, The Man Who Wouldn't Die.

More films in the future?

He replied: "Maybe some misguided producer will see The Quest and say, 'Oh, he's still alive! We must use him!'

"I have a couple of projects that are simmering. One is a remake of a French film which is almost ready. All we need is to find a leading lady old enough to look as if she would be interested in being kissed by me."

Protect your Textbook investment!
To prepare for finals you really need your textbooks. Beware, other people also want your textbooks.
Textbook Theft
Theft of books occurs all the time. To protect your investment:
1. don't leave your books or backpacks unattended,
2. don't leave your room open,
3. do write your name in your books.
If your books are stolen, file a report with the University Police and the Textbook Annex.
Buyback Scam
Beware of people who come to your dorm to buyback your books. Last semester people went through the dorms buying books door to door. They are not authorized and will not give you the best prices (despite what they tell you).
They do not have access to the list of books that we are buying at 50% of the publisher's list price. They will pay you less.
If a faculty member has placed an order for your book to be used in the fall semester we can pay you 50% of the publisher's list price for that book. People going door to door will not!
Textbook buyback starts May 15th at the Annex and in Campus Center Room 162. The buyback at Hampden starts May 22nd.

UPC

University Productions and Concerts would like to thank everyone for participating in an extremely successful year. It was a pleasure organizing and assisting in providing programming such as:

DJ Craig G,DJ Clue, Aquarium Rescue Unit, Belizbeha, 311, Shootyz Groove, HASA CASA, Faith Evans, Smoothe Da Hustler, BMCP Music Conference, Puerto Rican Cultural Night, Kinito Mendez, a National Battle of the Bands Showcase, Boricuas Heritage Night, The Toasters, and Let's Go Bowling.

University Productions and Concerts (UPC) is embarking on a journey that will lead the UMass Community to a land of increased and improved programming. In order to accomplish this we need somewhat of an ideal environment. This environment includes many different factors. Two of the main components are UPC and you, the campus community. Without either of these ingredients our purpose cannot be met. As an organization we are beginning to look towards the future. We would like to bring the most enjoyable programming to you, and we would like for you to have the utmost input in this decision-making process.

In light of the high expectations that we have for ourselves and the obligation that is owed to the campus, we feel that it would be a disservice to the undergraduate student community to put forth a Spring Concert at this time. Instead we are focusing our attention on being able to provide a service that you deserve and have come to expect. Please understand that this was an extremely difficult decision. We would appreciate your future support for University Productions and Concerts. If you have any questions please contact us at the address or phone number below.

well, has hit one- third of the Sox' 21 home runs. The only down-side to Vaughn's All-World performances is that he continues to strike out at an almost ridiculous pace.

Looks like manager Kevin Kennedy has no choice but to leave Troy O'Leary (.300–4–12) in the lineup and let him learn center field. He can't do any worse than Dwayne Hosey. O'Leary was basically horrible in right field at the beginning of last season, but he settled down and was decent at the end of the summer.

What do you want to bet that if Nomar Garciaparra weren't injured now, John (no more power) Valentin would be taking a day off here and there? Valentin is a streaky hitter, but he's had three cold streaks to just one short hot streak.

• Brain Buster Answers: 1. Bernie Carbo, 2. No. 8. Yogi Berra and Bill Dickey

• Mark McGwire didn't take too long to get back into the swing of things with the Oakland A's. The oft–injured slugger has nailed two home runs since being back in the lineup including one prodigious blast that landed on the roof at Tigers Stadium.

Reggie Lewis' wife suing for negligence; owners OK Oilers move to Nashville

BOSTON (AP) — The widow of former Celtics star Reggie Lewis yesterday sued the team of cardiologists that had said Lewis eventually could return to play after a playoff-game collapse. Donna Harris-Lewis claims in a suit filed in Suffolk Superior Court that Dr. Gilbert H. Mudge Jr. of Brigham and Women's Hospital and three associates were negligent in telling Lewis he could play again.

Lewis collapsed during an April 29, 1993, playoff game in the Boston Garden. He died three months later, on July 27, 1993, after collapsing a second time while shooting baskets with friends at a Brandeis University gym.

Harris-Lewis' suit, which seeks unspecified damages, claims Mudge failed to treat Lewis in accordance with standard practice and standards. The suit also says, "Reginald Lewis experienced conscious pain and suffering prior to his death."

A woman who answered the telephone at Mudge's home said he was in California and would not return until Friday.

Harris-Lewis could not be reached for comment yesterday. Her attorney, Jeffrey Rossman, reached by telephone at his home, said he could not comment on the complaint because he did not have it with him.

Lewis, 27, first stumbled and fell during a playoff game against the Charlotte Hornets. After a team of doctors assembled by the Celtics at New England Baptist Hospital said he had a life-threatening heart ailment and warned that his career was in jeopardy, Lewis transferred to Brigham and Women's and sought a second opinion from Mudge.

Mudge diagnosed Lewis with a less-harmful neurological condition and said he was optimistic Lewis could return to basketball under medical supervision. Lewis then consulted a third team of heart specialists in California about the conflicting diagnoses. Shortly after Lewis' death, his widow said her husband had been following his doctors' recommendation to avoid strenuous activity and was awaiting more tests to decide whether he could safely return to professional basketball.

Harris-Lewis said her husband's doctors had decided to let him compete again only if the Celtics provided a cardiologist and a defibrillator at all games and practices. They also wanted to monitor his heart during competitive play before giving final clearance for Lewis to resume his career.

In a statement released yesterday, Brigham and Women's defended Mudge and his associates. Drs. Mark Creager and Peter Friedman of Brigham and Women's, and Dr. John Rutherford of Southwestern Medical Center in Dallas.

"We believe that when the facts in this case are fully reviewed in a court of law, it will be determined that the physicians acted in a responsible manner and in the best interests of Mr. Lewis," the statement said.

ATLANTA (AP) — NFL owners voted yesterday to allow the Houston Oilers to move to Nashville, Tenn.

"It passed," said Alex Spanos, owner of the San Diego Chargers, emerging from a 4 1/2-hour meeting. "Houston is moving to Tennessee."

Still uncertain was when the team will actually move to the Tennessee capital. The Oilers have a lease with the Astrodome through 1997.

Also, the deal is contingent on Nashville residents approving a May 7 referendum on the $292 million deal. Polls suggest overwhelming support for plans to bring the state its first major league franchise.

The Oilers would be the seventh NFL team to switch cities since 1982 — and the fourth in the past year.

Unlike the impassioned effort to keep the Browns from moving from Cleveland to Baltimore, a "Save The Oilers" campaign failed to generate much interest. The team has played to thousands of empty seats in recent seasons and a rally earlier this year attracted less than 50 people.

"I'd hardly call that an emotional outpouring," New York Giants co-owner Robert Tisch said before the vote.

In a memo to the 30 NFL teams, commissioner Paul Tagliabue said the Oilers met all nine of the criteria that govern relocation, including such factors as stadium adequacy and fan support. Oilers owner Bud Adams was rebuffed in his efforts to build a stadium to replace the 31-year-old Astrodome.

Your Horoscope
By Jeane Dixon

ARIES (March 21 – April 19) — Your upbeat attitude and comments persuade someone to reveal vital information. Work becomes play when you unleash your creativity. A co-worker may be attracted to you.

TAURUS (April 20 – May 20) — Doing too much for others could deplete your energy. Set aside some time to regroup. A project must be finished on time. Accept help from a colleague who has your best interests at heart.

GEMINI (May 21 – June 20) — The lines of communication will be humming today. Key people are receptive to your ideas. A new venture gets the green light. Romance may have to wait.

CANCER (June 21 – July 22) — Linking up with VIPs could bring financial rewards. Use gentle humor when voicing your views about a change. Others begin to see a work project or family problem in a different light. Welcome their insights.

LEO (July 23 – Aug. 22) — Giving credit where credit is due wins you an influential person's respect. A change of lifestyle brings both greater physical comfort and emotional security.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 – Sept. 22) — Influential friends give the seal of approval to a pet project. Your keen intuition helps you take swift action. Save time by shopping by phone. A secret admirer wants to be discovered.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 – Oct. 22) — Look forward to a period of great growth where career and business are concerned. New sources of capital make it possible for you to launch a project.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 – Nov. 21) — Seek quiet surroundings when tackling a complex project. Return phone calls and answer correspondence promptly. The company of old friends or neighbors holds special appeal tonight.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 – Dec. 21) — Your job or financial hopes may be slightly unrealistic. Improve your earning power by sharpening your skills. Your mate is your strongest ally during a family crisis. Show heartfelt appreciation.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 – Jan. 19) — Terrific timing puts you in good financial shape. Repay business favors as soon as possible. A lucky break will help you make a new beginning. Lasting ties are forged.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 – Feb. 18) — Work to make sense of a budget. A shopping expedition promises to be tempting. Leave your credit cards at home. Attending a local event puts you in touch with interesting new people. Extend an invitation.

PISCES (Feb. 19 – March 20) — A family member gives you a lucky break. A meeting of minds leads to a beneficial change of lifestyle. Curb spending by postponing non-essential purchases. Romance begins to intensify. Avoid making too many promises.

My mom can't afford health insurance for us.

She took my little sister to a specialist to look at her big toe.

He didn't do much except look at her toe and talk to my mom. He charged my mom $135. She cried in the waiting room when she saw the bill.

I told her he was a specialist in toes and in installing pure white marble floors in his wife's kitchen.

Hoffman does it all for UMass

By Justin C. Smith
Collegian Staff

As a four year starter for the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team, Buddy Hoffman has done all that was asked of him over the course of his tenure as a Minuteman.

The Long Beach, N.Y. native came to UMass as an attackman, but with a need in the midfield and such scorers as Mark Millon, Wes Depp and Jeremy Murphy up front, he was repositioned as an offensive midfielder. It was a change Hoffman accepted in order to play.

"My first two years as a midfielder were tough. My freshman year I came in and they said they needed midfielders, so I jumped at the opportunity just to get on the field. I didn't know it would take me three years in," Hoffman said of his transition.

"I wasn't the prime time player. I was a role player, but I did my job moving the ball up and down the field. Whatever the team needed I would have done," he said.

His did his job as midfielder very well and even continued to put numbers on the score sheet. During his first three seasons at UMass he compiled 34 goals and 22 assists for 56 points. This year however his team needed him to do something more on the offensive end and UMass head coach Greg Cannella asked him to become a crease player for the Minutemen. It is a match that Cannella feels fits nicely.

"I think he fits into the crease position very well. He's a guy who's in the post calling out plays. He's always been a great shooter," Cannella said. "In high school he was an attackman and we knew that coming into this year. We run a lot of things through the crease to set him up."

Hoffman's offensive prowess has shown through this season as the crease man for UMass as he has notched a career single season high of 24 goals to go along with nine assists for 33 points. That plus his playing different positions over his career at UMass has made him an invaluable part of this Minutemen team.

"He's got a lot of experience, he's been a starter since his freshman year and he brings a lot of that to us. He knows what to expect and he tells the younger guys what to expect," Cannella commented. "For me as a coach you need people like Buddy, on and off the field he has done a great job. It's his leadership and he is a very likable person.

"When you can be that kind of person and work hard on the field people are going to follow you and you can be a successful leader," he said.

The two time captain of the Minutemen is a player who leads with his actions on the field. Such was the case when UMass was up against the rival Syracuse Orangemen this past weekend.

"Beating Syracuse would be like a lifelong dream," Hoffman said before last Sunday's 10-9 overtime loss in the Carrier Dome. "The mystique of Syracuse is well known around the world. It would be the most unbelievable thing to beat them."

Even though he and his mates came out on the losing end of the battle, when it came to crunch time, it was Hoffman who stepped up and led UMass' charge to finally knock off Syracuse for the first time in 15 years.

With the game tied at six late in the third period, the tri- captain was a part of the next three goals, scoring one himself while setting up two others as UMass took a 9-6 lead early in the fourth quarter. Hoffman may not have lived his dream but did all that he could to make it become a reality.

"His leadership on the field sets the tone for the other guys," Cannella said.

Tony Barbee named to St. John's coaching staff

By Justin C. Smith
Collegian Staff

Tony Barbee, former member of the Massachusetts Minutemen, was hired yesterday as an assistant coach at St. John's University. New head coach Fran Fraschilla, who replaced Brian Mahoney earlier this month chose Barbee along with Brian Cousins and Ron Rutledge to comprise his initial coaching staff with the Red Storm.

Cousins was an assistant under Fraschilla at Manhattan the past three seasons and Rutledge has been an assistant with St. John's since 1978 under both Lou Carnesecca and Mahoney.

"I am very pleased that these three outstanding individuals were available to become part of my staff," Fraschilla said. "All three men have excellent reputations in the collegiate basketball community, and I am looking forward to working with them."

Barbee was a member of the first Minuteman team to win the Atlantic 10 tournament title, as well as reach the sweet sixteen in 1992. He graduated from UMass in 1993 and currently stands fourth on the all time Minutemen scoring charts with 1,643 points.

The Indianapolis native spent two seasons playing basketball in Europe after his graduation from the University before returning to the Amherst area to serve as a graduate assistant coach at UMass last season. Also during the 1995- 96 Minutemen campaign he was a color analyst for WHMP radio which broadcasts each UMass men's basketball game.

"Tony brings to us a wealth of experience. He does a great job working with the young people both on and off of the court."
-Fran Fraschilla

Barbee's knowledge of the game and overall personality with younger players was a major factor in Fraschilla's decision to hire the former Minutemen.

"Tony brings to us a wealth of experience," Fraschilla said of Barbee. "He does a great job working with the young people both on and off of the court."

Schott at it again; Expos excelling; Mo taking charge

As if Marge Schott hasn't already done enough to disgrace baseball...

Media sources say that the embattled Cincinnati Reds owner sent a bouquet of flowers to umpire John McSherry's funeral. That's good, right? Well sure, if the bouquet hadn't been sent to her and her female associates that morning to celebrate the beginning of the baseball season. She thought it would be environmentally important to use the flowers again rather than buy a new bouquet to honor the fallen umpire. How inconsiderate can a human being get? Recycling my ass.

You think Albert Belle's antics are bad for baseball? Schott has too often gone over the top in her actions as the owner of a major league baseball team, and her antics need to be dealt with soon. Her stupidity is just as bad, if not worse, than Belle flinging off the handle every now and then. There are more words for this woman that I can't use in the paper, but I would love to.

• The Montreal Expos are still in first place in the National League East — as a matter of fact they have the best record in the majors — and they are doing it the right way. They have one of the lowest payrolls in baseball, but they're getting solid play across the board, and they have one of the best managers in the major leagues right now. Felipe Alou has done a masterful job thus far meshing average players into a cohesive team that understands how to win ball games.

David Segui (.393), Mike Lansing (.388) and Mark Grudzielanek (.361) are all in the top 10 in NL batting average while Henry Rodriguez leads the league with 27 RBI. Rodriguez has also blasted nine home runs, powering the Expos to a 17-8 start.

Alou's performance in the dugout may just be keeping his son in an Expos uniform. Moises Alou has been rumored to be headed for Boston sometime this season, but Montreal management would have to be crazy to let their star player go if they continue to play play-off level baseball.

• Brain Busters: 1. What Red Sox pinch-hitter smacked a home run to center field to tie game six of the 1975 World Series and set the stage for Carlton Fisk's historic blast? 2. Terriers pounded by Minutewomen

Freshman Laura Korutz scored three goals yesterday as the UMass women's lacrosse team pummelled Boston University 14-3, to raise the teams record to 4-9.

By Justin C. Smith
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team's plan was to play their game against Boston University. That plan included pin point passing and tenacious defense which is exactly what the Terriers had to confront yesterday as the Minutewomen (4-9) rolled in a 14-3 pounding of BU (4-10) at Totman Field.

We were hoping to come out and play our game today and we did which was nice," UMass coach Francesca McClellan said. "We were able to try some things that we had been intimidated to try against some of the better teams.

Defender Diane MacNeil agreed with her coach.

"We decided to play our game today, that's passing the ball and not running it," the senior co-captain added. "Sometimes we get caught running it. [On defense] we're supposed to swarm on the eight [yard-line]. Coach tells us that is one of our defensive goals and to help each other. It was really team play."

UMass sprinted out to a quick two goal lead thanks to two nifty helpers by junior Michelle Warrington. The first was a perfect lead to Laura Korutz who scored past BU netminder Madeera Kathpal for the early 1-0 lead. Stephanie Walsh was the recipient of the second Warrington feed.

"Intensity, just being ready for the game, and having a good attitude to get everybody fired up," Warrington said of her early offensive outburst. "It feels good to me having assists rather than goals. I like when we work as a team like that."

Four more Minutewomen goals followed before the Terriers even got on the board and UMass went to the half leading 8-1. Korutz notched a hat trick on the day to lead to the Minutewomen attack, while Warrington had a goal and set up four others.

Other major contributors to the Minutewomen attack were Jen Bowen, Elaine Burke and Melissa Anderson who added two goals apiece.

MacNeil had an outstanding day on both ends of the field and put the whole package together to notch her second goal of the year early in the second half. She knocked the ball away from a BU player at midfield, scooped it up and ran the length of the field and potted it in the back of the Terrier cage, extending the UMass lead to nine.

In net, Melissa Borondinsky was stellar for the Minutewomen, turning aside all but one shot in the first half, including a free possession shot on goal by Terrier midfielder Christine Sison.

"Melissa steps out into the crease very well," MacNeil said of the freshman netminder. "She's very aggressive coming out of the net."

"She's outstanding, she's an awesome goalie," Warrington said. "She hustles to the ball and we need that. We need that speed as a goalie and she fights. If the other team's on her, she'll fight until she gets that ball back."

Borondinsky was not scored upon until there was only 6:51 left in the first half and with performances such as yesterday's, though only in her first year at UMass, her coach feels that she will continue to improve.

"She's a young goalie, she hasn't gotten as much playing time," McClellan said. "So we've been trying to get her some time now. I definitely think she is going to be very strong. It's just a matter of getting her head in it and getting some time."

UMass finishes out the season with senior day honoring MacNeil and Burke tomorrow at Totman field against Harvard. Face-off is scheduled for 4 p.m.

Men's tennis finishes season strong

By Michael J. Nam
Collegian Correspondent

The season ended on a high note for the Massachusetts men's tennis team this past weekend. The Minutemen posted a third overall finish at the New England Regional Tennis Tournament with 47 points, edged out of second by only one point by Central Connecticut who had 48. Providence College finished first overall.

UMass had finished fourth overall last season and was expected to be among the top three finishers this year.

"This is the best finish in the four years of this program," assistant Coach Doug Knuth said.

The Minutemen were inspired once again by their freshmen as Mike Skeels and Mark Huckins reached the finals of their No. 3 doubles bracket. Skeels did not play a great deal during the year, but his play demonstrated the depth of the young UMass tennis program. Freshman Jason Blind was unable to play due to a team infraction.

"We were missing one of our key players," Knuth said. "It was a testament of our team will that we did so well."

UMass men's tennis was reinstated only three years ago as the school began rebuilding its athletic departments. In that time span, the Minutemen reached a winning record for the first time in only four years of play. They finish the year at 14-6, the best record under head coach Judy Dixon.

"Being such a young team really emphasizes a new era in men's tennis and how far this program came in such a short time," Knuth said. "This is the first year above .500 we've had. 14-6 is a tremendous jump."

The winning record is one of several achievements the team reached this season. They had posted a fifth place finish in the Atlantic-10 tournament as well the third place New England Tournament finish. Much of this success has to be attributed to the graduating co-captains, Justin Lynn and Darren Tow.

Justin and Darren showed tremendous leadership and played a huge part in this great season," Knuth said. "It was difficult being the No. 1 and No. 2 singles players this year, but they were a great example for our younger guys."

The seniors were unable to play their freshman year since the program was not reinstated until their second year. Lynn and Tow were steady all throughout the year and Lynn even won a No. 1 singles match against tough opponent, Sharad Koali of Northeastern. That was the key win in an improbable comeback against a powerful team.

"He plays to win every day," Dixon said of Lynn. "He is intelligent, he plays with heart, and he makes the other guy beat him."

With young talent ready to take their place among tennis' elite, the seniors will be all the more appreciated for providing the example this year, the first recruiting season under Dixon, and all the following players will benefit in the budding program.

"Every year we've just been getting better steadily," Knuth said. "Bob Marcum and the athletic department are doing such a great job in helping us rebuild. We have a talented young base and a few recruits coming in next year."

The best season in Dixon's tenure finished strongly for the up-and-coming program.

"Harvard and Yale are dominant teams in the nation," Knuth said. "They are what you call great programs, ranked among the top twenty schools in the nation. With such a young base of talent here, we're on track to be a great program someday."

NATO to investigate slaying of Muslims

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Declaring it would not tolerate thugs blocking members of other ethnic groups from traveling freely, NATO announced on Wednesday a probe into this week's slaying of Muslims trying to exercise that right.

The NATO-led Bosnian force has tried to avoid police duty, but it has been forced to intervene because of ethnic violence as refugees try to return home to areas controlled by their enemies.

Maj. Gen. William L. Nash, commander of the U.S. troops based in northern Tuzla, urged police and other civilian authorities on all sides to prevent violence.

"Organizing demonstrations that provoke a violent response is an action which puts at risk many innocent civilians," he said Wednesday.

"Peace does not come on a platter," Nash said in a statement emphasizing that creating real security will require difficult compromises by everyone.

The presence of NATO troops, acting as crowd control or escorts for returning refugees, has defused potentially violent situations. Regardless, two Muslims trying to return homes were killed Monday near Doboj, in northeastern Bosnia.

Standardized ID survives challenge

WASHINGTON — The development of standardized, counterfeit-proof birth certificates, drivers licenses and other state-issued identity cards to combat illegal immigration survived a challenge Wednesday in the Senate.

The lawmakers rejected, 54-46, the "big government"/intrusiveness arguments of Sen. Spencer Abraham, R-Mich., in trying to eliminate from an immigration bill provisions for those new documents and pilot projects where employers could check job applicants' work eligibility.

"If this amendment is adopted, frankly, you have defanged the whole bill," said Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill. It would be akin, he said, to "trying to eat steak without teeth."

Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., said he hoped to complete action on the bill Thursday.

In action Wednesday, lawmakers also voted narrowly to overturn recently enacted limits on the rights of asylum seekers to enter the country.

Sen. Alan Simpson, R-Wyo., the immigration bill's chief author, said employers have been required since 1986 to hire only workers who are in the country legally.

The verification system, Simpson said, would ease that burden. Without it, he added, there is no real, effective way to weed out about half of the nation's illegal alien population — those who arrive legally and overstay their visas.

SATF proposal finally receives funding

By Jonathan Liberty
Collegian Staff

The Free Our Fee Coalition, in collaboration with Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Tom Robinson and Budget Director Joyce Hatch, agreed yesterday to give $113,000 of funding to year-one of the four-year Student Activities Trust Fund (SATF) proposal.

"It is phenomenal that the administration has finally agreed to fund year number one of the proposal," said Student Center for Education and Research Advocacy (SCERA) Student Coordinator Mike Hass. "The administration has shown that they are committed to students.

"Hopefully they will follow through with the next three years of the proposal."

About 30 students from the Free Our Fee Coalition went to Whitmore at 9 a.m. to deliver letters of rejection to Chancellor David K. Scott, Vice Chancellor of Administration and Finance Paul Page, and Robinson stating that Scott's $93,000 year-one SATF relief offer was unacceptable.

The $93,000 would relieve three out of the four non- advocacy positions which year-one of the proposal requests.

The coalition was informed Scott would be out of town until Friday. Speaker of the House of the Student Government Association (SGA) Dan Castellano presented the letter to Scott's secretary and expressed the coalition's urgency.

"We need to be dealt with today," he said. "The SGA will be doing their budget allocations tonight and the allocations are very dependent on the SATF relief."

The coalition met with Robinson in the hallway outside Scott's office. Castellano and Hass explained the rejection letter to Robinson.

"My point of view is that it would be very unwise to reject the $93,000," Robinson said. "This decision is going down a path which may be terribly unproductive. We've come along way.

"It is sensible to continue to work together; I am sure we can get everything done."

"What would be sensible is for the chancellor to accept our proposal," coalition member Tim Fisk said.

Hass said that the coalition was sick of being strung along by the administration.

"We have played by all of the rules," Hass said. "We can not be satisfied with a partial response."

Robinson has spoken with Hatch and Page about the possibility of transferring the four positions to state lines. The state would therefore have to pay for the fringe benefits of these positions, which is about one-third of the total cost, Robinson said.

Thus, within the first year of the proposal the University would relieve $85,000 from the SATF, while the state would relieve $28,000, he added.

"Based on the information that we have collected, I have no reason to believe that these positions can not be assigned to state lines," Robinson said.

Hass, Castellano and newly elected Student Trustee Sean Carter met with Robinson and Hatch to finalize the $113,000 decision after the meeting ended.

Castellano wrote a letter to Scott to inform him about the decision. The letter read, "Student leaders, Vice Chancellor Robinson and Joyce Hatch have arrived at a resolution for year-one of the SATF proposal. We have been advised by Robinson and Hatch to assume that $113,000 has been relieved from the SATF budget."

"Seventy-one thousand dollars will definitely be allocated at the SGA budget meeting tonight," Chair of the Ways and Means Committee of the SGA Jeff Coker said yesterday. "The remaining $42,000 will be allocated by the Ways and Means Committee and presented to the senate next week."

Maryland joins crusade against tobacco industry

BALTIMORE (AP) — Maryland became the eighth state Wednesday to sue the tobacco industry to recover the cost of treating Medicaid patients with smoking-related illnesses.

The tobacco companies "have knowingly peddled a killer product ... Now we will take them to a courthouse to seek justice for their deceitful conduct," Attorney General J. Joseph Curran Jr. said in announcing the $13 billion lawsuit.

The suit names 10 defendants, including Philip Morris Inc., R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., Lorillard Tobacco Co. and the American Tobacco Co.

Phillip Morris said it would "vigorously" defend against the lawsuit. R.J. Reynolds spokeswoman Peggy Carter said Maryland already receives compensation through cigarette taxes.

The state receives about $137 million a year in the excise tax, but pays $1.5 billion each year in tobacco-related costs, including medical treatment, sick leave and loss of worker productivity, Curran said.

Florida, Louisiana, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Mississippi, Texas and West Virginia all have lawsuits pending against the industry.

SGA passes '97 RSO budget in record time

By Michael Elliott
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association (SGA) Senate passed the student activities budget for fiscal year 1997 last night in what proved to be both a surprisingly short and controversial meeting.

Approximately $1.7 million was allocated to all Registered Student Organizations (RSOs), student businesses and agencies.

Brought before the Senate by the Ways and Means committee, over 1000 working hours was invested in the preparation of the final proposal, according to its Chair, Sen. Jeff Coker.

The meeting was highlighted by Michael Hass, student coordinator of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy, who announced that Chancellor David K. Scott had agreed to provide the full $113,000 of Student Activities Trust Fund relief which had been requested by the Free our Fee Coalition.

"This is what it all came down to," Hass said as he pointed to the hundreds of RSO representatives who were present at the meeting.

RYAN TIEZZI / COLLEGIAN

Sen. Jeff Coker, chair of the SGA Ways and Means Committee, presents the recommended student activities budget before the Senate, as Speaker Dan Castellano looks on.

Because Scott waited until today to notify the SGA of his intentions, Coker said the Committee had only factored in $71,000 of the relief anticipated for next year for this meeting, based on earlier comments the Chancellor had made.

These additional resources were used most notably to restore the budgets of the Distinguished Visitor's Program, the Student Union Art Gallery and University Productions and Concerts.

Traditionally, the Senate budget meeting lasts into the morning, voting on a line by line basis for each student group, rather than as a whole package.

However, Senate Speaker Dan Castellano decided that the process used in years past was ineffective and unfair. Therefore, he allowed the budget to come up for a vote as a special order, meaning that it could not be amended unless it was defeated.

The budget passed by a vote of 38-11, with two abstentions.

"The vote reflects the quality of the budget," said committee member Sen. Dan Kittredge.

However, several Senators, including the entire ALANA caucus, and RSO representatives, took exception to the move. They demanded that the entire Senate body hear the concerns of each group whose funding was on the table, before a informed vote could be completed.

"We're basing the whole life of the campus on one vote, and I think that is unfair," Sen. Sonny Rivas said. "We need to know what's going on."

Castellano responded to this criticism by citing the SGA by-laws, which states that any special order must first fail by a Senate vote before it can be amended.

"We're not going to allow the kind of cuts that have happened on the Senate floor in the past," Castellano said. Last year, the UPC budget was cut in a matter of minutes, playing a part in this years Spring Concert cancellation.

Voting on the budget in its entirety, he said, protected the integrity of the overall document from haphazard and misguided alterations, which many alleged the UPC cut to be.

Castellano felt that it was important to recognize the work of the Ways and Means committee, and considered the legitimacy of their proposal before changes were made.

"The Senate has a intense respect of the Ways and Means Committee, and respects the hard work that they have done," Castellano said.

Nevertheless, many student and SGA representatives felt short-changed when the meeting came to a abrupt end.

"Basically, the Senate just said they would not listen," Sen. Laura Lopez said. "They did not allow RSOs to give their voice in front of the Senate."

"I wanted the groups who felt they were not treated right to be given a chance to speak," said Sen. Luis Quirama, a member of the Ways and Means committee and chair of the ALANA caucus. "It allows more people to be involved in the process."

Coker responded by saying that student groups had their chance to articulate their concerns to the Senate during the April Ways and Means budget appeal hearing, which were open to any organization receiving SGA funds.

"Groups should be here tonight to defend their budget, not to get themselves raises," Coker said. "The line by line approach comes from the self interests of groups to increase their budgets at the expense of other groups."

"Everyone had the utmost concern for what was right for these groups," added Sen. Catherine Rowley, a committee member. "Each person put aside their own personal opinions."

Concern was also raised by those who protested the distribution of SATF relief funds for FY97. Of the 85 organizations receiving funds this year, only 25 saw their budgets increased after Scott approved SATF relief.

Coker pointed out that a additional $50,0000 in funds will be allocated in the coming weeks, complementing the $27,500 in reserves which will be made available campus- wide in the fall through the SGA Finance Committee.

Four-year probe of Hooters ends; EEOC gives up

By Lisa Holewa
Associated Press

TAMPA, Fla. — The government has quietly ended its four-year sexual discrimination probe of Hooters, coming to the same conclusion as its sometimes snickering critics: We have better things to do.

The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission had demanded a $22 million fine from the 170-restaurant chain after looking into complaints by four Chicago men who said they were denied the chance to serve suds alongside buxom young waitresses.

The EEOC also wanted Hooters to hire male waiters, compensate any men it had turned down for jobs, and set up a scholarship fund to enhance employment opportunities for men.

Ridiculous, said Rep. Harris Fawell, R-Ill., who had questioned the investigation, given the agency's limited financial resources and heavy caseload.

The EEOC wouldn't say how much it cost to conduct the investigation.

Columnists had a field day as Hooters fought both the EEOC and a private lawsuit filed by the men, asserting a constitutional right to have only females squeeze into its skimpy orange shorts and tight white shirts.

The chain even put out a mocking ad campaign that featured a burly, mustachioed man — Vince Gigliotti, who manages a Hooters in Tampa — wearing a blonde wig, short shorts, stuffed shirt and bedroom eyes.

The caption: "Come on, Washington. Get a grip."

The issue was a serious one, according to a March 6 letter from EEOC Chairman Gilbert F. Casellas to Fawell, chairman of a House subcommittee on employment. But, Casellas acknowledged, the agency did have more important matters to concentrate on.

"Denying any American a job simply because of his or her sex is a serious issue which should be taken seriously," Casellas wrote. "The particular factual issues raised by Hooters do not transform this into a frivolous case or a subject for locker room humor." But, Casellas added, since a private class-action lawsuit is pending, "it is wiser for the EEOC to devote its scarce litigation resources to other cases."

The reaction at the Tampa Hooters was mixed on Wednesday. Gigliotti said his restaurant just wouldn't have been the same with men wearing the trademark uniforms. "Women don't look at guys the same way men look at women," he said.

But don't tell that to Mary Pinion, a mortgage broker across the room, having lunch with five of her female mortgage processors. "Well, exactly how does he look at women?" Pinion asked. "Does he mean we don't lust after men the same way men lust after women? We're sure do, if they're lustable."

Dorothy Frook, having lunch with her husband and his friend, nodded toward her waitress' tight orange shorts and said, "I'd like to see a guy in those."

But Frook's lunch partner Charles Combs, who works down the street and comes in three times a week, said he'd stop if men were hired.

"The girls know how to take your order just right and they talk to you just right," he said. "No guy can be friendly to me and make me want to come back."

Students tackle UM math challenge

By Daniel Sullivan
Collegian Staff

A well-sharpened number two pencil, thinking quickly and the ability to laugh in the face of the math demons are some of the tools needed to succeed in the latest University of Massachusetts-sponsored competition.

Results of the 11th annual Math Competition were announced Tuesday night by the math department. The competition was open to first year and sophomore students in all majors.

Brian Hanechak, a sophomore math and computer science student won first place in the competition. He was awarded $1,600 for his excellence by Electronical Data Systems.

"The questions were different than regular questions asked in class; they were unusual. One question was from a 19th century algebra book," Hanechak said.

The second place winner, first year computer science student Josephine Zhuang won $1,000 from United Technology. Sudheer Gaddam, a first year biology student was awarded $400 from the math department.

"This is the first year a biology major has been among the winners," retired math professor Henry Jacob said.

"The questions were difficult problems, beyond the ordinary course work," Jacob said. "No one has ever done all 10 problems correctly. A score of 70 percent is a good score."

The test was designed with a theoretical basis, but at the same time using applications, said Hanechak. The test relied partially on calculus, but focused on algebra, he added.

Tests were graded by a committee of math professors including Jacob, Eleanor Killam, and Haskill Cohen. Students could not use calculators.

"On this type of test, calculator use would be a hindrance," Jacob said.

Hanechak noted that his courses including three-dimensional space calculus, linear algebra and math modeling helped him do well. However, his third place in last year's examination showed that students could do well without taking high level math courses.

"The test was really different from class," Hanechak said. "It was designed to get people interested in math."

Math has always been an interest to Hanechak, but he said he was not always good at the subject. Grade school teachers cultivated his interest.

"I can understand how people have problems with math," he said. "I think that at the lower levels, math is taught to bore people. Students lose interest quickly. They should give it another chance."

As a math tutor, Hanechak thinks students should give math a second look. He suggests finding a good math teacher and dedicating time to the study.

"If students have trouble, they should go for help. At the beginning of the semester, math anxiety workshops are always offered," he said. "Also, if a student is having trouble, they should get help right away. There are drop in centers for all levels of math.

"Math tests are entirely cumulative, so if you wait too long, it is hard to catch up. If you need help, get some and make sure you understand it."

Countdown to the '96 Presidential Primaries

ELECTION '96

Editor's Note: As part of an effort to improve our coverage of the presidential primaries, the Collegian is running this feature everyday.

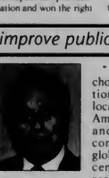
WASHINGTON (AP) — Breaking clear in a contest once crowded and tangled, Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole has secured the Republican presidential nomination and won the right to engage President Clinton in the fall.

Neither man at this point has a comprehensive platform. But what they do have, after Clinton's three years in the White House and Dole's 27 years in the Senate, are records. And since January they've answered questions on a variety of subjects put to them by The Associated Press.

What is the main step to improve public education?

Bill Clinton

"Greater involvement by parents in their children's education will strengthen our schools and our families. We should give parents the right to choose which public school their children attend. We should also remind parents that they are their children's first teachers. They must turn off the television set more often, see that the homework gets done, and visit their children's classroom."



Bob Dole

"I believe that school choice and returning education decisions back to the local level will reinvigorate America's education system, and prepare children to compete and excel in the global economy of the next century. The only way to restore accountability to our schools is by wresting control of education policy away from Washington bureaucrats and returning it to parents and local communities."

Death penalty attacked in trial

McVeigh defense calls the punishment unconstitutional

By Steven K. Paulson
Associated Press

DENVER — Defense lawyers in the Oklahoma City bombing case argued yesterday that the federal death penalty is unconstitutional because it is more likely to be meted out if murder victims are old, young or sick.

"It makes no sense because no person was more vulnerable than others," said Richard Burr, a lawyer for Timothy McVeigh. McVeigh and Terry Nichols could get the death penalty if convicted of murder in the 1995 bombing that killed 168 people.

Burr asked U.S. District Judge Richard Matsch to throw out the 1994 Federal Death Penalty Act because it makes it easier for prosecutors to seek the death penalty if the victims are old, young, infirm or otherwise vulnerable.

But Special U.S. Attorney Sean Connelly argued that the jury should be allowed to consider the health and age of the victim as an aggravating factor. "I don't need to remind you there were 19 babies and children in that building who could not be more vulnerable," Connelly said.

Under the law, the government has to prove at least one aggravating factor existed when the crime was committed in order to get the death penalty.

"If the death penalty is not appropriate to this case, it's hard to imagine a case where it would be," Connelly said. Matsch, who moved the bombing case here in February after ruling the defendants could not receive a fair trial in Oklahoma, didn't immediately rule.

Defense attorneys also said the federal law fails to meet criteria approved by the U.S. Supreme Court for a death penalty statute and does not establish an adequate procedure for courts to review death sentences.

In another development Wednesday, prosecutors filed a motion formally requesting closed-circuit television coverage of the trial so victims can watch proceedings from the federal courthouse in Oklahoma City. Matsch gave attorneys until June 24 to file briefs on that issue.

Peres on hand for Paris dedication

By Pierre-Yves Glass
Associated Press

PARIS — In a somber ceremony, Israeli Prime Minister Shimon Peres and the widow of Yitzhak Rabin dedicated a square Wednesday to the slain Israeli leader.

On a daylong visit to Paris, Peres and President Jacques Chirac also smoothed over differences caused by France's perceived pro-Arab rule during Israel's recent offensive in Lebanon. Outside UNESCO headquarters, the U.N. agency's chief Federico Mayor joined Peres, Leah Rabin, her daughter Dalia Pelossof and granddaughter Noa Ben-Arzi in dedicating the Square of Tolerance. Designed by Israeli artist Dani Karavan, the square was under construction when an Israeli opposed to Rabin's peacemaking with Palestinians assassinated him on Nov. 4.

"The intolerance that killed Rabin can never kill our determination," Peres said. "No force in the world can make us deviate from our resolute choice of peace and stability for our people, as well as for Arabs, Muslims and all other peoples." An olive tree symbolizing peace stands at the square's center before a stone wall engraved in 10 languages with the preamble to UNESCO's constitution: "Since wars begin in the minds of men, it is in the minds of men that the defenses of peace must be built." The idea of creating the square at the U.N. Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization was spawned by the Israeli-Palestinian peace accords.

"May this square become the symbol of a great man who fell on the altar of intolerance," Mrs. Rabin said at the ceremony, attended by hundreds of dignitaries and diplomats.

Later, Peres had lunch with the French president, then met briefly with U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali, who was staying at a Paris hotel.

"In the end, there is no contradiction between French policy and Israeli policy," Peres said after meeting Chirac. Peres said both countries "want Lebanon to recover its independence and territorial integrity."

Prior to Israel's cease-fire agreement with guerrillas fighting the Israeli occupation of south Lebanon, both France and the United States had competing proposals on the table.

U.S. officials expressed irritation with the French initiative. The French privately criticized the U.S. plan as being too pro-Israeli.

The final agreement incorporated the main points of the French proposal when it became apparent that Lebanon, Syria and Hezbollah guerrillas would not only accept the French plan setting up an international group to monitor the cease-fire.

Peres said he opposed any multinational force to police the cease-fire. "I believe an accord is more important than a force." He said Israel wouldn't pay compensation to Lebanon for damages caused by the latest Israeli offensive, which killed 162 people, mostly Lebanese civilians, and reduced many villages to rubble. Lebanon is considering taking Israel to the International Court of Justice to seek war reparations.

Shear misery

"I would like a trim," I said as I looked up at the hairdresser.

"Do you want it short?" she asked.

"I didn't say that."

I ain't as dumb as I look. I know when you tell a hairdresser short, they begin to sharpen their hedge clipper blades while examining your head to see what they can turn it into.

"Do you want a Caesar?" she asked me.

A Caesar? What the hell is a Caesar, I though to myself? When in doubt, I thought, make 'em laugh.

"No, I don't want a salad, I just want a friggin' haircut."

The hairdresser, standing in front of me with her back to the mirror, laughed out loud. Christ, I laughed, I thought it was kinda' funny. You know, Caesar Salad ... the salad ... and a Caesar haircut .

Well, we thought it was funny.

So as I was still chuckling to myself at my own joke, and still not knowing what in the name of all that's holy a Caesar is, I looked up at her as she began to snip away at my hair. I watched her and I didn't think much of it. I was trying to stay still, keeping my head up straight. After all, I usually try to avoid seeing the hairdresser turn into a drill sergeant by commanding the proper head movement.

What seemed like 30 seconds later, Edward Scissorhands .. oops .. I mean the hairdresser stopped slashing at my head of hair. She stepped back to look at what she had created and her head slowly swayed from one side of my head to the other. As she moved aside to let me see what she had done, a smile crept across her face.

"Would you like it any shorter?" the hairdresser asked as my face came into full view in the mirror.

My head snapped back. I stared into the mirror. I then looked on my barber bib, which was covered with hair. As I stared, I could see the gleaming shine off the hairdresser's teethy smile. She was pleased. Her masterpiece was fulfilled. She had probably done this type of haircut a few times before me that same day.

Another George Clooney wanna-be haircut.

I think I began to shout out vulgarities in a fit of rage, but nothing surfaced to my vocal chords. So, as dead air spewed from the bowels of my trachea while my eyes were fixated on my head in the mirror, she jumped back in front of me to finish clipping and shaving.

When her hands got sore, and she could not bear to cut another strand of my hair, she slumbered back. Even more was cut. By this time, my mouth muscles were flexed in the form of a smile. I got up, received change for my 20 dollar bill, gave her a tip and walked out. The smile still stained on my face, I got into my '81 Olds. As I went to reverse it out of the parking space, I looked in the rear view mirror.

The smile still on my face from the Caesar joke came off my face as fast as all my hair did. As fast as both my smile and hair came off, I made a mad dash for my baseball hat. After I put it on, I realized it served as a tranquilizer. It put everything into proper perspective. It changed my mind. I wasn't going to go back into the hairdresser's to demand that I cut her hair, and see how she liked it.

I came to the conclusion that it was just a haircut. It will grow back, I thought. A baseball hat can cover it up, I said to myself. It could be worse. Yeah, it could be worse, I convinced myself.

And then, I subjected myself to the rigors of George Clooney-hazing. That's the one reason I am not fond of my hairstyle right now. I actually enjoy having my hair short, and personally don't think it looks too bad. But the fact that everyone thinks I'm trying to look like George Clooney makes me want to give that hairdresser a Jennifer Aniston and see how she handles the abuse.

Hell, I'd like to look like George Clooney, but his hair on my head just doesn't cut it. I know that. I was just a victim of a hairdresser whose top request, at this present time, is the same haircut as the "ER" heartthrub. Now, I look back and think, thank God I got this haircut in 1996 instead of 1976.

Because then she would've given me the Telly Savalas.

The retro king

There was a time when I tried to be everything my Dad wasn't. It wasn't because I hated the guy, but rather because I thought his tastes were stupid. Now I feel like I'm becoming everything he is, and I'm dreading the fact that I'm even writing this. If he reads this, he's going to come up to me trying to be Bruce Lee by slapping me on the head and saying gleefully, "I tol' you so, you stupid kid."

First and foremost, I'm getting into '70s music and I can't explain why. My Dad's vinyl of Saturday Night Fever was once the target of all my mockeries. Now, I enshrine that brilliant soundtrack. On a sidenote, can anyone explain to me what a 44-year-old Chinese guy from China is doing with this album anyway? He even has the movie on videotape. He even named himself after the guy in the movie, Tony Manero. Yes, my Dad calls himself Tony. His friends at work and at the bar call him Tony. When he sends me packages, he writes Tony on the return address. There was a time in my Dad's life when he wanted to be Tony from Saturday Night Fever — and now I do too.

I'm getting into '70s music and I can't explain why. My Dad's vinyl of Saturday Night Fever was once the target of all my mockeries. Now, I enshrine that brilliant soundtrack.

David Chan

So I'm getting into Tony's '70s collection of Bee Gees, Simon & Garfunkel, Tom Jones and any others with hairstyles that could eclipse the sun. I'm also getting into his classical stuff, like Zamfir, the guy who plays a flute like he's blowing across the tops of beer bottles. That's some relaxing stuff.

I've even found myself watching movies and shows that Tony would watch. Like the Discovery Channel and PBS. He could watch a two hour documentary on the mating rituals of cows and still go out and tell people at the bar about it.

Another thing is Tony's got a really cool collection of videos from the '70s. He's got all the James Bond movies, the Godfather series, Bruce Lee movies and even Grease. Tony even has his own little bar in his living room so he can throw some really hip parties.

Speaking of bars, Tony is a bartender. He's actually one of three guys who own a Chinese restaurant — real original for someone like him. Tony is in charge of the lounge, which is fairly big. For your reference, it's the same size as The Pub. After years of thinking how boring it must be working as a bartender, it is now my dream occupation. I am going to get my bartending certificate this summer and join the ranks of Woody Harrelson and of course, Tony. I don't know if I would want to be his sidekick at his bar because he'll always use me as the centerpiece of his jokes, and I'll never make tips.

Being a bartender has made life pretty grand for Tony. He brings home cases of Sam Adams as well as bottles of Godiva liqueur for less than wholesale price. He's got connections with lawyers, private investigators, mechanics, fishermen, accountants and bookies. Tony hasn't paid a speeding ticket in years... I think. If I was hooked up with all these perks, I'd leave school and declare myself eligible for the bartender's lottery draft.

My crude habits have been recruited from some of Tony's. I have instinctly fallen into the act of scratching my ass in the morning when I walk to the showers. When I laugh, I sound just like him — a hyena. I've even come close a few times to doing a snot shot while walking down the street. I think I'll spare you the rest of my list.

Besides listening to Tony's music, watching his programming and aspiring to master his trade, I've even considered putting on his old clothes. I could look just like all the people who are trying to bring back the retro style. The only difference is, Tony's threads are for real, and I don't have to pay $50 for a skin-tight, orange-colored paisley shirt with collars stretching across my shoulders. He probably only paid $5 for the shirts he wore when he used to go nuts on dance floors lit with more colors than Skittles. Fitting into his bell bottoms might be a little difficult, but I'm sure that I'll adjust to the bun-huggers after breaking out into a couple of splits with them on. Knowing Tony, I'll probably have to trade him my old Adidas jump suit and Members Only jacket for his polyesters.

The truth about the U.S. and Israel

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The 37th annual American Israel Public Affairs Committee (AIPAC) Policy Conference convened here in the nation's capital, and an enthusiastic delegation of 43 students from the University of Massachusetts joined thousands of other students and professionals to show support for Israel and the peace process that is well underway.

Also in attendance and committed to the objectives set forth at the conference, which lasted from April 28 through April 30, were throngs of high-ranking American and Israeli politicians in support of both The Jewish State and the comparably tiny Middle Eastern country's embattled constituency.

"If the Jewish people have endured centuries of exile, persecution, the ultimate evil of the Holocaust, flourishing against all the odds, surely— surely— together they can throw back their shoulders and raise their heads and say, after all this, Hezbullah and Hamas will not succeed where others have failed," President Bill Clinton said in his address this past Sunday night.

President Clinton and the support, credence, decency and respect he provides and offers to the Jewish nation is absolutely unprecedented and ahistorical.

Without question. Hands down.

In this vein, he defies nearly every aspect of modern and ancient history, truly distinguishing himself by stepping forward and allowing for increased security and confidence within Israel.

Never before have Jews had— or been allowed— as much input and access pertaining to such formative and authoritative circles, all of which serves as a most worthwhile investment in the Jewish future.

Never again will Jews subject ourselves to the highly- organized, methodical and systematic wrath and destruction of the masses, as the historical text of Nazi Germany's World War II atrocities will attest and indicate.

And in the United States of America, where garnering support and solidarity from the government is democratically sanctioned and encouraged, Jews will — and have — grasped and seized the opportunity to make the most out of this amazing chance.

"The profound partnership between the United States and Israel is based on the dual assumption that we must take the initiative for peace — and at the same time defend it from those who seek to destroy it," said Israeli Prime Minister Shimon Peres, whose royal blue tie split his white shirt, in his address shortly before Clinton began his address.

The America-Israel partnership first broke ground in May of 1948, within years after World War II. U.S. President Harry Truman was the first world leader to recognize The Jewish State's existence a mere 11 minutes after David Ben- Gurion, Israel's first prime minister, announced the establishment.

Since then, the America-Israel friendship has turned into a tightly-knit relationship which is so valued and respected, as it calls out to and attracts pivotal leaders from around the world.

The esteemed attendees, leaders from countries around the world, at former Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin's funeral in Jerusalem in November 1995 attest to this undisputed fact.

Likewise, let us recall the U.S.-organized and sponsored anti-terrorism summit in Egypt in March of 1996. Honorable and mainstream worldwide leaders ventured to Sharm el- Sheikh where they resoundingly committed to partake in the condemnation of terrorism.

Furthermore, on a national scale within the United States, the America-Israel bond attracted many powerplayers to this year's AIPAC conference.

"Free peoples must remain eternally vigilant, because even in the best of times there are despots around the corner," said Dick Armey, House Majority Leader and Republican from Texas, in his address on Monday. "In a world where danger will always lurk, we must remain loyal to our friends who cherish and defend freedom, and we must remain stronger than our enemies who might menace it. The United States has and will continue to have no more loyal friend in this respect than Israel."

Secretary of State Warren Christopher, who recently returned from shuttle diplomacy missions between Jerusalem and Damascus, Syria, addressed the conference as it came to a close on Tuesday, after having previously orchestrated the cease-fire between Israel and the Hezbollah terrorists.

"The enemies of peace can be defeated," said Christopher, who seemed to experience difficulty keeping his eyes open after his valiant effort, which entailed more than 50-straight hours of talks in the Middle East. "Peace with security can be achieved.

"The foundation for progress is the U.S.-Israeli relationship, and of course, that's what this group, this meeting, is all about. The strength of our ties and of America's unwavering commitment to Israel's security must always remain the first principle of successful Middle East peacemaking."

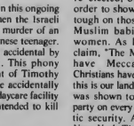
Continuing conflict

A holocaust is occurring in Lebanon and like Hitler, Prime Minister Peres is ordering the massacre of innocent civilians. World leaders seem to be more distraught by the oncoming massacre of mad cows in England than the present butchering of babies (a four-day-old infant included) and women.

The latest turbulence in this ongoing carnage commenced when the Israeli government ordered the murder of an innocent, unarmed Lebanese teenager. The murder was termed accidental by the Israeli government. This phony excuse is the equivalent of Timothy McVeigh proclaiming he accidentally murdered infants in the daycare facility of Oklahoma; he only intended to kill Muslim babies and women. As Israelis claim, "The Muslims have Mecca, the Christians have Rome, this is our land." In recent polls, Peres was shown to be leading the Labor party on every issue except for domestic security. As reiterated from the New York Times, Mr. Peres is fully knowledgeable that Hezbollah lacks "anti-human missiles," and thus he cowardly attacked this group. This is the same Israeli government, supposedly an ally of the United States, that organized and executed the espionage of United States Defense contractors.



What is largely unknown to the American public is that 45 percent of Lebanese civilians are indeed Catholic. Despite being a country in which Muslims are the majority, the Catholics and Muslims maintain equal authority in the Lebanese government. The corpses of the victims were charred to such a great extent that both Catholics and Muslims had to allocate common graves and attend common funeral services. A good number of Lebanese Catholics, alongside their Muslim brothers and sisters, fully back Lebanon's biggest charity group, Hezbollah. Both Catholics and Muslims are human targets for Mr. Peres's reelection campaign. NO Hezbollah members have lost their lives in this series of attacks.

Mr. Peres said of the latest attack, "I am not angry. I am disappointed." This statement is reminiscent of Hitler was not angry at his faction's loss in World War II — it was disappointment that led him to suicide. For some reason, by proclaiming themselves as "God's chosen people," evil terrorists are taking innocent lives.

Mr. Dole, Mr. Clinton and Mr. Peres, my message to you is to forget about your election campaigns and instead worry about God's opinion of you on Judgment Day — stop this genocidal annihilation.

A 7-year-old Lebanese boy who had been severely burned by Israeli missiles was in the hospital, asking the Red Cross nurse for his mother. Unknown to him was that as a result of this holocaust, he had now entered a stage of life known as orphanage. My dear brother, do not worry — this was the work of "God's chosen people," and what better cause is there to become an orphan? And "God's chosen people," my cherished brother, are allies of the great United States of America. Such relief.

Thespians take their acts to the Web

Shakespeare said "all the world's a stage," so it is no surprise that there are web pages dedicated to the theatre.

The Dramatic Exchange at http://www.dramex.org

The Dramatic Exchange is a site dedicated to helping playwrights publish and distribute plays. Anyone can submit a play to this site.

The site is free, and there are no royalty fees to read the plays. However, terms of use of the plays are up to the authors.

The page is easy to browse because the plays are divided into various genres and categories. The site also includes brief summaries of all the plays.

The site has no graphics, so it works well with any browser.

Broadway at http://emall.com/exploreNY/ Broadway/bway1.html

If you are headed to New York City, check this page out because it lists every play on Broadway.

The list includes a synopsis of each play, and the address of the theatre's box office.

In addition to providing information on plays, it includes a link to a tourist information page about New York City.

The page is not rich in graphics, so it is compatible with any browser including lynx.

Home Page of Theatre at http:// www.cs.fsu. edu/projects /group4/theatre.html

This page is a comprehensive list of about 50 theatre sites on-line.

Although the site provides a long list, it lacks description of the sites, and there is no structure.

The page was supposedly designed for the Mosaic browser, but because it lacks lots of graphics, it will run on lynx too.

Playwrights take works to the stage with high hopes

By Seema Gangatirkar
Collegian Staff

In the cutthroat world of theater, it's a rare opportunity for undergraduate student playwrights to have their works performed on stage — two University of Massachusetts students defied those daunting odds.

Ariella Papa

In December, Ariella Papa submitted her script, Strufoli, to be considered for the UMass theater festival. In February, the senior communications major discovered that her play was one of seven picked from a pool of over 40 submitted scripts.

Papa said that she had originally written Strufoli as a screenplay for a screenwriting class, but since it took place in one setting, it was good for a one-act play. She heard about the contest in class, and submitted her script for consideration.

Papa said that she had an idea about the story, a dramatic comedy, for a while and wrote it in parts.

Strufoli is an Italian Christmas dessert. Papa said that the story was about a mother and her three daughters. A conflict arises when, for various reasons, the daughters can't help the mother make the dessert. Papa described her play as "very Italian."

Papa said that she wasn't involved in the direction of the play or in picking the cast, and hasn't seen the finished product yet.

"I'm excited to see how my play is interpreted," she said. "I'm really looking forward to it." She said it would be strange to hear "the lines I wrote being said."

Despite the fact that Papa wasn't directly involved in the play production, she said that the cast had readings so she could see "what worked and what didn't."

The 30-minute play did have to be adapted in some ways for the stage. Papa mentioned there was a lot of food involved in her original play, a feature changed for the production.

The original script also called for pets to run around, an inclusion which was also rearranged. Despite these changes, Papa said that the cast "was really good about keeping the play mine."

She also said that it would be interesting to see what the director's vision of the play would be, as "I've had an impression of what it looks like in my head."

She added that she was really excited and honored to have her play included in the festival.

Donald Marshall

Donald Marshall, a senior psychology major, has been very involved in theater over the past few years. Most recently he appeared in Vinegar Tom as one of the singers. Two of his plays were also selected to be part of the festival.

Originally, only A Fugue in Blue Minor was going to be produced, but when the festival was expanded to seven plays, Marshall's second script, The Suitor and the Matchmaker was accepted, making him the only playwright in the festival with two plays.

The Suitor and the Matchmaker is about male friendship. Marshall says the play is about two men who have been friends since elementary school. The dynamics of the duo change when one man "comes out,"

Looking at the backbone of a festival

By Seema Gangatirkar
Collegian Staff

As actors reap glory and applause onstage, an audience rarely thinks about the people working tirelessly in the background to make the play a reality.

Kelli Clark

Kelli Clark, an M.F.A. candidate in the University of Massachusetts Department of Theater, came up with idea of featuring student playwrights in a festival.

She said, "There is no venue for student playwrights and it's rewarding to have your work performed. You don't know what you have until you see it."

Clark had been thinking about a festival of this sort for almost three years, but began actively developing the idea about a year ago.

"I've been wanting to do this since I got here," she said. Last spring, she presented her proposal to the Season's Selection Committee and her idea was accepted.

After getting her project approved, it was Clark's job to make sure to get all the right people for the jobs and to keep the lines of communication open, as well as addressing any possible concerns that came up.

She mentioned there were three dramaturgs involved who picked the plays out of the 45 submitted scripts, and who also facilitated communication between the directors and the playwrights.

Clark marveled at the response and the quality of the work that was being done.

"This is an exciting process," she said. "We're working on seven plays all of the time. It's such a treat for me because the plays are wonderful."

According to Clark, there are a total of 28 actors, seven directors and nine stage managers involved in the production, along with countless set and costume designers.

The plays are run on two different sets and the audience will be seated on a "riser-configuration" on the Rand Theater stage.

"Being in the Rand allows for more than the Curtain Theater," Clark said, explaining why the Rand was selected for the festival over the more intimate Curtain Theater. She also cited scheduling problems and the fact that there were so many people involved in a production this size, that the Curtain Theater would not be feasible.

"I'd love to see this become an annual event," Clark said. "This is a good chance for people to get together."

Dan Blumenthal

Dan Blumenthal has been directing on-and-off for several years. He directed two plays in last year's Evening of One Act plays, A Day For Surprises and The Loveliest Afternoon of the Year. According to Blumenthal, last year's event was the first occasion undergraduates were allowed to direct. So the senior theater and political sci-

The Cranberries create memories

THE CRANBERRIES
To The Faithful Departed
Island

While U2 is off making soundtrack albums and the Pogues are trying to pull themselves off the bar room floor after the loss of frontman Sean MacGowan, the Cranberries have returned to the studio from a two year hiatus to offer what is by far their best album to date.

To The Faithful Departed is a bold mixture of both their previous albums, Everybody Else is Doing It, So Why Can't We? and No Need To Argue. There is no doubt that sentimentality rules most of the lyrics on their third album, but it never crosses that fine line between sentimentality and and cheese. They accomplish this almost impossible feat by combining the edginess of their debut album and the sweetness of its follower.

Each song is in some way dedicated to people or memories that have ventured far beyond one's reach, but continues to make an impression.

"Salvation," a song that has received non-stop air time, pulsates and grooves to fast percussions and a screaming brass section giving it a ska like quality.

"The Rebels" is a song devoted to teenage angst of the '80s generation complete with Doc Martens and echoed in the words, "we were never young." "I Just Shot John Lennon" chronicles the day the ex-Beatle fell victim to violence with the same heartfelt feeling of the aforementioned song.

"Forever Yellow Skies" has lead singer Dolores O'Riordan biting out lyrics like an angry Celtic version of Pat Benatar, scorned and pissed yelling, "Forever! Forever! Holding you responsible, responsible, responsible!" "Free To Decide" carries the same intensity when asking people to take responsibility of their lives and actions.

Some of the more heartfelt songs like "Joe" and "Will You Remember?" have more personal meaning. The former is a sweet ballad to O'Riordan's memory of her grandfather, and the latter questions a person's ability to remember one's wedding after the years have chipped and peeled at one's memory.

Two of the songs were composed specifically for the Bosnian relief concert held in Italy "Bosnia" and "War Child." "War Child" is a cross between an Irish ballad and a '60s folk song. The music lulls you into a tranquil sea of despair leaving you with bittersweet satisfaction. Although some may find the lyrics a bit over-emotional, those familiar with Irish folk songs like "The Minstrel Boy" and "Danny Boy" can truly appreciate it.

O'Riordan has the type of voice that catches you off guard and slowly grows on you like a creeping ivy, and is ably backed up by the band's love of music and ability to make that clear. Yes, the album has a definite spiritual quality that is foreshadowed in the title, but just about every song carries the catchy quality of "Linger" and "Ode To My Family."

To The Faithful Departed is a quiet reflective album with sudden bursts of energy. Much like a person caught in a room on a rainy day, it has periods of restlessness and calm mediation, but keeps a listeners attention throughout. A

Crash keeps Matthews Band real

By Daniel E. Levenson
Collegian Staff

Late Monday night, fans lined up outside Strawberries awaiting the midnight release of the Dave Matthews Band's latest album. They weren't disappointed.

While the new Dave Matthews Band's album, Crash, offers no new surprises for long-time fans, it will certainly become a valued addition to any fan's musical library.

Crash is more reminiscent of their earlier release, Remember Two Things, than of their more recent hit, Under The Table and Dreaming.

Most of the songs on the new album are favorites that the band has been playing in concert for years.

Once again, guitarist Tim Reynolds, who appeared with Matthews at Amherst College during a recent tour, plays back-up guitar on the new album.

There are a lot of good songs on this album, among them a funkadelic musical masterpiece titled "So Much To Say." The vocals are vibrant, yet not overpowering, and the guitar is absolutely kickin'. It has as much potential to become as well-associated with the band as their mega-hits "Ants Marching" or "What Would You Say."

Another terrific tune to check out is "Say Goodbye," a quiet, moving song, which will be sure to delight listeners. Other future favorites include "#41," "Crash Into Me," "Two Step," "Too Much" and "Lie In Our Graves."

Some of the tracks border on slightly disappointing, but it's still nice to have them on disk, instead of just bootlegs. Unfortunately on certain songs, the vocals sound just like an instrument in the band, giving otherwise terrific pieces of music a somewhat wishy-washy sound.

With Crash they have taken a more mellow approach to their music. A toned down version of "Proudest Monkey" is decidedly more relaxed than what someone would hear at a live show. The version released on the album lacks the energy of even some of the bands quieter songs, such as "Satellite" or "One Sweet World."

For some reason they decided to a slightly faster version of "Tripping Billies," which appeared previously on Remember Two Things an album that did not receive as much publicity or distribution as Under the Table and Dreaming. This may be why they decided to rerelease "Tripping Billies" on Crash, which will reach a larger audience.

This is not the first time the band has re-released older tracks. "Ants Marching" and "Satellite" from Under the Table And Dreaming originally appeared on Remember Two Things.

The new version of "Tripping Billies" is a disappointment, as the new release is a little faster and lacks the signature soul that Matthews' vocals lent to the original. They also seem to have added extra instruments in the background, changing the tune just enough to give it a slightly different sound.

Crash doesn't seem to herald a new direction for the band. As stated earlier, many of these songs are long-time concert favorites. Overall they're excellent; they're representative of the band's musical potential and range.

There's nothing truly earth shattering here, just the same good music that the band's fans have grown to appreciate over the years.

Crash may not blow your mind, but it gives listeners a deeper insight into Matthews' magical musical mind. A

Indian dance to spice up Bowker

By Seema Gangotirkar
Collegian Staff

The Asian Dance & Music Program will present RagaMala:The Nine Jewels tomorrow night and Saturday night. The performances, which begin at 7 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium, are choreographed by internationally acclaimed dancer and choreographer, Ranjanaa Devi.

Devi describes RagaMala as a drama. It is based on nine miniature paintings from portfolios spanning the 15th to 20th centuries. The paintings convey a wealth of human emotions from fear to anger, from love to hate. In RagaMala, each painting is brought to life, in what Devi considers a truly multimedia performance.

In India, it was popular to have an artist create a portfolio based on the Raga melodies for his king and the king's attendants to enjoy.

"The paintings are seen as well as the dancers and the whole thing is set within the theater," Devi explained. She said that she tried to recreate each painting with the appropriate music, dialogue and dance.

"This is a complex presentation. It is complete in every way, musical and artistic," Devi said.

Devi has been working on this dance for two years. The work was commissioned by the Williams College Museum of Art in conjunction with the exhibition "The Greatest Delight: Miniature Paintings from India in the Museum Collection." It premiered at the Adams Theater in Williamston in 1994 and was performed by the Nataraj Dance Company.

"There is a lot of movement and a lot of color," Devi remarked. She said the program had "more Indian style" and cited the lyricism and delicacy of the work.

An important part of this experience was the immersion of the dancers into all aspects Indian culture. The dance classes had initiations into the music as well as lectures on the miniatures.

"It was quite an indepth experience," Devi commented. "It is a learning experience. Very often ancient cultures cannot be fit into western cultures. In order to be sensitive, it is necessary to construct a format to address concerns in a learning situation."

This presentation of RagaMala, Devi said, is an example of the Asian Dance and Music department's commitment to depth and excellence in programming. She mentioned the Chinese acrobats who performed last month in the "Parade of Dynasties" and said that next season, monks from Tibet will be in residence for one week.

"This program has quality," Devi said. "It tells about culture and carries the culture's messages. Art has a way of presenting that is not threatening and is pleasurable."

Tickets for the performance are $7 for general admission and $5 for students and seniors. Tickets are available at the Fine Arts Center Box Office. Please call (413) 545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMAS.

and the two have to deal with the repercussions of the situation. Marshall calls the play a black comedy, and notes that it's a small piece of a larger play about relationships. He also stresses that this particular play is not a "gay play."

"There are a lot of plays that deal with gay issues, but they make it a gay play," Marshall notes. "A homosexual relationship may have different trials but there are smaller differences than people make them out to be." He hopes that the audience will pick up on this. "Suitor is a very realistic play. It deals with everything," Marshall said.

The second play, A Fugue In Blue Minor, follows an asylum inmate, Arthur Richards, a man who, in Marshall's words, is "seduced, abused and confused" by the Queen of Spades and other cards. The Queen of Spades is trying to keep Arthur from remembering the past, but Marshall refuses to give much about the play away and promises "a major surprise ending."

Marshall describes the work as a "huge spectacle piece," complete with acrobats and sound effects.

A Fugue In Blue Minor owes its unusual title to Marshall's psychology background and influences of the painter, Whistler. A fugue, according to Marshall, is a sort of amnesia in which a person forgets the past and creates a new life for themselves.

"This is what's happening to Arthur," Marshall explained. As for the second part of the title, Marshall said that Whistler often used a musical theme and color when naming his paintings.

He said that he was excited about seeing his plays produced, especially since they are so contrasting. He said that he is sure that the cast and director have been faithful to the script and the original messages.

Marshall, who plans to direct and write, has been nominated to have his plays produced in New York City at the Gypsy Roads 21st Century Playwright Festival. He mentioned that writing and putting on plays is a growth experience and the plays themselves are "final exams."

"We don't get paid and we want to know what people think about the plays," Marshall said.

He also said that the whole festival may be an excellent introduction for people who haven't had the opportunity to see theater at UMass.

"This is an interesting perspective," Marshall commented. "The variety is huge. There's comedy, drama, out-right satire. It's a good starting point."

He mentioned Star-crossed, written by Smith College's Jill Dione and called the play "wonderful." It's the story about what happens to Romeo and Juliet in the after-life. He also mentioned that Judith Jaeger (Mount Holyoke College alum) had a very touching and moving play, Grandmother's Flower Garden, in the festival.

Marshall also praised the many people involved in producing a festival this size and the UMass theater department.

"People ought to come and see the fantastic work. The quality of the directors, actors, designers, it's fantastic."

Marshall also said that this was a very positive experience for students and the UMass theater department.

"The theater department has the potential to be a nexus point," he said. He cited as an example the play, Escape From Happiness, which entered the state finals on the night before the Final Four, which Marshall said was "a great accomplishment."

Overall, Marshall is ecstatic about the production and praises the work being done as "impressive." He noted the hard work of the directors, designers, actors and the dramaturgs who acted as go-betweens between playwright and director.

The experience is good, because "now others have the opportunity to have their plays produced and the writers don't necessarily have to be limited to the theater department."

Strufoli, The Suitor and the Matchmaker and A Fugue in Blue Minor as well as Star-crossed will be performed at the Rand Theater on Thursday, May 9 and Saturday May 11 at 8 p.m. For more information, call the Department of Theater at 545-3490.

ence bouble major was prepared to when it came to directing Strufoli.

Blumenthal said that Strufoli "really caught me. It's extremely funny and I loved the characters. They are very colorful and they are not quiet at all."

"The play concentrates on family. It's a story anybody could relate to."

After agreeing to direct Strufoli, Blumenthal next had to pick the cast.

"The standard procedure is two nights of audition and then we have call–backs. We compare different people, see how they work and move them around," Blumenthal explained. This particular project was particularly crazy because all seven directors sat down together to figure who was getting which person.

"You have to figure out what you want and it's a little complicated," Blumenthal admitted.

He noted that the set is interesting. One set is used for all seven shows.

"It's a modular design," Blumenthal said. "It's made up of cubes that can be reformed between shows."

He also credits the cast with working hard and "now we're enjoying it in these last two weeks."

He said that working with four actresses was "a different experience but it has gone really well."

Blumenthal is most enthusiastic about getting a second chance to direct.

"Usually you get a chance to direct with the theater guild. This is normally reserved for grad students. This is really neat. It's a unique opportunity," he said.

"This has been especially fun. The cast has worked hard and we're getting close to the reward now."

Los Lobos latest release colossal

Built to Spill mildly frothy; Neilds establish sturdy foundation

LOS LOBOS
Colossal Head
Warner Bros.

While the rest of the world has spent the last decade or so wandering aimlessly through fads, trends and bandwagons, Los Lobos has been quietly turning itself into one of the world's greatest bands. They succeeded brilliantly on their last album, Kiko, and continue to flex their musical muscle on their latest, Colossal Head.

Teamed up once again with producer Mitchell Froom and engineer Tchad Blake, Los Lobos have brought the more conventional song structures of Kiko and mixed them up in the experimental, noisy art of the Los Lobos side project, Latin Playboys. The result is an album full of awe inspiring sounds— crunchy lo–fi drums, spooky guitars, amp hum and fuzzy vocals, all wrapped around Los Lobos' effortless genre hopping arrangements. Every song introduces a new sound, and every listen is akin to an archeological dig, uncovering new and exciting elements with each listen.

Colossal Head kicks off with "Revolution," a thick '70s funk groove spiked with razor sharp distorted guitar and dry as dust vocals. Somewhere in there is a story about the death of the '60s— a revolutionary leader looking back on a lost battle. Unlike Kiko, however, Colossal Head isn't much of a lyrical album— it's a groove album where the words, more often than not, become another amazing piece of aural art in the tapestry. Indeed, if the album suffers anything it is the lack of well–defined songwriting— the songs are catchy and original, but they are also repetitive and rely more heavily on the musical ingenuity of the band than the melodic or lyrical. All is forgiven, however, once the incredible swing of "Manny's Bones" or the violent psychedelic freak–out of "Mas Y Mas" kicks in. There is more of Los Lobos' Hispanic musical heritage on the album too, something that was missing on Kiko. Indeed, the best song on Colossal Head is "Maricella," which mixes sax, accordion and Tex– Mex style harmony into a solid mambo–spiced stew.

Colossal Head may not be the album that solidifies Los Lobos' place as one of the greatest rock 'n' roll bands of all time (Kiko might very well have accomplished that), but it is another solid and nearly flawless album in the solid and nearly flawless catalog of Los Lobos — a band that continues to grow and challenge on its own terms, reinventing the wheel and, simultaneously, breaking the speed records. A (Bradley Skaught)

BUILT TO SPILL
The Normal Years
K Records

This should be retitled, Singles Going Steady (Not). Built to Spill do not fit into the Buzzcocks/Superchunk category of bands known for their thrilling 7–inch singles and lackluster albums — therefore why release The Normal Years, a compilation of singles? Built to Spill is as album– oriented as the alternative rock world will ever get, just take one listen to their fabulous 1994 full–length There's Nothing Wrong With Love.

The Normal Years is a decent 10–song compilation that attempts to capture Doug Martsch's stand–out songwriting, but falls a bit short. Six of the songs are taken from recent (read: still in print) 7–inch singles "Joyride" and "So & So & So From Wherever Wherever," while other tracks including "Shortcut" and "Still Flat" originally appeared on compilations. For die–hard fans there are two unreleased tracks, "Some" and a cover of Daniel Johnston's "Some Things Last a Long Time."

Although the album includes a few pop classics, the songs are sequenced in a chaotic manner that doesn't do the band justice. Martsch is one of the best songwriters of the so– called indie–rock world, largely because his tunes sound familiar and challenging at the same time — it's a quality that few songwriters have successfully grasped.

Built to Spill recently signed to Warner Brothers, so this collection at least can serve as a teaser for their long–awaited third studio album. B– (Mike Burke)

JOSH CLAYTON–FELT
Inarticulate Nature Boy
A&M Records

Josh Clayton–Felt gives new meaning to the words "solo album." On Inarticulate Nature Boy, his first solo outing since leaving School of Fish, not only does he produce the album, he also plays all the instruments on the majority of the album's 12 tracks. Despite never having played drums or trumpet, Clayton–Felt said there was "no pressure" to impress — instead he just "played by feel."

Inarticulate Nature Boy has a full sound that suggests there is a full band of eclectic personalities behind its songs. The album's second track, "Soon Enough," is a keyboard– based tune with a pleasant bass line that thumps along with the melody, however, the guitar is conspicuously distant. "Paint the Tree Green" is a dream–scape of sound featuring a light electric guitar and an unobtrusive bass. The song mimics a buoyant raft on a river, carrying the listener along on a steady current of soothing sound.

The catchy, swerving guitar riff of "Dead American" and the rumbling drums accompanied by a U2–ish mix of electric and acoustic guitars on the title track, make both songs strong candidates for singles. Finally, "Doubt" features a droning organ behind a poppy bass and relaxed vocals. This slithering tune will weave its way into your head; hence the name.

Clayton–Felt's Inarticulate Nature Boy presents an eclectic assortment of catchy pop tunes that stand on their own. However, his vocals, a mix between Sting and Squeeze, are often buried in the mix. On his next outing, the producers need to let this nature boy articulate a little more clearly. B (Michael McCloskey)

Nolte falls flat in Mullholland

By Laura Stack
Collegian Staff

MULHOLLAND FALLS
Directed by Lee Tamahori with Nick Nolte, Melanie Griffith, Chazz Palminteri
Playing at Mt. Farms Four

Bad guys with good intentions seem to be the heroes of Hollywood these days. From Pulp Fiction to Desperado, we love vigilantes, especially when they are well–dressed and murder savvy.

Mulholland Falls is an attempt to bring this trendy genre to a 1950's period piece. With current cult faves Chris Penn and Michael Madsen (both of Reservoir Dogs) paired up with the explosively popular Chazz Palminteri (The Usual Suspects, Faithful) and the weathered Nick Nolte, an interesting cross–generational, cross–genre foursome is created.

There is no name given to the little clique these four powerhouse cops comprise, but the characters are based on the exploits of the real–life, post–WWII crime unit known as the "Hat Squad." Their police expertise involves making sure gangsters, drug dealers and other unsavory characters who wander into L.A. never return. Usually, this entails pitching suspects over the edge of an unforgiving cliff known as Mulholland Falls.

Either these boys don't have a conscience, or it is all innocent enough (I'd go with the latter)— until their actions come full circle back around to haunt the leader of the pack, Maxwell Hoover (Nolte). When the crushed body of a girl (played in several risque flash–backs by Jennifer Connelly) he had an affair with turns up at the bottom of a pit in similar style to the Mullholland Boys' method, he begins a pane–stricken search for the killers.

Over and above the grief he feels for the death of his mistress is Nolte's paralyzing fear that his wife, played by Melanie Griffith, will discover his adulterous ways. The murder turns political as video reels from Connelly's voyeuristic neighbor, played by Andrew McCarthy, surface with shots of both Nolte and an atomic scientist/Army general (John Malkovich) in bed (on separate occasions) with the slain woman.

This interesting mix of actors and actresses, though, doesn't necessarily make for an interesting movie. In fact, some of the lesser–know actors such as Treat Williams as Malkovich's tyrannical, two–faced officer and cocky FBI agent Daniel "FAT ALEC !!!!!" Baldwin provide some of the better, and bloodier, sideshows of the film.

Nolte, however, is stale. His character, who is often working alone, is just plain boring without interaction with other people. His humorous banter with Palminteri's Coolidge is some of the best dialogue in the script, mostly because of what Palminteri does with it. We are told he is ruthless, but this New Jersey tough guy puts a patient grin on his face and offers second–hand psychological advice as he sits in the back seat of the boys' convertible. A particularly gripping scene which Nolte shines in is with a stunning Griffith, as he is forced to admit to his tearful wife that he was unfaithful.

Mulholland Falls is a bit misleading. It is dark, but not scary; bloody, but not macabre; and funny, but not uproarious. If director Tamahori steered the film onto one of these tracks wholeheartedly, it would have made for a much more interesting and cohesive film. C+

Razor and Tie

Some of the greatest rock and roll in the genre's short history has been "Folk Rock." Dylan revolutionized pop music with folk rock in his work with The Band, The Beatles displayed a folk rock influence on Rubber Soul and, in recent times, bands like R.E.M. and 10,000 Maniacs have continued the tradition of mixing folk harmonies and lyrical values with the electric energy of rock.

With their latest album, Gotta Get Over Greta, The Nields have found the perfect balance between their folk and rock elements. Once a three piece acoustic folk band, The Nields have since added drums and electric guitar without compromising the breathtaking vocal harmony and songwriting. In fact, the added instrumental dynamics have accentuated the folksier elements of their earlier work — giving a new emotional depth and substance to the songs.

Instrumentally, Greta is a solid, tasteful album. The arrangements are kept sparse, and the vocals are pushed up front without sacrificing the powerful electric guitar work of David Nields. The Nields manage to swing without falling into the usual folk rock cliches.

Too many slow songs, however, break up the pace of the album after the initial three songs. Gotta Get Over Greta could use more of the brilliant pop energy and songwriting of the title track, which is a perfect gem, instantly catchy and laced with gorgeous, soaring vocals. It represents the Nields at their best both musically and lyrically.

With Greta, The Nields have found a solid musical foundation on which to build their various songwriting and singing talents (almost all of them write songs and share vocals— like the Cowsills, The Nields are a family based group, raised on folk songs in a rock and roll era.) It's a thoroughly enjoyable album, and one that will, hopefully, raise awareness of the Nields and their solid folk rock sound. B (B.S.)

about making his decision to go pro. When Kevin Garnett went pro straight from high school last year, supporters cited "tough" academic standards that Kevin did not meet. Kobe supposedly had qualified academically, so his choice centered around other factors. LaSalle was said to have had the inside track on Kobe due to the fact his father, former NBA'er Joe Bryant, is an assistant coach there. Not so. Kobe considered Duke, North Carolina and Villanova before declaring, and did not want to follow his father to the Explorers. Kobe is a 6-foot-6-inch swingman entering the draft not standing out as Garnett did. Look for Bryant to go between 10-13. There are many who think this could be the beginning of talented high-schoolers foregoing college totally, a mistake in itself. Somehow it seems hard to disagree.

Moving on —

Guess it really wasn't a good week to be an NBA coach. Butch Beard (Nets), Mike Dunleavy (Bucks), Allan Bristow (Hornets) and Brendan Malone (Raptors) were all recently relieved of their duties. However, each didn't leave without a little story behind their departure.

Hmm... How many of you actually thought Butch Beard was going to keep his job? Not me. After publicly ripping management and the entire organization, Beard's fate was sealed. You have to feel bad for Butch though — he had to coach a team that plays in toxic fumes, has little talent and no direction. Hard to wonder why Rick Pitino didn't want to leave his throne in Kentucky, right? Pitino was quoted as saying, "there is not one-tenth of one-percent chance that I will coach the Nets next season." Let's see, how long do you think it will take for the Nets to realize nobody wants to coach them and rehire Beard. Leave it up to GM Willis Reed to screw this up, trust me.

How does an NBA coach lose their job in the span of a week? Ask Allan Bristow. Bristow's Hornets lost their grip on the final playoff spot, tried to regain it and failed miserably. Oh, consistently being mediocre (for the past two years) doesn't help either. Honestly, Bristow's firing was long over due. No significant candidates have surfaced yet.

As for Mike Dunleavy — nice guy, just couldn't coach all that well. Malone on the other hand was fired because VP Isiah Thomas wanted a new puppet. Sure enough he found one in new coach Darrell Walker.

Spanning the "Globe"

• Washington Bullets/Wizards GM John Nash resigned yesterday citing differences with owner Abe Pollin. Nash, who played a critical role in restoring some respectability to the Bullets, will be missed. This could prove to be a focal point in Juwan Howard's pending negotiations.

• Dennis Rodman was fined this week for making an obscene gesture at referee Bill Oakes after being tossed in game two vs. Miami. Oakes probably asked Rodman why he wasn't the one to father Madonna's child.

• For Stephon Marbury's sake, let's hope Vancouver doesn't ask for a copy of his college transcripts.

• The Raptors' Oliver Miller filed for free agency earlier this week. Think about this for a minute. Here's a guy who was the last pick in an expansion draft choosing to test the waters. Judging by today's outlandish free agent contracts, he should get at least... $4 million?

Iverson becomes latest to declare

By Joseph White
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — John Thompson doesn't like losing, and he doesn't take it well. On Wednesday, he reluctantly lost Allen Iverson to the NBA, and all the coach could do was wish his player well and take a few potshots at the NCAA.

Citing personal and financial reasons, Iverson became the first player in Thompson's 24 years at Georgetown to leave early for the pros. One of the last major pillars of the four-year student athlete has finally crumbled in the wave of the leave-school-early '90s.

"I don't blame anybody but us," Thompson said. "We have the most antiquated set of rules. They're almost prehistoric based on the times. If we don't look at it very clearly, there won't be one halfway sensible reason why kids will stay in school."

Under Thompson, 72 of 74 players who have stayed four years have received their degrees. But unlike previous Georgetown greats such as Patrick Ewing and Alonzo Mourning, Iverson found the temptation of an NBA contract too great to pass up.

An All-American sophomore guard and one of the game's quickest players, Iverson said his decision boiled done to one factor: money. He revealed that he had a 1-year-old daughter living in his hometown of Hampton, Va., and said his 4-year-old sister, Iiesha, had been having seizures.

"My baby sister was having some medical problems, and I think that really pushed me out the door," said Iverson, accompanied by his mother, Ann. "Now I can get a specialist for her, and help my mom along. She raised me for 20 years, did the best she could, and I just want the opportunity to do the best for her."

Speculation had been rife for weeks that Iverson would leave — he has recently been driving a $130,000 Mercedes on loan from a local dealer, an apparent violation of NCAA rules — but Thompson had done his best to downplay the rumors.

Before the Big East tournament in March, Thompson said Iverson would leave only with his permission "or he will go nowhere." On Wednesday, however, it was obvious the decision was Iverson's alone.

"I think it would be a little bit stupid of me to try to change a man who can think and make judgments," Thompson said. "Or for me to try to persuade him or try to con him from doing something that he feels in his heart he must do."

Thompson bemoaned the fact that, under NCAA rules, he was powerless to do anything to help Iverson's sister.

"It's a frustrating thing," Thompson said. "Even though we might have the best hospital around, you can't do anything about that."

Thompson has maintained young athletes need to mature in college before entering the money-driven world of the NBA. He said Iverson, who spent four months in jail during high school on a conviction that was later overturned, was no exception.

"I have concerns about Allen's ability emotionally and psychologically to deal with the things the NBA relates to," Thompson said. "In his basketball ability I have the ultimate amount of confidence. I'm scared... about the other 22 hours." Iverson's game will be suited to the NBA's fast pace. Last season, he averaged 24.7 points, 3.8 rebounds, 5.0 assists and 3.5 steals. He was the Big East defensive player of the year for the second time.

Iverson's newly acquired agent, David Falk, predicted Iverson would be a top five pick in the June 26 draft.

As for losing his first early draftee, Thompson was philosophic. "My reputation has never been important to me in anything that I did," Thompson said. "Doing that which is correct was more important to me. You check my life, there are many contradictions in it.

"If you were ask me, 'Should he stay here?' I would tell you absolutely yes. If you were ask me, 'Did he make the right decision to leave?' I would tell you absolutely yes, based on the reasons he used to make that decision."

Ironically, Thompson said, Iverson's departure should help his recruiting.

"I don't know how many kids that I have lost by going into their homes and they tell me, 'I don't want to go here because I'll make them stay for four,'" Thompson said. "So now I can bust through the door and say, 'Hey, I let one go.' So in a sick way, I can say this is going to help."

Parcells can walk away next year

FOXBORO, Mass (AP) — Apparently upset about his dwindling power and frustrated by his lack of success, New England Patriots coach Bill Parcells has been granted permission to walk away from his contract after the coming season.

The change announced Wednesday likely will have little effect on whether Parcells stays with the Patriots beyond this year, because he could return in spite of the change and might have left even if he was under contract.

Parcells was not available for comment. But owner Bob Kraft confirmed in a statement that he honored a request from Parcells last season to cut his five-year deal to four.

said that I want to hear from you and I don't care if it's when I'm waving a runner home."

Speaking on behalf of the entire athletic department, Associate Athletic Director for Media Relations Bill Strickland had some kind words for Sortino as he preaced her stunning announcement.

"Elaine has seen it all here, the good and the bad," she said. "As an administrator she has been part of the growth of the exceptional program to its current status as one of the most comprehensive intercollegiate athletic programs in the country, with 29 sports that are all very competitive. She has been instrumental in making the University of Massachusetts a model around the country in the area of Title IX compliance. I could go on and on with all the things that Elaine Sortino has accomplished here as a coach, as an administrator and as a person."

The timing was right on the decision according to Sortino, whose team opens its post-season with the A-10 Tournament this weekend at Totman Field. The players were informed at a special team meeting last week, giving ample time for the unexpected news to sink in before the team's playoff run.

The timing was also good in the grand scheme of things, as Sortino's successor will inherit a team that graduates only one senior and is expected to be a legitimate national power next year.

When a decision had to be made, Sortino opted for the same team attitude that she has instilled in everyone to wear a UMass softball uniform since 1980. The needs of the entire departments and its 29 teams, in the end, outweighed the needs of just one of its teams in the coach's mind.

"UMass has grown so much," she said. "Our athletic department is one of the finer athletic departments in the entire country. We also have a fine softball program, a top 25 team that every year requires more attention, more detail, more nation-wide recruiting.

"They need a full-time commitment for that one resource. Bob needs my commitment and the department needs my commitment as an administrator. Both of these entities deserve full-time help. This is a decision that is sound in my mind and absolutely the most difficult decision I've made in my heart. I love to coach, but I can't keep doing both things."

The La Salle offense is paced by sophomore infielder Chris Wilderman, who hit an astronomical .391 on the year, while driving in 27 runs. Megan Andros, a sophomore outfielder, started only 20 games but hit .394 in her 71 at- bats. Jen Bostak, one of two seniors on the squad, leads the Explorers with 29 RBIs.

Janice McGinty is the Explorers' big gun on the hill. McGinty posted a 17-13 record finishing all but two of her 29 starts. McGinty's only flaw is her sporadic control. McGinty walked 72 batters in 206 2/3 innings while striking out only 66. Despite control problems, she managed an ERA of 1.96.

Sortino says — "The last time we played them, we were very lethargic. They can hit the ball, they put the ball in play quite a bit. Anything can happen. They come into this tournament with nothing to lose, so they can just let loose."

The tournament starts at noon on Friday when the top- seeded Minutewomen take on No. 4 seed La Salle in the first game of the double elimination tournament. The winner of the UMass/La Salle match-up will face the victor in the Temple/Rhode Island contest. That second-round game will take place at noon on Saturday before the first elimination game, a contest between the two Friday losers. The championship game is scheduled to start at 1 p.m. on Sunday.

Minutewomen to watch:

Kim Guttridge: The sophomore first baseman is one of the leading candidates for A-10 Player of the Year. She has been the most consistent Minutewoman so far, leading the team with a .368 batting average. She has also driven in 29 runs and scored 28.

Sam Cardenas: One of the most dangerous lead-off hitters in the conference, Cardenas is a devastating run producer leading UMass with 39 RBI. Her average has climbed steadily from mid-season to a current .333 mark. Cardenas also contributes on the defensive end, as solid a third sacker as you'll find.

Ashlie Hayes: The rangy freshman shortstop was one of the most highly-sought recruits of last year's softball class. She has been a consistent source of offense all season, finishing the regular season at .299 with two homers and 24 RBIs. Hayes has however committed 32 errors.

Danielle Henderson: Has won a school-record 18 straight decisions. In 140 innings this spring she has struck out 81 batters holding her opponents to an amazing .181 average. Her 18-5 record and 1.15 ERA put her in strong position to win either the Rookie of the Year or Pitcher of the Year awards in the A-10.

Liz Wagner: The junior lefty has quietly put up numbers that have her in position to compete for A-10 Pitcher of the Year as well. She finished the year with a 14-6 record and an astounding 1.10 ERA. Wagner displayed excellent control this season, walking only 20 batters in 139-2/3 innings.

Sortino announces intention to step down as coach

KAREM ALI/COLLEGIAN

Elaine Sortino, who is retiring from coaching UMass softball, is the winningest coach in UMass history amassing 523 wins and ranks 17th among active Division I coaches in wins and first in the northeast region.

By Leigh Torbin
Collegian Staff

Men's basketball assistant coach Ed Schilling set the tone of yesterday's weekly UMass Sports Luncheon in the Campus Center Auditorium with a speech about not taking things, including his team's success, for granted.

On the UMass campus, perhaps no athletic endeavor is taken more for granted than how seemingly every spring, coach Elaine Sortino's softball team will win 30 games, an Atlantic 10 title and advance to NCAA Regionals.

A major component of this legacy will change after the completion of this season as Sortino, who is heralded as the matriarch of the program for her 17-year commitment, and built the program almost from scratch, will take her bow. She announced at yesterday's luncheon that she will step down from her coaching duties and concentrate her efforts on her positions as an Associate Athletic Director and Senior Women's Administrator.

Sortino is the winningest coach in UMass history, amassing 523 softball wins and 218 more in volleyball, which she coached from 1979–1986. Sortino is the only softball coach from the Northeast region to win 500 games and her .685 career winning percentage (523–240–2) ranks her 17th in the nation. Under her guidance, UMass has won 10 A-10 titles in the past 11 years. She has won numerous Coach of the Year awards and led her team to a third place finish at the 1992 College World Series — the highest finish ever for a Northeast region team in a sport dominated by Sun Belt schools.

An emotional Sortino said yesterday that the strain of both positions was becoming too great, preventing her from doing either to the best of her abilities.

"I try to be like everything to everybody, but I'm starting to feel like I'm nothing to everyone, so I've decided to step down as softball coach," she said.

Sortino's administrative role recently took on a few added burdens with both the department's NCAA certification process, and the hosting of the NCAA women's volleyball championships, which culminated two full years of Sortino's labor. Coupled with coaching a nationally-ranked softball team, Sortino sensed that her talents were starting to be spread too thin, and working in conjunction with Athletic Director Bob Marcum, a solution was reached.

"It started to become apparent that nobody was getting the best of me and everybody was getting pieces," Sortino said. "I don't operate that way. I like to feel that when it's all said and done that I did the best that I could do and I'm not sure that I'm able to give my best anymore.

"That's the kind of person I am. I want to be there for people. That's what's been hard. I felt like there wasn't enough of me to go around anymore. They need more from me administratively. The team needs more from me. Something's got to give."

Perhaps Sortino's most endearing quality as both a coach and an administrator has been her often unyielding love for her student-athletes and compassion for her fellow coaches. With the added bonus of events such as the volleyball championships, her time to devote to her co-workers and players was horribly diminished.

In choosing between which of her two positions to pursue, the University's student-athletes became a prime concern, and by focusing on her work as SWA, she can make a difference for hundreds more than merely working as the softball coach.

"It gives you time to spend with the kids, to get to know the kids on a more personal level," she said. "The bottom line is that I love the kids and I'll be able to help more of them across the board. I've given them a lot of love and I've been loved back. I don't think that's going to change, there's just going to be more of them."

This accessibility and compassion extends beyond just the "kids." Sortino commented that her new position will give her more time to associate with the support staff that makes the school's athletic success possible. This is one of her many current duties that can often be overlooked when wedged between flying to Arizona for softball games and meeting with A-10 officials over administrative matters.

She will also maintain her open-door policy in regards to her coaches' concerns.

"I'll have more time to spend with the coaches," Sortino said of one of the better parts of her new singular role. "It's tough when they need to come in to talk to me and they're staying away because they know I have a doubleheader with UConn. I tell them that I have no agenda. I'm here all the time.

"I had a meeting with someone this morning and I

Softball set to host A–10s

By Fred Hurlbrink, Jr.
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts softball squad cruised through its Atlantic 10 schedule going unbeaten (14-0) in the conference starting with a twin bill demolition of new A-10 rival Virginia Tech, and ending with a sound victory over Dayton.

Now, the real season begins.

The Minutewomen look to win the conference title again and solidify their position in the NCAA Regionals, where they hope to earn a berth in the College World Series.

Here's a look at what stands in the way of the defending A-10 champion Minutewomen:

Temple Owls: The second-seeded team in the tournament, the Owls come into Amherst with a 31-18 record, 11-5 in the A-10. Temple has logged winning streaks of six and seven games, and have not lost more than two games in a row all season. The Owls battled UConn for 14 innings and pulled out a 1-0 victory, maybe their biggest win of the season.

The Temple offense isn't particularly strong. Its most dangerous weapon offensively is sophomore outfielder Kristen Jasonides who leads the team hitting at a .287 clip. Jasonides also leads the Owls with five doubles and 22 RBI.

Desiree Wallace (20-12) is one of the best hurlers in the A-10. She has started 30 of the 49 Temple contests, notching a 1.19 ERA in an incredible 217 innings pitched. She has struck out 133 and allowed a mere 148 hits in those 217 innings.

UMass coach Elaine Sortino says — "They're a good solid team. They've got good pitching and decent speed. They have tournament experience."

Rhode Island Rams: Finished the season at 23-21 (10-6 in the A-10). The third seeded Rams have just one win on the season against the three other teams that are in the tournament, a 5-3 win over Temple. Massachusetts beat the Rams in a doubleheader at Totman Field allowing one unearned run in the two games. Rhody's biggest win of the year was a 16-5 shellacking of lowly conference opponent St. Bonaventure.

The Rams have a solid offense, anchored by sophomore second baseman Kellie Cookus. Cookus is among the A-10 leaders in hitting with a .367 mark. She also leads Rhode Island in almost every major statistical category including home runs (3), RBI (31) and runs scored (25).

Rhody has gotten consistent pitching all year. Senior lefty Sue Foggo is 10-6 on the spring with a 2.62 earned run average, striking out 92 batters in 107 innings. Her partner in crime, Correna Berlinger has pitched better all year recording a 2.16 ERA, but only being able to muster five wins in 17 decisions.

Sortino says — "Rhode Island is a scrappy team. They played us tough this year and they were in the tournament field last year."

La Salle Explorers: The Explorers finished the season with a 22-24 mark. Despite the sub-.500 record, they managed to finish the A-10 slate with a 9-7 record, grabbing the fourth spot in the conference tournament. La Salle finished the season strong, winning five of its last six conference games, including sweeping a doubleheader against Rhode Island.

Seniors prepare for final home game

By Matt Vautour
Collegian Staff

When the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team steps onto Richard F. Garber Field for Saturday afternoon's game against Brown, six Minutemen will be taking the home field for the final time.

The six graduating seniors each spoke about their time playing at UMass.

Kevin Ratkiewicz — The senior goaltender has served as a back up for the past three seasons playing in nine games during his career, including two starts.

As a native of South Hadley, Ratkiewicz grew up watching UMass through the years, so actually playing for the Minutemen was a dream come true.

"It's been such an honor to experience playing for UMass," Ratkiewicz said. "I used to come here and watch all the great players. I even saw Coach Cannella play back in the day. It was great. I grew up wishing and dreaming just to play for UMass.

"I had such a good time here with all the guys, I wish it would never end."

Bob Lukacz — Like teammates Eric Bailey and Buddy Hoffman, the senior attacker played at Bridgeton Academy. Lukacz lists this year's 15-9 victory over Boston College as the highlight of his career.

"Against BC, I had two goals and coach gave me the heart and soul award," he said. "I was pretty pleased about that. That's been my best memory."

Brian Turk — The fact that Turk even stepped onto the field to play a full season is an accomplishment. The Maryland native tore his anterior cruciate ligament during his freshman season and missed the entire season. He returned this year, has seen considerable playing time at attack and has picked up three assists in the process, while only missing one game.

"To come back and actually compete with these guys is reward enough," Turk said. "I'm just psyched that I'm running around the field with no pain and walking off with no pain. That's something that's fantastic. I'm glad I can run up and down the field. It scared the hell out of me. I didn't think I was going to be able to.

"I'm going to miss this," he said motioning toward the field, "and these guys. I really will."

Eric Bailey — With 15 goals and 13 assists, Bailey's senior season was the best of his four years as a starter for the Minutemen. His highlight: film goals, as well as his feeding ability, put him in consideration to be named an All- American.

"It's been a good four years," Bailey said. "I've met a lot of great people, a bunch of goofy guys, just like me. I'll miss it. No doubt. I'm sure I'll miss it."

Dennis Kelly — The All-America candidate distinguished himself as one of the top long-stick midfielders in the country. The tri-captain has led the Minutemen in groundballs both of the last two seasons. A true lover of the game, Kelly hopes to become a coach.

"I want lacrosse to be a big part of my life," Kelly said. "As you get older you realize that you can't play forever. Lacrosse has done a lot for me. I've used it to get through some of the toughest times of my life. It's the fun part of my day.

"I want to coach. That's an aspiration of mine."

Buddy Hoffman — The Long Beach, N.Y. native converted to attack this season and became one of the Minutemen's most prolific scorers, trailing only Brendan Glass with 24 goals in the year.

"It's been fun all four years," Hoffman said. "I've made a lot of friends. I'm excited to come back in the future."

Women's lax ends season at home

By Luke Meredith
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team ends its season tomorrow at home against Harvard, and for two members of the squad, it marks the last time they will suit up for the Minutewomen.

Senior defenders Elaine Burke of Acton and Diana MacNeil of Maynard will be honored on Senior Day tomorrow, and as UMass coach Francesca McClellan explains, they will be sorely missed.

"They've been with the program since the day we were reinstated," McClellan said. "And they've been an integral part of the foundation of this program. Nobody works harder than these two, and they represent what you want in a player when you think of UMass lacrosse. With the team being so young, these two have also provided solid, stable leadership for the underclassmen."

UMass is 4-9 on the year and while that may seem to signal a disappointing year, keep in mind that this is the best season the Minutewomen have had since the program was reinstated in 1993. Important victories like the 11-8 triumph over New Hampshire on April 5 and Tuesday's 14-3 romp over Boston University, have given the Minutewomen much needed respect. If they can win tomorrow, they'll end the season with momentum the younger players can take into next year.

Harvard comes into Totman Field tomorrow as a team playing it's best lacrosse of the year right now.

"It should be a good game," McClellan said. "Because they've come on strong lately."

Harvard is 6-5 overall, 3-3 in the Ivy League and it wasn't too long ago that the Crimson were 1-5 and sinking fast. Losses to Maryland and Princeton at home were enough to snap the Crimson out of their funk. Harvard has reeled off five straight wins, including a 24-10 blowout of New Hampshire on Tuesday. The Crimson are lead by Maria Hennessey with 27 goals, Erin Cleary's 20 and 14 goals and 11 assists from Megan Hall.

For the Minutewomen, they will not only lose two great people in MacNeil and Burke, but they're also losing two very fine players.

Burke has six goals (on only eight shots) on the spring and MacNeil leads the team in draws won with 15, in addition to two goals and an assist. They've both started every game this year and their shooting percentages are ranked No. 1-2 on the year. Burke is shooting an incredible 75-percent on the year, and MacNeil is right behind her at 67 percent. Game time tomorrow is scheduled for 4 p.m..

Playoffs rolling; Camby, Bryant & Iverson declare

Darren Cohen on the NBA

With the playoffs off to a fast and furious start (go Knicks!), other news in the world of pro hoops should be discussed. Even during the playoffs, the "other" teams around the league are slowly finding out who may be heading in their direction.

Earlier this week, UMass's own Marcus Camby, prep school star Kobe Bryant and Georgetown lightning bolt Allen Iverson, let the world know that they were on their way to the NBA. While Marcus's decision didn't shock many, Iverson & Bryant's decision certainly turned a few heads. Camby & Iverson most likely will be selected with either of the first two picks, while Bryant will most likely go between 10-15.

So, how does all of this effect possible draft scenarios?

Philadelphia, which should claim the No. 1 pick (for heaven's sakes, the Sixers earned it), would be wrong not to take the Hartford native. Camby would give the Sixers another great wing player to compliment Stackhouse. Not being a center in the pros will help Marcus's game tremendously. However, Philly will take a long look at Iverson to fill a gaping hole in its backcourt. Remember, Iverson is not a "true" point guard, and the Sixers already have too many shooters.

Iverson's decision comes as somewhat of a surprise since 72 out of the 74 players Thompson has recruited have stayed all four years. During last week reports of Iverson driving around a $130,000 Mercedes haven't done much for his eligibility status. Hence, an easy decision for the Big East's Defensive Player of the Year.

Bryant debated a long time

American soldier shot, wounded in Bosnia

TUZLA AIR BASE, Bosnia-Herzegovna (AP) — A U.S. soldier was shot and wounded in the abdomen Thursday in northern Bosnia, military officials said. They said the injury was not life-threatening.

Details were sketchy, but a U.S. Army spokesman said there was no hostile fire. He said an investigation was under way and the commander was questioning his troops, trying to figure out how the man was shot.

The soldier's name was withheld pending notification of family.

The Army said he was in stable condition at the 212th Mobile Army Surgical Hospital nearby.

U.S. army headquarters in Tuzla said the incident took place at Bare Camp Demi, near then town of Kladanj, about 18 miles south of Tuzla, an area patrolled by the 2nd Brigade of the 1st Armored Division.

The soldier is the third American to be wounded by gunfire since 18,000 U.S. troops began arriving in Bosnia in December to participate in the NATO-led peace force. The other two were wounded by hostile fire.

Two Americans have been killed, one by a mine and the other in a truck accident.

Ford recall omits some models

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ford Motor Co.'s recall of 7 million vehicles left out hundreds of thousands more with ignition switches that could be prone to catching fire, company documents suggest.

However, Ford officials said Thursday the documents it turned over to the government included large numbers of fire reports that were unsubstantiated.

"We're confident in the recall population we've gone after," said spokeswoman Francine Romine in Michigan.

Last week, Ford said it would replace the ignition switches in 7.9 million vehicles in the United States and 859,000 in Canada.

There have been more than 820 reports of fires from the switches in this country, and in some cases fires occurred even when the vehicles were parked and shut off.

Ford documents show the recall included most vehicle models with a high number of reported fires. But they also show some model years that were not recalled had a higher rate of fires than many of the vehicles recalled.

The company looked at its 1984 through 1993 vehicles with the same type of ignition switch but did not recall any prior to 1988 because the automaker tied the switch fires to a faulty design change made by a manufacturer in May 1987.

"There's an artificial line drawn," said Richard Schiffrin, a lead lawyer in a class-action lawsuit against Ford. He believes more vehicles should be recalled.

SGA's Castellano slated to speak at graduation

By Michael Elliot
Collegian Staff

Senior Dan Castellano, the Speaker of the Student Government Association (SGA) Senate, has been selected to address his graduating class during the 126th Commencement at the University of Massachusetts.

Castellano, a marketing major with a double minor in Japanese and Afro-American studies, will deliver a speech entitled "Power in our Hands," before approximately 20,000 spectators.

Castellano said that he hopes to remind his fellow students that the knowledge and skills gained in college must be applied to benefit the lives of others.

"We, as graduates of UMass, should use what we have to empower ourselves and the lives of others," he said. "It's about advancing society as a whole."

Castellano said that he will focus in the importance of higher education in the 21st century. The economic reality many students will face, he said, will place the price of a college education out of reach for most Americans.

"Education is becoming more inaccessible," Castellano said.

Castellano has been active in student government since his freshman year. He cites the successes of the Student Activities Trust Fund relief campaign, assisting in the organization of the forthcoming campus-wide Summit on Safety and food services reform as his most significant accomplishments.

"All too often, the student voice has been marginalized," with the administration, he said — a trend which he hopes to have been permanently reversed once his work with the Senate concludes.

Outside of the SGA, Castellano spent three years as the president of the Undergraduate Business Club, which coordinates the School of Management's annual career day.

Additionally, Castellano spent a year as a volunteer for the Jean Elder House in Amherst, who provides low-cost, subsidized housing for the elderly.

Castellano said his most enjoyable community endeavor, however, has been his involvement with the local Big Brothers Big Sisters program, in which he has been active for the past two years with an 11-year old boy.

"I've always wanted to work with kids," he said. "We've learned a lot from each other."

Castellano was selected by a joint student, faculty committee to deliver the commencement address.

The event is scheduled for May 26, beginning at 10:30 a.m. in the Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

Senate targets alien regulation with bill; Clinton pleased

By Carolyn Skorneck
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Senate overwhelmingly passed a popular bill today that would crack down on illegal aliens at the border and the workplace and stiffen rules on legal immigrants to keep them off the public dole.

The lawmakers voted 97-3 for the bill that is similar to one passed by the House in March. Sens. Paul Simon of Illinois, Bob Graham of Florida and Russell Feingold of Wisconsin, all Democrats, voted no.

The measure would almost double the number of border patrol guards, now more than 5,000; authorize creation of pilot projects enabling employers to verify easily whether a worker is eligible for a job in the United States; increase penalties for document fraud and alien smuggling; and make it harder for legal immigrants to qualify for public benefits.

House and Senate conferees will have to resolve differences between the two bills, and both chambers will have to vote on the compromise measure before it can go to President Clinton.

"I am pleased that the Senate has endorsed our strategy with legislation that answers my administration's call for tougher penalties for alien smugglers, criminal aliens and manufacturers and sellers of fraudulent documents," Clinton said in a statement.

"I urge the Congress to quickly finalize and send me this key legislation."

The Senate bill would repeal rules limiting asylum-seeker's rights to enter the country, a change approved Wednesday, just a week after those rules became law.

"People coming in with false passports, claiming persecution... don't get a hearing," said Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., who authored the amendment to the immigration bill that would eliminate the new rules. "They get an interview by whoever is there at the border, and they can get kicked out."

Leahy, whose amendment to the immigration bill passed 51-49, said people fearing for their lives from their own governments cannot be expected to obtain legal documents from those governments in order to flee.

Separately, the Senate rejected fears of big government intrusiveness and upheld provisions authorizing development of standardized, counterfeit-proof birth certificates and other state-issued identifying documents. It also voted for pilot projects to help employers ensure that the people they hire are eligible for work in the United States.

AIPAC conference features Peres, Clinton; calls for action

By Anna Feder
Collegian Staff

This past weekend hundreds of college students gathered with congressmen, senators and supporters of the cause at the 37th annual American Israel Public Affairs Committee (AIPAC) Policy Conference in Washington, D.C. Students from over 210 colleges came to discuss Pro-Israel activism and awareness on their campus.

The American Israel Public Affairs Committee was founded by Si Kenen in the 1950s and is now headed by President Melvin Dow and Chairman of the Board Steve Grossman. With over 50,000 members, it is the most influential lobby group on issues of foreign policy.

The late Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, a strong supporter of the organization once said, "AIPAC has been and will remain the spearhead of the special relations between Washington and Jerusalem."

The students in attendance were invited by the Political Leadership Development Program. It was started by AIPAC in 1979 and has affiliated over 18,000 college students from 425 campuses in all 50 states. It involves students in the political process and educates them about issues affecting the U.S.-Israel relationship.

As part of the program students participated in several workshops on their role in the future of political activism. One such workshop included insights from Republican and Democrat members of the House of Delegates.

Also present was Michelle Walden, the granddaughter of Israeli Prime Minister of Shimon Peres. Walden urged students to find one issue that is important to them and use it as a means to get involved in the world around them. Republican member of the Virginia House of Delegates, Eric Cantor also encouraged students to get involved in politics the way that he did, on the "grassroots" level.

At the end of the session students were given the opportunity to address issues that concerned them. One student argued that the lack of involvement on the part of the students was a result of failures within the system rather than their apathy.

The highlight of the convention was the "Salute to the Peacemakers," featuring speeches from President Bill Clinton and Prime Minister Shimon Peres. King Hussein of Jordan who had been expected to speak was unable to attend.

Peres assured the students in attendance of his commitment to higher education. "Investment in education... suffers a bright future for our sons and daughters... to higher the standard of living and lower the violence."

The President also took the time in his speech to respond to the vast numbers of college students in attendance. "I realized that in some ways we have to keep depending on young people to deliver us because they remind us that we can break new ground and make tomorrow different from yesterday."

Student delegates also had the opportunity to attend a banquet with nearly half of the U.S. senate, one-quarter of the House of Representatives, scores of diplomats, numerous White House, Pentagon and State Department officials and various members of the media.

During the course of events, Israeli Ambassador to the U.S. Itmar Rabinovich offered his support of the spirit of the conference. "We have experienced the depth and warmth of the American Israeli relationship."

Forty three students from the University of Massachusetts were in attendance, the highest number of delegates from any one college. Kim Richman, the campus liaison for the conference, hopes that there will be twice as many involved next year, filling two buses.

The delegates seemed to feel the importance of their presence at the event. Theresa Kushner, a senior political science major said, "being at the conference had an impact in that we represented AIPAC, one of the strongest lobbying groups."

Junior BDIC major and Vice President of Zionists for Action, Jay Bragg, is hopeful regarding the results of the conference. "I think that student activism at UMass is at a new beginning in the Jewish Community. Because of the information provided by AIPAC students who attended the trip are now empowered to take the lead in teaching other students the importance of the US-Israel relationship."

The overall message and outcomes of the conference were positive. There was an atmosphere of realistic hope and aspiration as if now is a turning point, the climax of the peace efforts in the Middle East.

Quindlen to speak at Smith graduation

By Daniel E. Lavenson
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — On May 19, Smith College will hold its 118th commencement ceremony at 2:15 p.m. in an outdoor ceremony.

Pulitzer prize winning columnist and author, Anna Quindlen will be addressing the Class of 1996.

A graduate of Barnard College, she won the Pulitzer prize for commentary in 1992. Quindlen, who holds honorary degrees from Dartmouth College and Denison University, will be awarded an honorary degree by Smith College. She is also a recipient of Columbia University's Medal Of Honor and was named one of the 10 Outstanding women of the year in 1991 by Glamour magazine.

Quindlen began working at the New York Times in 1977. In 1983 she was named deputy metropolitan editor of the Times.

In 1995 she left her position to pursue her own literary goals. She has written a children's book The Tree That Came To Stay, and two novels, Object Lessons and One True Thing.

In addition to Quindlen, Smith College will also recognize Adjunct professor of health at the Columbia University of Public Health, Dr. Mathilde Krim, who will be receiving an honorary degree from Smith. Krim is chairman of the Board of the American foundation for AIDS research.

Several other local individuals will also be receiving honorary degrees; Edmund S. Morgan, a former trustee of Smith; Joanne V. Creighton, president of Mount Holyoke College; Richard Wilbur, poet emeritus at Smith; and Wendy Wasserstein, a playwright and dramatist.

Six hundred and ninty-two seniors will be receiving Bachelor's Degrees from the college. Eighty-three students will also be receiving their Master's Degrees.

The ceremony will be held in the Quadrangle, and is open to the public. Attendance is free — no tickets are being sold. In the case of rain, the event will be held in the Indoor Track and Tennis Facility.

Paleontologists study baby dino muscular, running capabilities

By Paul Recer
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Dinosaurs, history's terrible lizards, may have tenderly guarded their unhatched eggs, but a study contends the newborns leaped from their shells fully ready to scamper into a dangerous world.

"They had the ability to hit the ground running," said Nicholas R. Geist, a researcher at Oregon State University. "They were highly mobile. They were able to run and protect themselves."

Geist and Terry D. Jones, also of Oregon State, came to this conclusion by comparing the density of pelvic bones in fossilized dinosaur embryos with the bones of modern birds and crocodiles. A report on the study is to be published Friday in the journal Science.

The comparative study shows that just-hatched dinosaurs were not defenseless dependents, like most birds. Geist said Thursday in an interview. Instead, the dinosaur babies had the bone and muscle strength to move rapidly and to scamper away from danger, just as modern crocodile young can.

goals, 24 assists), Brown has shown the ability to score with regularity. The Minutemen will counter with a strong defense, that in four games against top 10 teams has only given up an average of only 9.75 goals per contest.

 The battle will feature a pair of impressive goaltenders. Both Brown's Greg Cattrano (9.94 goals against average) and UMass' John Kasselakis (9.86 goals against average).

One person with an interesting perspective on the game is Scott Anderson, the Harvard coach whose squad upended both UMass and Brown. He sees tempo as a key to the game.

"Brown has a better transition game pushing the ball up field, while UMass may have a more effective six-on-six game," he said. "It'll be an interesting matchup. They're both very good teams. It's a shame that either team has to lose that game."

Cannella is thrilled that the game is at home and is hoping for a crowd.

"It's always great to play in front of the students, in front of the home crowd on Garber Field," Cannella said. "If there was ever a game I wanted to play that was important, I would want it on Richard F. Garber Field."

Minutewomen Notes: Amy Powell is the only senior on this year's softball squad. A mid-fielder on the UMass soccer team, Powell is enjoying her best season on the diamond this spring. A career .207 hitter, she is batting .293 in her final season with 29 RBIs and 23 runs scored. Powell (2B) has been a steady force on the field, at the plate and in the dugout for the Minutewomen, tempering the erratic performances from the talented youngsters on the squad.

Chewing the goo to quit the spit

Dave Copeland

'Quitting smoking is easy. I've done it hundreds of times.' — Mark Twain

If this column seems anyway disjointed, senseless or as if the author was in a daze when he wrote it, blame it on Tim Conway.

Not Tim Conwan the comedian, but Tim Conwas the kid I met at summer camp and smoked my first cigarette with. Or you could blame it on my junior high school wrestling team, which made me give up cigarettes and take up the vile and nasty habit of chewing tobacco. In any case, I will not accept responsibility if this column sucks... after eight years of tobacco abuse I quit on Monday and needless to say, this week has been rough.

I do have some help in breaking this addiction. I shelled out 60 bucks for 108 individually-wrapped pieces of Nicorette, the nicotine-laced chewing gum that was made available without a prescription a few weeks ago.

For all practical purposes, Nicorette tastes only slightly better than ass. It is wrapped in tiny little blister packages that are nearly impossible to open unless you happen to have a hacksaw in your book bag. This can be excruciatingly frustrating when your lack of nicotine has reached Def-con One and given your state of mind, you can fully rationalize beating the living piss out of defenseless children.

Now instead of being covered with empty cans of Kodiak and Coke bottles filled with brown, chunks spit the floor of my car is covered with discarded blister packs from Nicorette. When I'm driving, I play the cassette tape that came with Nicorette which has been the one amusing aspect of this week. The tape has an uplifting message as well as a group of people who cheer for you because "You have decided to quit!"

Despite it's disadvantages Nicorette might be the one thing that saves me from vile diseases that will force me to wonder through the rest of my life with cancer-induced determines. As you may have noticed from my columnist photo, I am not the offspring of handsome genes. The products of 50/210 aren't exactly pounding down my door to cast me on the show. Still, I think I am doing slightly better in the looks department than I would if I lost my jaw and the ability to drink fluids and form sentences without drooling.

"My name is Cope. I'm quite homely and half of my face is being burnt in a hospital incinerator as we speak, but I'm really a nice guy. Would you like to go out with me?"

It is interesting to note that my Nicorette starter kit came with the cassette tape, a lengthy instruction manual, dozens of warnings about who should and should not be using the product and handy calendar stickers to mark your quit date. All this for the safe alternative for nicotine addicts. Cigarettes, on the other hand, come only with a lame, government-mandated warning. Chewing tobacco, which I mentioned as my vice of choice for the past several years, has an even more minuscule warning that is barely legible if you have even the slightest vision impairment.

When I was 18 my dad caught me chewing and warned me that if I didn't stop, he'd "be burying [me] when [I was] 20." Now, three years after outlliving his morbid prophesy, I feel as if I have been living on borrowed time. Until I found a way to quit, I was merely going through the motions of preparing for the future. I was quite confident that I would be dead before I could muster anything remotely resembling a career.

In the 1995 state elections, I voted for a referendum that added a 25 cent tax to all tobacco products purchased in this state. Despite the fact that this added nearly $200 to my annual tobacco bill, I was quite confident that the funds generated would be used for anti-smoking programs that could help me.

While some of the funds have been used to combat teenage smoking, the general attitude in society seems to be that if you're already burdened by this addiction, then you're pretty much a lost cause destined to become another statistic in the smoker mortality rate column. Products like Nicorette will at least give smokers and chewers some hope that there is a way out.

As for me, each day gets a little better. I've stopped pulling out my hair, which is good because I didn't have much hair to begin with. I'm still pretty damn homely, but at least my adorable face now has a better chance of staying in one piece.

"My name is Cope, and I'm quite homely and bald, but I'm a really nice guy. Would you like to go out with me?"

It's not perfect, but it sounds a lot better than the drool-punctuated alternative

Fighting the war for peace

Bryan Schwartzman

On Tuesday night 45 University of Massachusetts students returned from Washington D.C. where they participated in the annual AIPAC (American-Israeli Public Affairs Committee) Policy Conference. The conference gave students an opportunity to get an up close look at the American political system by lobbying in Congressional offices and listening to speeches made by national and world leaders.

The conference not only provided students with the opportunity to be activists, but offered the opportunity to search for truth. Students sought out the truth concerning America's policy towards Israel, truth about Jewish identity and the relationship between the diaspora and the state of Israel. Most importantly, there was a search for truth about the peace process.

As lobbyists, we advocated several pro-Israel policies. The first was for Congress to continue our level 4 aid to Israel. Subsequently, we argued that Congress not cut foreign aid on the whole. Foreign aid accounts form less than one percent of the national budget and cutting foreign aid means cutting aid to Israel.

Israel is a vital interest to the United States because it is a dependable democracy in the middle of one of the most important and unstable areas in the world. Israel maintains a level of democracy unparalleled in the region. In 1948 President Harry Truman went against all advice and recognized the state of Israel "because it is right."

We also thanked our senators for passing the Iran Foreign Oil Sanctions Act which will be up for consideration in the House. This act is based on the assumption that Iran is a state which backs terrorism and if they had the capital they would invest in non-conventional weapons. This lobbying was important because foreign affairs are not always a high priority in congressional politics so it was important to explain the significance of the bill to our representatives.

The conference shed some light on the events of the past few weeks, from the conflict in Lebanon to the cease fire. Some critics have equated the actions of the Israeli Army in southern Lebanon with terrorist actions. A distinction must be made between the Hamas, the Hezbollah and the Israeli government.

Labeling the Hamas and Hezbollah groups terrorists can not be attributed to a distortion of the Western media; it is accurate. They are terrorists because their acts of violence are random, with no specific public target. The actions of these groups attempt to cripple a democracy by forcing it to invoke tighter laws and restrictions. Random acts of violence demoralize a nation and paralyze it with fear.

One may not agree with the targets of the Israeli army and believe what they have done is wrong. However, their military actions are not the same as terrorists. The killing of civilians was a horrible mistake and miscalculation, but it was not a deliberate action. In describing the actions of the Israeli government, one must stay away from the use of overt metaphor.

However, there is certainly room to criticize the AIPAC conference and the Israeli government. One of the main problems with the conference was there was little or no representation of the Palestinian people and Arab governments. There was nothing to fill the void left by King Hussein of Jordan, who did not attend the conference.

Many speakers found it easy to blast the other side when there was no way they could retaliate. This was a roadblock to any search for truth. There was not one mention of the United Nations General Assembly Resolution which called for Israeli withdrawal from Lebanon. Even though most nations abstained from voting and there is presently a cease fire, the Western media and government's dismissal of this resolution should have been discussed.

The general population needs to gain a better understanding of Jewish-American, American-Israeli issues, but there is a fair amount of ignorance in the Jewish Community towards the struggle of Arab peoples and nations. There is a small but visible minority who advocates any type of violence against Arabs. This is irrational, hysterical and inhuman thinking. Nobody except extremists wants a life of war. Solidarity within the Jewish community is only significant if it leads to human solidarity and greater understanding between people.

Have you ever heard the Pink Floyd song "Us and Them?" The song identifies thinking of people in terms of "the other" or the "enemy" as the root of divisive mentality and social conflict. If one becomes too nationalistic, the danger always exits to dehumanize the other side. Despite popular conception, the Arab-Israeli conflict is not an age old one.

Unlike the conflict between the Irish and the English, which goes back hundreds of years; the trouble in the Middle East is less than a century old. The peace process presents a great opportunity. Let's not let it become a conflict that lasts for centuries. The enemies of the peace process, whether Arab or Jew, must not be allowed to succeed. Hateful rhetoric and distortion of reality must be combatted. Nobody wins with war, either actual or ideological.

WE NEED AN AFROCENTRIC CULTURE
MINORITIES WERE GETTING TOO MANY ADVANTAGES
RESEGREGATION
Separate but equally bad reasons
P.S. THAT'S A TRAFFIC ISLAND

Back in the days

Brad Davidson

The transition from high school to college can certainly be a most difficult one. For some, it is their first time away from home. Students have to deal with a new setting, new group of friends and especially a new sense of freedom. One minute you have a curfew and a 6:45 a.m. wake up call. The next minute you're drunk at Antonio's, it's 2 a.m. and you have an 8 a.m. history quiz.

As for me each day gets a little better. I've stopped pulling out my hair, which is good because I didn't have much hair to begin with. I'm still pretty damn homely, but at least my adorable face now has a better chance of staying in one piece.

One of the most difficult parts of the high school to college transition for me was the cultural change. Not the environmental culture, but the actual culture within the school. Contrary to popular opinion, I feel that parts of the high school culture were important and necessary. Of the numerous cultural aspects, there are three that seem to stand out most in my little Pee-Wee brain.

Hallway Passes: The concept of hallway passes is something that everyone can relate to. Remember in high school when you needed to use the rest room and you had to interrupt the entire class, raise your hand and ask the teacher if you could be excused? Remember how the teacher would get upset because he/she thought you were raising your hand to answer a question?

What about the times when the teacher wouldn't let you go and you really had to? What about those slicksters who always took the pass and used it for 30 or 40 minutes?

Who could forget those ridiculous passes that some teachers would have? My 10th grade biology teacher, Mr. Shattuck, made us carry the skeleton of a dead cat. My 11th grade history teacher, Mr. Pado made us use a Mickey Mouse doll as the pass. Worst of all, Mrs. English, who ironically taught algebra 2, made us carry a woman's pocketbook.

The most nauseating part of the whole deal was the lovers who would coordinate with each other when getting the pass. I remember this one couple who would always camp outside my 11th grade English class and would suck each others face off until the bell would ring. Right before they departed, one would say, "don't forget to get the pass?" As if they couldn't wait the entire hour before they could basically have sex in front of the entire school again.

Notes: In my professional opinion (professional what?), I believe that notes were the most important part of a student's daily high school day. Now, don't try to pretend that you don't know what notes are. We all wrote them and we all got them.

We also all had special ways in which we folded notes. In my school there were two major ways to fold notes. One way was the traditional football fold. This method is where you would fold the note into a small triangle that resembled the paper football that was used in playing "Study Hall NFL." The second method, which was much more difficult and took me two years to figure out, was where one would fold a note so it was shaped like a rectangle with a little paper lever that you had to pull to open the note.

Notes could make or break a student's day. First of all, if you got no notes, then it would be a horrible day. If you got any notes it was a successful day. If you received a note from a new person it was a great day. Of course the grand daddy of them all for me was if I received a note from a girl that I liked. Bear in mind this did not happen on any sort of regular basis!

Going Out: The most significant difference between high school romance and college romance is the short phrase, "going out." Remember in high school, when you liked a girl and your friends would say, "Hey, why don't you ask her out?" Now keep in mind that the phrase "going out" never actually meant that you were going anywhere. It's not like going out meant that you were going out to dinner or going out to the movie. It just meant that you were dating, or the ever so popular "seeing" each other.

I can clearly remember that nervous feeling in my stomach just before I was going to ask a girl "out." Even though I knew she would say yes because it was already confirmed by nine of my friends and 12 of hers, it was still a scary moment. I would walk up, make some small talk and then pop the question. "Will you go out with me?"

Maybe the worst part of "going out," was breaking up. How many times have we all heard those famous words, "I don't want to go out with you anymore, but I totally want to be friends?" It is one of the worst things to have to say and even more horrible to be on the receiving end. Whenever I was the one being broken up with, I can remember thinking to myself, "It's not a big deal, we weren't really going out anyway."

As you can see, I still culturally live in the past. I don't expect everyone to have the high school culture experience as much as I do, but if you read closely there is much to be learned. Don't be ashamed to miss the part of high school that was most important. So the next time you're in class and you're starting to get bored, write a note. Ask the professor if you can use the pass or bump the girl or guy next you and say, "will you go out with me?".

Letters to the Editor

Collegian unfair

To the editor:

It is fascinating to me that a campus that continuously lauds itself on the fact it is so open to new ideas and different cultures is so intolerant of Jewish students. For a university that praises itself as a multicultural campus and supposedly accepts everyone, it seems that there is a convenient disregard for Jewish people in it's cultural agenda. For a campus that claims to fight for and advocate the rights of people whose cultures have been historically oppressed, it seems ironic that in the name of free speech it defends the actions of individuals at UMass who have consistently oppressed and harassed Jewish students.

When I came to UMass I hoped to leave the Anti-Semitic atmosphere that existed around me during my youth. Whether it was the desecration of the local temple and Jewish community centers, or the many coins that were thrown at me as I was called a "Cheap Jew" during my childhood; the hurt and humiliation continue to linger with me as I get older. Here at this campus, the pain has been recreated, as particular people who have personal vendettas against the Jewish people have attacked a community of students who wish to be educated in an environment free of Anti-Semitism and hate.

This year, like last year, there has been a tirade of Anti- Semitic editorials written into the Daily Collegian, which have been printed with a malicious intent. The article's author bears the name of Hussein Ibish, a man whose history of Anti-Semitism only shows his vindictive intent. On Tuesday, April 30, the man with the pen was out on the prowl again with his private agenda which I believe includes insulting Jewish people, and spreading lies to create fear and hatred towards the Jewish community on this campus. I will not bother to make a list of Mr. Ibish's falsehoods and directly respond to each and I cannot argue against Mr. Ibish since he fails to provide one single source that can be checked to verify his so-called facts. The truth of the matter is that Mr. Ibish claims he has "confidential guidelines" issued by the "Israeli Foreign Ministry" in his editorial entitled, "The Israeli Lobby. How they get your money." I wonder how Mr. Ibish, the graduate student at UMass, has such access to these confidential documents. What is he, a foreign spy?

I must also take this opportunity to criticize the Daily Collegian, which has allowed Mr. Ibish to have more access to this newspaper then any other student on this campus. The Daily Collegian has been quite unfair in the number of editorials by Mr. Ibish that it has printed. The Collegian even admitted on December 11, 1995, that Mr. Ibish violated the policy when his article "A response to all" was printed on the Black Affairs page. Yet, the Collegian did nothing in the following semester to prevent this man from having unequal access to the newspaper. In my opinion, the Collegian has provided an outlet for Anti-Semitic people to write anything, anytime, which I believe to be wrong and very unfair.

I hope that in the future, students and other people will come together and say no to the Anti-Semitic propaganda that is currently spreading throughout our campus. If nobody comes and stands up against this malicious hate, then the lies may as well be true. As one student of the UMass campus, I feel that Jewish students are NOT WELCOME!

There is hope!

To the editor:

After reading several columns in Wednesday's Collegian, I have renewed faith in this, our prized daily register. Past pieces in this section have been plagued with poor (sometimes horrid) grammar, pedestrian (sometimes non- sensual) personal anecdotes and inane (sometimes downright asinine) comments on current affairs.

Hope indeed springs eternal, and with spring in full bloom, perhaps Collegian columnists with talent and potential have decided to loose their abilities on us, their impoverished readers.

Central/Orchard Hill to host local bands in Spring Recess

By Mike Burke
Collegian Staff

Well there may be no official Spring Concert this year, but music fans looking for an all-day outside show in the sun can get ready for tomorrow's Spring Carnival of Music and Light, formerly known as Spring Recess in the Central/ Orchard Hill Residential Areas.

Organized by Jay-boy Melsaac and Jay Bain of local band, Synaesthesia, and Van Meter House Council the Spring Carnival is billed as "the biggest production in a decade featuring local bands." The all local line-up includes Nearl Foreman, Yep, the Mitchells, Scraggy Neck Dog, Roadkill and the Colonel Mustard Trio during the day. The fun will continue once the sun sets as Clovis Point, Funktapuss, Borderland, Nimium Quam and Synaesthesia share the stage.

And what a stage! Set up in the basketball courts between Orchard Hill and Van Meter Residence Hall, the thirty foot by thirty foot stage comes complete with twin scaffold towers of speakers — so the entire campus can hear the show. At night a special computer generated light show is planned by NOISE Laboratories.

Besides the all day music line-up and light show, there is a semi-Carnival set up complete with a dunking booth, an inflated muon bounce, a slip and slide and tournaments for basketball and croquet. Hungry music fans can also buy food from vendors on hand selling hot dogs, veggie burgers, cotton candy, snow cones and popcorn.

If the Spring Carnival isn't enough for you, both the Sylvan and Northeast Residential Areas are holding similar, yet more low-key, events to celebrate the end of the school year. Headlining the Northeast bonanza is the Emergency Broadcast Network, a band known for opening up U2's ZooTV tour in 1992.

H20 & CIV bring back flavor of hardcore

By Adam Dlugacz
Collegian Staff

CIV & H2O
Pearl Street
April 30

It is nearly impossible to capture the energy and vibes present at Tuesday night's CIV/ H2O show in words alone as the show represented everything hardcore is about — kids dancing, singing along, stage diving and simply having a good time.

H2O once again played the excellent set all have become accustomed to over the past few months. Opening with "Here Today, Gone Tomorrow" and closing with an unexpected cover of the Cro-Mags "Hard Times," H2O simply ruled. Every one of their fast-paced and pleasingly melodic songs kept the crowd moving throughout the night.

CIV came on next and somehow managed to top H2O's set. They played all the songs off of their debut album, Set Your Goals and the crowd sang along. They also featured two new songs which showed the next album might be even better then the first. A nice surprise was the cover of Gorilla Biscuits' "Hold Your Ground." The reaction caused by that song brought the roof down.

After the show CIV frontman Anthony Civorelli discussed the band and his outlook on life.

"Personally my goal is to live day by day trying to get better —to handle stuff and be as solid as I can be," commented Civorelli. "That's my thing and whatever I do I'm going to give it one hundred percent."

The same is true for the band, according to Civorelli. "We just want to play the best we can every night to different people, while still playing to hardcore kids. But we don't want to preach to the converted and that's a beating playing in front of people who don't get it. That's what's hard about being in a band we could play strictly hardcore shows every night.

"If you want to broaden it and have a message you have to play out. We want to be a good hardcore band but to also to have acceptance without jeopardizing or compromising what we believe and we're not going to water it down."

Throughout the interview Civorelli concentrated on the band's message and his effectiveness of getting it across to the audience.

"The fact that they [the audience] are there is good enough," Civorelli said. "It shows that maybe they're willing to find out what it's all about. When we come out and play different places, not to hardcore kids, I come out and explain the lyrics before the songs so they understand what it's all about. If I change the way one kid thinks or opens one person's mind that's good enough."

One of the best and most important aspects to CIV are their lyrics. Civorelli, "Everyday things inspire me when I'm bummed out, or about personal short comings or things you see in other people that you wish you could develop in yourself."

Civorelli has been straight edge all his life and discussed the idealogy in depth. "Straight edge can be a fascist thing but it isn't meant to be. Even when we first got into it had an elitist feel, but we got over that," he said. "It got very closed off, but it is also a support group for people who don't want to do certain things. It's not about alienation, punk and hardcore is about letting everyone in."

Finally after show filled with hard core dancing, Civorelli discussed dancing at shows. "Dancing isn't a problem, jerks are. Most kids come down to have fun but there are people who stand at the edge of the pit and throw a cheap shot and then look to start a fight.

"People who don't know what it's about who are there to be tough and it's a macho thing for them, but that's not what it's about. It is a release for spastics and nitsfits who don't have any other outlet. It's a place where people can chill and be supportive and get things out."

Hype doesn't reveal truth about Thurman

By Justin Daniel Smith
Collegian Staff

THE TRUTH ABOUT CATS AND DOGS
Directed by Michael Lehmann with Uma Thurman, Janeane Garofalo, Ben Chaplin
Playing at Mt. Farms Four

Before The Truth about Cats and Dogs was released it was being heralded as this year's While You Were Sleeping. If a movie is being hyped as a comparison, shouldn't it be compared to a good movie? And if not, shouldn't it at least be compared to a movie that has some sort of place in film history? Fortunately Cats and Dogs overcomes its comparison, at least slightly.

Janeane Garofalo is Abby Barnes, a talk-radio D.J. who has more in common with animals than with people. In fact her radio show— with the same title as the film— in which she gives advice to troubled pet-owners, is her only daily interaction with people.

One day as the witty Abby dishes out her humorous domestic advice, she receives a call from Brian (Ben Chaplin), a lovable photographer who has a snarling dog staring him down during a photo shoot. Abby saves the day and with her advice he decides to keep the dog.

Brian is enamored with Abby and her help, so he asks her on a date. The self-conscious Abby stands him up, passing him off as a psycho all the while believing that no one would be interested in her once they saw her in person.

But along comes Abbey's new leggy supermodel neighbor, Noelle (Uma Thurman, rocking the Rachel coif), who stumbles into her life, anger and willing to befriend her.

Noelle pops up at Abby's radio show right before Brian comes to plead his case. In her moment of weakness Abby passes him off to Noelle, who is forced to steal her identity. So Noelle becomes "Abby" and the real Abby becomes "Donna."

In a modern day version of Cyrano de Bergerac, both Noelle and Abby fall for Brian. But who wouldn't— he's the utmost of Renaissance Men complete with a British accent and sensitive side.

Abby charms Brian over the phone, with a conversation that runs from dusk 'till dawn, climaxing with a comical look at phone sex. Noelle, still acting as the visage of "Abby," uses her beauty to try to attract him.

Few surprises pop up along the way, but the film somehow is able to keep the audience interested in its light- hearted story. The ending— which is utterly predictable after the first 10 minutes— delivers, if you let it, a warm feelgood sensation that will having you sighing "Ahhh" far after the movie's closure.

The problem is that Janeane Garofalo is not really ugly. Sure she's short and stubby and not half the beauty of Uma Thurman, but she still has adorable qualities. Movieland has once again failed to best portray the story of personality over beauty. Last year's lesser known Circle of Friends is quite a bit better and less cheesy.

Abby and Noelle are funny together. Thurman throws in some dialogue that might have been found in her last hit movie (no need to be reminded of what that might be). Garofalo holds her own as a comedienne and betters herself than the pop nostalgia queen that she was previously known for in Reality Bites.

Relative newcomer, Brit Ben Chaplin, who shined last year in French export Queen Margot, will likely become someone to watch out for in the future. He is an Everyman that embodies Brian as the dream man that every woman would be interested in.

Director Michael Lehmann, who fell off radically after his 1989 debut, Heathers, is beginning to return to form. Since then he has made the completely abominable Hudson Hawk as well as the This is Spinal Tap inane rip-off Airheads. Although it would be hard to get worse than that, he is able to depart from his fallen state and will likely be more prolific and making better films in the future.

But The Truth About Cats and Dogs has its moments. It's aimed for mass consumption and mass appeal— any deviation would upset the flow. But it works as a decent, turn off your brain, date movie. C

Alcott's first romantic tale will be published

Unpublished work found in Harvard Library by two scholars

By Rachel Zoll
Associated Press

BOSTON — A beautiful but penniless governess discovers she is an heiress. Her pure heart wins her the love of a dashing English lord.

Louisa May Alcott wrote this romantic tale when she was 18, but few knew about her unpublished first novel until two Alcott scholars found the manuscript in the stacks at a Harvard University library.

"I've come up with a lot of nice things before, but none as good as this," Joel Myerson, an English professor at the University of South Carolina, said Tuesday.

The manuscript, titled The Inheritance, was found along with a note from Alcott claiming authorship of the story. The manuscript was listed in the library card catalog for the last 22 years and had been checked out at least five times by other scholars who apparently never thought to publish it.

The card catalog lists it as "The Inheritance, a manuscript; Boston, 1849; 166 pages, unpublished; her first novel."

Alcott's journals never mentioned the tale, written in 1849, predating her first published novel, Moods, in 1864, and her most famous novel, Little Women, in 1869.

Myerson and his collaborator, Daniel Shealy of the University of North Carolina at Charlotte, said they first saw the manuscript in 1988.

It was handwritten and difficult to decipher, and they only recently finished transcribing it.

"When we read the first couple of pages we thought the novel was worth photocopying. When we finally got around to transcribing it, we realized how good it was," Myerson said.

Myerson said he wasn't surprised by some news reports heralding the manuscript as "newly discovered."

"People would say they discovered it even if it was sitting on the steps of the White House," he said. "No one is going to write a headline saying someone finally paid attention to a long-ignored manuscript."

Now Hollywood producers are vying for rights to the story, and book publishers will get their first shot at it this week, said Todd Shuster, a partner in Zachary Shuster, a Boston-based literary agency.

Agents negotiating the deal have been flooded with calls since word of the manuscript spread among major studios, Shuster said.

You're not going to believe this, but sometimes for fun when I'm walking with a friend and we're getting ready to cross a busy street, I'll push him out in front of a car which is just far enough away so that he is able to avoid being hit if he runs as fast as he can .....to the other side.

I only do this with very good friends. We all deserve to have a good time, and sometimes there's no one else around to play with.

Actually, I do it for his own good.

When's he gonna learn?

Men's lax postseason hopes riding on Brown game

By Matt Voutour
Collegian Staff

For the No. 12 Massachusetts men's lacrosse team, Saturday's showdown with No. 7 Brown (2 p.m. at Richard F. Garber Field) is as big as it gets.

How big? UMass coach Greg Cannella, who is not one to overstate, had this to say about the game.

"This is as big as it gets," he said. "This is the biggest game of my life, as a coach, or as a player."

With the stakes this high, the Minutemen have a lot to gain from this game.

An NCAA tournament bid — This isn't a guarantee if UMass wins, because unlike in previous years, this game isn't being played for the mythical New England Championship. Harvard beat both UMass and Brown during the regular season to capture the NE title leaving the Minutemen (6–5) and the Bears (7–5) scrambling to get into the NCAAs.

A victory, coupled with UMass' impressive strength of schedule, will likely get the Minutemen a tourney bid. Brown is definitely in with a win, but even with a loss will get consideration.

Cannella feels that his team will be out of the running if it loses on Saturday.

"If UMass wins, we both have a shot at going," he said. "I think if we lose we're out.

Bragging rights — Even without the tournament ramifications, a UMass versus Brown game is a heated situation. The two teams that have been the class of New England forever, hold bragging rights up as very important.

"It's a long standing rivalry between these two teams," Cannella said. "No matter what the case is, it's always a big game."

Revenge — The Bears have won the last two meetings between the two teams, and a year ago, Brown beat the Minutemen 18–8. The Bears lead the all-time series, 20–14–1. All of this is in the back of UMass' mind as the Minutemen try to narrow that margin.

"Over the last two years, they have really put it to us," Cannella said. "That's something I'd rather forget. Anytime you lose to a team, the next year, you want to get them. Anytime you lose twice by the margins that we've lost... A victory would really be sweet."

Senior Pride — If UMass loses the game it will almost definitely be the final games for the six UMass seniors. The chance to extend their career at least one more game is a driving factor for UMass.

"I hope what this means to the seniors is that this is their final home game and that they'll want to play well on Garber Field," he said. "This may be a last shot at collegiate lacrosse."

Like they do every year, the Bears will bring a talented squad into the showdown. Led by snipers Brian McNally (27 goals and 16 assists) and Robin Prince (27 goals, 11 assists), and the all-around impressive offensive play of Josh Selig (20

Top seeded softball begins A–10s today

By Fred Hurlbrink, Jr.
Collegian Staff

Excluding an oddly scheduled doubleheader with Princeton on May 7, two days after the Atlantic 10 Tournament, the postseason – the real season – is here for the University of Massachusetts softball team.

It all starts today at noon on Totman Field, as the top-seeded Minutewomen host the No. 4 seed, LaSalle, in the first match-up of the A-10 tournament. Temple and Rhode Island will square off in the second game of the first round, scheduled to begin at 2 p.m.

UMass emerged victorious from both regular season contests with LaSalle, a twin bill in Philadelphia, Pa. on April 20. The Minutewomen won the first contest 3–1 as Liz Wagner out-dueled LaSalle's Janice McGinty, despite three Massachusetts errors. Danielle Henderson completely blew away the Explorers in the second game, holding them to a pair of singles and no runs. Henderson struck out six en route to winning her 14th game in a row, 5–0.

LaSalle has won five-of-six since dropping the twin bill to the Minutewomen. Its three-game winning streak to end the season matches its longest of the campaign. The Explorers' longest losing skid of the year was four games, as they lost two to Towson State before they faced UMass.

The Explorers employ a strong pair of young pitchers in the freshman McGinty and sophomore Vicki Gross. Standing only 5-foot-3, McGinty (17-13, 1.96) has been the work horse of the LaSalle rotation, eating up two-thirds (206-2/3) of the total innings pitched (312-2/3). Gross has started 13 games for the Explorers, logging a 5-8 record with a 2.94 ERA.

As strong as the LaSalle pitching has been, it doesn't quite compare to the two Minutewomen on the hill. Danielle Henderson, who was hit by a pitch in practice Wednesday but should be ready to go today, has been spectacular in her past 18 starts. She has won all of those decisions recording an ERA of 0.66 in that span. Overall, she is 18-5 with a 1.15 ERA.

Liz Wagner has been tremendous as well. The junior from Sidney, N.Y., has started 21 games this season, allowing a minuscule 22 earned runs in 139-2/3 innings. After sitting out last season due to a back injury, Wagner (14-6, 1.10) is a candidate for A-10 Pitcher of the Year.

The two team's offenses are at different ends of the spectrum. The Minutewomen, as a squad, are hitting at a .309 clip while the Explorers are batting .267. LaSalle has three regulars hitting at .290 or better. In contrast, eight UMass starters are hitting better than .290, four above the .333 mark.

Sophomore Kim Gutridge and junior Sam Cardenas are the leading Minutewomen sluggers. Gutridge is hitting a robust .368 with 14 doubles and 29 RBI; while Cardenas has upped her average

MacNeil and Burke bid farewell on Senior Day, as Harvard takes game

By Justin C. Smith
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team finished out its regular season yesterday at home, and said goodbye to two of its teammates at Totman Field, as it hosted 12th ranked Harvard. The high powered Crimson put a damper on the Senior Day festivities, dropping UMass 16–7.

The loss ends UMass' season at 4–10, but coach Francesca McClellan said that she felt the season was a success and that the score of yesterday's game was not an indication of the actual events on the field.

"It was a very nice game. I'm very pleased with it on the whole," McClellan commented. "This was our fifth game in about eight days. They hung in there and fought the whole game, until late it was a really great game.

"I really don't feel like the score really reflects what the game really was. I think we gave them a run for their money and I was really happy with the ending."

After Harvard's Erin Cleary's goal opened the game with less than minute gone, UMass' Aura Koruz knotted the match quickly, scoring on a breakaway, beating Crimson goalie Shana Barghouti to the lower left side at 1:41.

Harvard then scored the next two, before Jenn Herker and Diane MacNeil scored less than a minute apart to knot the scored again at three. At this point the much taller Crimson began to assert itself and took the lead for good when Maria Hennessey scored the second of her six goals on the day.

"Our feet were a little slow, so we worked the body positioning as well as we could have in the beginning and that was a disadvantage to us," McClellan said. "I think we could have taken that disadvantage away if we had been a little quicker on our feet."

Just before halftime, the Harvard attacker [Hennessey] intercepted an outlet pass and ripped twine for the fourth time, which gave the Crimson its largest lead to that point 7–4.

UMass hung tough early in the second half, as tallies by Herker, MacNeil and Stephanie Walsh kept the Minutewomen close. With less than 18 minutes remaining, UMass' deficit was only three, at 10–7.

From that point on it was all Harvard, as the Crimson outscored the Minutewomen 6–0 the rest of the way.

"I think this really showed that we've really come a long way," McClellan said. "The progress has been just unbelievable. I'm really excited about where we are."

Minutewoman Senior Day: Elaine Burke and Diane MacNeil played their final games at UMass yesterday, and spoke of their times in the maroon and white.

"It's very emotional," MacNeil said. "It's been a long road. Elaine and I started when this was nothing. I've changed a lot as a person with this team. I stayed five years here, and I stayed to play lacrosse as well as finish my two minors.

"I feel like I've grown so much this year. I wish I could have a couple more years," she said. "Especially me not playing high school like these girls play. I wanted more time [to be with them], but it's just been so exciting."

"I'm sad that it's the end, not just of playing lacrosse but just playing on a team," Burke added. "I've definitely learned a lot from the experience. I feel I worked really hard to end it as best I could. It's still sad that's it's over, because you work so hard for so long and now it's over."

The memories that were made on the field have bred friendships that will last between the players.

"The friendships are what I'll miss most," MacNeil said. "They are friends that are just unbelievable. I have to come back and visit. My sister will be here next year, and I'll have 20 people to crash with."

MacNeil finishes her career with eight goals and four assists for 12 points, while Burke had eight tallies and two assists in her four years at UMass.

"We're going miss them," McClellan said of MacNeil and Burke. "You ask them to do anything and they do it so well. I'm really going to miss their hustle, effort everything."

Massachusetts overpowers Northeastern, 8-4

Minutemen's 17-game win streak is longest in Division I baseball

By Chris Stamm
Collegian Staff

The walls were lower, the bleachers smaller, but the end result was the same as last week's Beanpot Championship.

The Massachusetts baseball team beat Northeastern once again on Wednesday, 8–4, this time at the Friedman Diamond in Brookline as opposed to the confines of Fenway Park.

The win over the Huskies extended the Minutemen's winning streak to 17, the longest current streak in NCAA Div. 1 baseball. University of Massachusetts boosts its record to an impressive 32–9 while Northeastern falls to 12–20.

Unlike last week's 1–0 squeaker which saw UMass walk away with the prize, the bats were swinging on both sides of the diamond. However, it was the Huskies who came out of the gate first, scoring three runs in the first five innings to the Minutemen's one run.

UMass heated up in the sixth, scoring five runs to take control of the game and wrap up another win. Junior pinch hitter Brad Gorrie, who sat out of last Sunday's doubleheader with St. Joseph's due to illness, ripped a clutch RBI single sparking the rally. Gorrie stayed in the game at his usual shortstop to go 2-for-3 with the RBI, while scoring one run.

Junior third baseman Ryan Thistle, who went 3-for-5 with three RBI in addition to scoring a run, came through with a two-out, two-run double in the top of the eighth to cinch the win. Also adding two hits to the offensive mix were freshmen Bryan Mazzaferro and Brian Samela, and senior Andy Kuh.

On the mound, freshman southpaw Bill Cooke (5.1 ERA) picked up the win, improving his mark to 4–0. Cooke worked 5.1 innings, allowing four runs on nine hits, while striking out five and walking none. Junior Steve Levy (3.2 ERA) earned his third save of the year. In the final 3.2 scoreless innings, Levy gave up two hits, while striking out one.

The Huskies were hapless in the pitching department, sending five different hurlers against UMass to no avail. In the end, Peter Donaghue (0–1 on the year) took it on the chin for Northeastern.

Wednesday's action kicked off a five game series with non-conference opponents as the Minutemen prepare to travel to Boyertown, Pa. for the Atlantic 10 Championships May 10–12, where they boast the No. 1 seed in the A–10 East.

Sudanese plane crash kills 53

KHARTOUM, Sudan (AP) — A Sudanese passenger plane was attempting an emergency landing during a sandstorm when it crashed in a field, killing all 53 people aboard, officials said Saturday.

The private Federal Airlines jet was en route to Khartoum when it crashed at 10 p.m. Friday. Among the dead were 26 students at Bahr el-Ghazal University in southern Sudan.

Sand had covered the runways of Khartoum airport, so the pilot of the Russian-made Antonov 24 tried to land in an area cleared for construction of a new airport outside the capital, officials said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

The pilot crashed because of poor visibility, Brig. el-Tayeb Ibrahim Mohamed Kheir, Sudan's information minister, told Egypt's Middle East News Agency.

The crash killed 48 passengers and five crew members, all of them Sudanese, Kheir said.

The jet struck a newly built, empty house near the cleared field, the officials said. No deaths or injuries were reported on the ground.

Among the dead was Moheideen Abdullah al-Fageeh, a retired general who was the manager of Federal Airlines.

Gingrich returns to talk shows

WASHINGTON (AP) — Newt Gingrich returned from his self-imposed exile from TV interviews Sunday and showed that his aim for the political jugular was as sure as always, accusing President Clinton of taking an extremist position on abortion and making false statements about GOP plans for Medicare.

The House speaker was nearly as acerbic in taking on fellow Republican Sen. Alfonse D'Amato, who said last week that Gingrich-style politics was hurting the party. "He's just wrong," Gingrich said on CBS' "Face the Nation." "I don't know why he is wandering around saying these things."

Gingrich last December announced he was staying away from TV cameras for a while, acknowledging that his confrontational style and habit of shooting from the hip might be contributing to negative reactions to the GOP agenda.

The decision followed his controversial remarks that he had toughened his stance in budget talks because he thought Clinton had snubbed him during a ride on Air Force One.

Since then he has taped one interview for CNN's "Late Edition," but has not appeared live on any of the Sunday news programs.

Gingrich, wearing a blue tie emblazoned with elephants, quickly showed that his taste for partisan combat was undiminished as he lashed out at Clinton's veto of a bill banning a type of late-term abortion.

Two collisions hospitalize nine

By Daniel Sullivan
Collegian Staff

AMHERST — Nine people were rushed to Cooley Dickinson Hospital after four cars were involved in two separate head–on collisions on Main Street.

Amherst Police Department would not reveal information about the victims.

"All the people could walk, but everyone was injured in a big way," witness Joe Cole said, who tried to help the victims.

The two accidents happened almost simultaneously within 50 yards of each other on Main Street, near the intersection with Schumway Avenue, said Cole. The time of the accident was listed at 7:33 p.m., said Sergeant Mike Sullivan.

"I heard a sound, like four bangs. I then heard someone screaming," University of Massachusetts student and resident of Main Street, David Strollo said. "I saw someone kneeling down. It was freaky."

Strollo, who was on the phone at the time, immediately called 911. Amherst Police Department responded to the scene within minutes, according to Strollo.

A Plymoth Acclaim and an unidentified truck collided head on, said Cole. He saw one person leaving the Acclaim, bleeding from the mouth. The truck, with two people inside, took the worst punishment, according to Cole. Tow trucks removed those vehicles within 45 minutes of the accident.

A Toyota Celica with Massachusetts plates collided with a Saab from Maine. These vehicles collided in front of Salem Place, east of Shumway Avenue. Three individuals were in the Celica that was heading westbound. An air bag inflated on the passengers side of the Saab. Cole said three people were in the Saab. It was facing eastward with a smashed in front end and a smashed windshield.

"[The Celica] was over the yellow line," Cole said. "I overheard that the Celica kid in the passenger side was in critical condition."

Salem Place resident, J.M. Creedon said the intersection between Main Street and Shumway Avenue was not tricky. She noticed that people speed all the time on the road marked at 35 miles per hour.

Police would not comment on the speed of the vehicles. People at the scene of the accident say that the skid marks were roughly 15 yards long.

"A few years ago, a woman was killed [50 yards from this accident] when she hit a tree," said Creedon. "This is really scary."

Three police cruisers, a fire truck and a fire and rescue truck reported to the accident scene. UMass police were not called to the scene.

Sullivan said the accident was under investigation. He was unable to comment further.

Studies show four-percent drop in 1995 crime rate

By Michael J. Sniffen
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Violent crime dropped 4 percent last year as overall serious offenses reported to police declined for the fourth straight year. But one expert said a slight increase in larceny foreshadows a surge in youth crime.

Reporting Sunday on preliminary data for 1995, the FBI said the overall total for seven major crimes was down 2 percent from 1994.

Overall reported crime was down in every region, led by a 4 percent decline in the Northeast.

Scholars, law enforcement officers and Democratic and Republican members of Congress hailed the data but unanimously warned that the large national trends mask an alarming rise in teen-age violence.

"We shouldn't be lulled into a false sense of security," said Rep. Bill McCollum, R-Fla., chairman of the House crime subcommittee.

Attorney General Janet Reno pledged to "continue to put more cops on the beat, get guns off the street and put violent criminals behind bars."

In cities of more than 1 million residents, overall reported crime fell by 6 percent. Suburban counties and most mid-sized cities also reported declines, but rural counties showed a 3 percent increase.

Among violent crimes, murder dropped the most — 8 percent.

Robbery was down 7 percent; rape 6 percent and aggravated assault 3 percent.

Total property crimes dropped 1 percent, with auto theft down by 6 percent and burglary 5 percent.

The only increase was in larceny-theft — up 1 percent.

"This is the first glimmer of the impact of the next generation," said Professor Alfred Blumstein of Carnegie-Mellon University, "because larceny — such as bicycle theft, stealing auto parts and shoplifting — is the crime with the youngest criminals. The peak age for larcenists is 15 or 16." Most burglars and robbers are older.

"In the other crimes, what's going on among teen-agers is being swamped by much larger numbers of older folks who are growing out of the high crime ages and giving up crime," Blumstein added.

James Alan Fox, dean of criminal justice at Northeastern University, explained that "this calm before the crime storm won't last much longer."

The murder rate for teen-agers grew by 22 percent between 1990-94. Fox said. "Over the next 10 years, the teen population will expand by 17 percent, because there are now 39 million children under age 10, more than we've had since the 1950s when the Baby Boomers were in grade school."

In addition to citing the aging of Baby Boomers, experts and officials attributed the four-year crime decline to closer police work with citizens, longer prison sentences for violent criminals, crackdowns on illegal guns, declining unemployment and rising public intolerance for crime.

"For five straight years before I took office, violent crime increased in America," President Clinton said. "Our tough and smart decisions to put more cops on the street and get kids, guns and drugs off the street... are now beginning to reverse the trend."

UMass student shines on rink

By Anastasia Kudrez
Collegian Staff

Before University of Massachusetts student Geoff Gallo took third place at the U.S. Adult National Figure Skating Championships, he only had a month to prepare.

"I'd only been working on the program itself for a month, and only twice a week," he said. "On the morning of the competition my jumps had flaws at 7 a.m., but by 10 a.m. I guess I fixed them."

On April 18–21 Gallo was one of 500 competitors at the Olympic Center in Lake Placid, NY. Skating to music from the movie Dragon, judges ranked him third in the Mens Freestyle Event. Gallo, who has skated for three years, competed in the non–qualifying level, which does not require placement in a prior competition.

Gallo said he picked up skating quickly because of years of dancing experience.

"I did a lot of clubbing, contact improvisation, a form that involves physical contact with a partner in a "gymnastics" dance and 10 years of African dancing," he said.

Three years ago he started skating at the Mullins Center's public sessions during winter session.

"Three months into it, I decided to pursue skating and to get a serious coach," he said.

Gallo expressed thanks and respect for his coach, Kathy Wilkens, who has "amazing speed, power, control and technical ability every time she's on the ice."

Gallo's love for skating took off immediately, and for the first year and a half he spent 12–20 hours practicing every week. Gallo said he loves skating's beauty and grace, and the fact that he gets to go really fast.

"I've been burned from the adult session of the Amherst Skating Club," he said. "I'm just too fast. I've never collided with anyone, but I still make them nervous."

Gallo said he hopes to pursue pairs skating in the future. Although he does not have a partner in mind, he is looking for a powerful, fast skater "who can zoom."

"It can be really wild, if you've got someone with the right energy level," he said.

Now academic pressure limits Gallo's time to 6 or 7 hours on the ice each week. He expects to receive a degree in Computer Systems Engineering in 1998. After graduation, Gallo plans on composing and creating sound effects for film and theater. He said he will continue skating, because it keeps growing and changing for him.

"Ice skating keeps being magical. I don't think I'll be losing my interest," he said.

Kenyan court looks at cure for AIDS

By Chege Mbitiru
Associated Press

NAIROBI, Kenya — As a presidential adviser prescribes a potion he claims cures AIDS, a court begins hearings this week to see if it should allow sales of a remedy that critics say belongs in a traveling circus.

The saga of Arthur Obel, a professor of medicine at the University of Nairobi, and his potion, Pearl Omega, began in February when Obel announced in the ruling party's newspaper that he had discovered a cure for AIDS.

The news spread rapidly in a country where AIDS is rampant. The World Health Organization estimates that 1 million of Kenya's 26 million inhabitants are infected with the HIV virus, which causes AIDS.

Obel, who is also scientific adviser to Kenya's longtime leader, President Daniel arap Moi, immediately began prescribing Pearl Omega, ignoring normal procedures for approving drugs.

The Health Ministry first backed Obel. Health Minister Joshua Angatia told Parliament that the opaque liquid was an herbal concoction, "but in this country we accept herbal medicine."

But as criticism swelled, the ministry changed course and urged caution.

An assistant minister of health declared the drug illegal on Sunday and told Kenyans not to buy it. The Kenya Medical Association has advised doctors not to prescribe it "until its efficacy and safety have been established scientifically."

With general elections due next year, Obel's declaration that the government would make Pearl Omega available to poor Kenyans prompted a newspaper columnist to suspect some creative campaign financing.

Kenya's leading newspaper was even more blunt. "When will this Pearl Omega circus leave town?" The Daily Nation asked Saturday.

Kenyans may find out this week which way the circus is headed.

Obel is to be questioned Tuesday by three professional bodies: the Pharmacy and Poisons Board, which approves drugs for use in Kenya; the Medical Practitioners' and Dentists' Board, which licenses doctors and oversees medical ethics; and the National AIDS Committee, a government department that is fighting the spread of the disease.

On Wednesday, a High Court judge is scheduled to begin hearing a case brought by the Kenya AIDS Society, an organization of AIDS victims that says desperate patients are being conned. It wants Pearl Omega banned.

"We cannot say that Pearl Omega is effective, is working, is helping patients, until Obel it proves to us," said Dr. D.M. Owili, chairman of the National AIDS Committee.

Obel has failed to disclose Pearl Omega's chemical make-up, publish details of his clinical trials in a scientific journal or answer questions about his research.

But he has continued to offer the drug to patients. A price list shows a full treatment of Pearl Omega available to Kenyans for $545 and foreigners for up to $5,000. It was not immediately clear what a full treatment involved.

Last Wednesday, Obel's Kenya Biodiversity Center, at the University of Nairobi, released a document entitled "Anti-AIDS Drug Trial Through the Support of the Republic of Kenya."

According to the document, Pearl Omega breaks down proteins and "inhibits the replication of HIV so fast and so effectively that mutation simply cannot arise."

Pump friction

A $1.29 for a gallon of gas is a bit steep. Unfortunately the end of the gouging may not be in site even with President Clinton's plan to sell 12 million barrels of reserve oil.

During the Gulf War, President Bush took similar action in an attempt to stem the rising cost of gas. His response worked, but not immediately. Instead they held constant, and only fell shortly after the war ended.

Obviously there are no guarantees that prices will decline any time soon. These price increases have nothing to do with a war in the Middle East — neither Israel nor Lebanon are oil producing nations.

Increases in oil prices have some major repercussions for the economy and therefore politics as well. These increases could lead to the same problems of the 1970s: inflation. As the price of gasoline rises, so will the prices of other items such as food and compact discs because the cost of transportation will increase.

When prices rise, people can not afford to buy as much. Economists would say real wages dropped — real wages are wages adjusted for inflation. When wages drop, people will demand higher wages to compensate for higher prices. As wages increase either prices will increase more, or employment will drop. If both occur, then the problem is known as stagflation.

Obviously this will have a dramatic effect upon everyone from our grandparents to us. Although tuition and fees may not rise because of inflation it is likely to rise for other reasons, other costs of education that do not usually rise quickly such as books and food. For those who are graduating, they may not find jobs if they do not already have one.

However, there are a few high points if an oil crisis causes inflation. When students repay loans, they will pay with a lower valued dollar. Actually anyone who is in debt and has a fixed interest rate, will benefit from inflation when paying back loans.

Another oil crisis could lead to innovations in fuel efficient technologies. The oil crisis of the 1970's lead to more fuel efficient and better cars. Today's cars are cleaner burning than those of 1970's, so pollution was partially stemmed as a result. A crisis could renew interest in electric cars, and solar and wind electric generation. It could even possibly lead to even greater technological leaps such as fusion energy.

These innovations are long term results. The short term results are the higher prices and economic instability. When the economy is problematic, politics become unstable too.

The potential of another oil crisis jeopardizes Clinton's re- election campaign. The sale of 12 million barrels of reserve oil is an attempt to save the nation from an oil crisis. If the price stabilizes and my above predictions are wrong, then the people will re-elect Clinton. But, if I am right, Clinton's popularity will move inversely with the price of gas. I am looking forward to an interesting summer at the pump.

Just Clowning Around?

I've recently discovered that my destiny is to become a clown. Forget all this classical archaeology stuff and writing and art as well. Maybe I should be in clown college instead of here.

I can't help being silly, or "happy dappy" almost every single day, for that matter. Nor is it exactly a curse. It feels good to be able to enter a room to see people's faces light up and their mouths spread into a smile. For one moment they drop everything they're doing and let me amuse them. It feels so good to be able to make people happy.

Stacey Shackford

I also like painting myself. Even in high school, I would seize every opportunity to paint my face blue. Concerts are great excuses to paint your eyes, cover yourself in glitter, and draw things on your cheeks. For Earth Day this year, my friend and I painted faces all day. After the reactions we received early in the morning walking through town because of our own facial masterpieces, we've decided to do it once a week just for fun. This weekend I got completely covered in mud to the point that I found live worms in my clothing and had to clean dirt out of my ears and brush it out of my teeth. It was the most fun I had all semester.

I came to my lovely clown conclusion while sitting in the garden of the pink towers trying to sort out the entire direction of my life in a short ten minutes on my way to the basement to write this silly thing. It's about that time where the year is about to come to a close and we have nothing to do but reflect on it, study for exams, make final arrangements for the summer, and think all the while, "Was it worth it?" and, "What the hell am I doing with all this stuff?"

I know, personally, I am having a difficult time coming to any conclusions about anything, especially about a topic so important and with such far reaching implications as this one. Many of my friends are seriously considering taking time off and/or transferring next semester after barely scraping through this one.

The fact of the matter is, it's an expensive indecision to live with. I know that many people tell students not to worry about their major, especially in their first two years. "College is a time of experimentation and of delving a little deeper into a variety of interests before making a final decision; you might even learn a thing or two about things you would have never thought about before and may change your mind entirely. That's the beauty of it," they say. But at anywhere from $9,000–18,000 a year, you don't exactly want to spend the time floating around aimlessly.

All of my interests lie in untraditional fields, none of which will make any money. My dream is to live in Greece, uncovering ancient civilizations and making unprecedented discoveries. Yet it pains me to go home and have my parents constantly ask me if I still am planning on archaeology, with enormous Chesire grins on their faces, as if they know it's not going to happen, as if they're my puppeteers and know far in advance in which direction my strings will be pulled. Scarier still is the fact that they are probably right. They see me as a child clinging onto a silly fantasy and are simply waiting for me to mature into reality.

Argh! It angers me so much to think that I am so predictable in that way and that people are able to so easily figure me out when I have yet to even figure myself out.

Moreover, I have begun to have thought envy. My friend has this ancient typewriter that she leaves around her room. She encourages people to use it to simply type what's on their minds. I use it whenever I'm at a loss of what to write or what I'm thinking or simply to sort things out in my mind. The scary thing is, when we both use it at any random time and exchange the fruits of our typing efforts, I actually envy her thoughts. I wish that the random things that spill out of her head came instead from mine.

When you begin to envy other people's thoughts you can pretty much take that as a sign that you are not exactly comfortable with what's going on in your own head. If you can't even be comfortable with your thoughts how can you be comfortable with anything you do?

This realization made me reevaluate how I was spending my time here. For many of us this is a decisive time in our lives. The important thing to constantly do is prioritize what is important to you. For me, the most important thing, and that which is most suited to me, is to make others happy. Whether or not I direct my entire life and all my efforts into this mission is something I cannot say at this time. I simply know that I must keep it a prominant part of my life.

It is also important to trust yourself and your abilities. Without that, there is no way you will ever get anywhere in life and still be satisfied.

And while you're at it, paint your face blue every once in awhile or play in the mud. You'd be amazed at how important it is in the general scheme of things.

At what cost?

The war is on until Israel ceases to exist and the last Jew in the world has been eliminated.

Israel is completely evil and must be eliminated from the face of the Earth," according to Hezbollah Secretary General Hassan Nasrallah. Hezbollah, the militant Islamic terrorist group, whose 70 Katusha rocket attacks have rendered 46 Israeli casualties, is an organization without mercy. During the attacks of April 14, 17 and 18, Hezbollah intentionally fired Katusha rockets from a site dangerously near the United Nations protected Qana refugee camp.

It is no mistake that this site was chosen to attack from. The troops manning the U.N. camp tried to get Hezbollah to cease their fire from their location 1000 feet from the camp but to no avail. The tragedy of the situation was that without Israel's awareness several hundred Lebanese refugees had taken amnesty at the base rather than to complete the trek further north with their fellow countrymen. By the close of the day 75 of them were killed by Israeli artillery trying to stop the Katushas.

Israel warned the civilians several times in Arabic on Southern Lebanonese radio to avoid areas from which Katushas were being fired. Some refugees heeded the warnings, whereas others ignored them, or were prevented from evacuating by Hezbollah. Israel was careful to avoid civilian targets, and painstakingly aimed only at places from which bombing attacks have occurred. Civilized armies don't place their arsenals amid civilian populations. However, as one Hezbollah leader, Mohammed Raad told Beirut's al Nahar newspaper, "the civilian population constitutes our defensive belt."

The Israeli Defense Force (IDF) was left with a choice to answer Hezbollah's fire or leave their own civilian targets open to Hezbollah rockets. Certainly unaware of the refugees' presence, any other country in Israel's situation would have made the same choice. An IDF spokesman reported from radar tracking that Hezbollah fired a second set of rockets from another civilian target, and Israel urged the U.N. prior to the tragic act not to allow Hezbollah to fire from within U.N. protected refugee areas. The U.N. refused to provide Israel with adequate information to avoid the Qana incident.

"The United Nations reported to Israel several days before Qana that 5000-6000 refugees were being put up in U.N. installations. They refused to provide the IDF with more specific reports when asked," reported Galei Tzahal (Army Radio).

Hezbollah ignored the warnings from the U.N., and two U.N. officials were injured by Hezbollah fire while attempting to persuade Hezbollah into changing its origin of fire.

"It is because Hezbollah [and Hamas] think Jewish life cheap that they make Arab life cheap, too, by waging their wars from amid the very people from whom they purport to speak," said an article in the New Republic Magazine.

The current actions of the IDF have been designed to protect Israel's northern population centers, which have been subjected to repeated Katusha rocket attacks in recent weeks. Israel has exercised constraint in attempting to deal with Hezbollah on a diplomatic, rather than military level. Through the United States, Israel has requested Syria, whose control over Lebanon is unquestionable, to curb Hezbollah's actions.

In spite of these pleas, Iranian backed Hezbollah continued it's attacks. The government of Lebanon needs to take greater responsibility over restraining Hezbollah, and their civilian shield attacks. They have an international responsibility to help end terrorism in the Middle East.

Hezbollah controls a set of smaller Shi'ite groups who follow a Khomeinistic ideology. The organization was formed as an organizational body for fundamentalists, headed by religious leaders who see the adoption of Iranian doctrine as a solution to Lebanon's problems. These principles include the use of terror as a means of accomplishing a political agenda.

Hezbollah's Khomeinistic based ideology consists of the following as quoted from its political platform including the group's worldview as published in February of 1985:

—The solution to Lebanon's problems is the establishment of an Islamic republic as only this type of regime can secure justice and equality for all of Lebanon's citizens.

—The Hezbollah views are as an important goal the fight against "western imperialism" and its eradication from Lebanon. The group strives for complete American and French withdrawal from Lebanon, including all their institutions.

—The conflict with Israel is viewed as a central concern. This is not limited to the IDF presence in Lebanon. Rather, the complete destruction of the state of Israel and the establishment of Islamic rule over Jerusalem as its expressed goal.

Hezbollah deems the destruction of Israel as a religious obligation, and justifies terror as a weapon in the hands of the weak. Israel ("the little Satan") is viewed as a threat to Islam and Muslims. We cannot allow religious fervor as a justification for violence in the Middle East, on either the Arab and Jewish sides.

Tactics used by Hezbollah are similar to those employed by other radical terrorist groups such as Hamas and Islamic Jihad. The philosophy of Hamas is based on Muslim brotherhood, with one difference. They believe that jihad is a commandment of principles and aim to purify other Muslims by teaching terrorism.

Hamas targets youths who are orphans or have family problems, and takes them under their wings for malevolent purposes. They convince these youths from a young age that if they carry out a suicide bombing they will be martyrs and will go to paradise. Martyrs to the cause of hate and terror?

David Agmon of the Ma'ariv newspaper was quoted as saying, "Hamas recruits and trains its members from among the youth movements, and has strong support among students. Hamas leaders and clerics use their mosques not only to transmit religious values but to incite and encourage support for paramilitary organizations." Groups like these intend to "bring Muslims back into the fold of Islam by using them to gather intelligence or to commit acts of terrorism."

Hezbollah like Hamas does make community contributions, by financially supporting schools and hospitals. However the same citizens they are supposedly supporting, they are not hesitant to kill as shown in the Qana refugee incident. Additionally, they use their influence in the educational system to insure the continuity of hatred. Lebanon isn't the only country to approve of these twisted brainwashing tactics. Not only does Hezbollah receive Syrian support, but Iran provides Hezbollah and other terrorist groups with the training, facilities and money needed to perpetuate their cause of hate and destruction.

Israel, with the support of the United States continues to take risks to accomplish a comprehensive Middle Eastern peace. However this peace is only attainable if Syria and Iran rescind their support for terrorist organizations such as Hamas, Islamic Jihad and actively participate in the quest for peace.

An agreement will not be reached unless all parties recognize enough blood has been shed in the Middle Eastern conflict. "Enough of blood and tears, enough," reiterated former Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin at the pro-peace rally shortly before his assassination. In Cairo last week 18 Greek orthodox on a pilgrimage were murdered by Hezbollah who admitted they thought the Greeks were Israeli tourists. How long will Hezbollah continue with their anti-humanistic tactics before they realize that peace will benefit all sides?

Letters to the Editor

Survey's findings questionable

To the editor:

In the April 24, 1996 Collegian, on the Multicultural Affairs page, various UMass administrators were selected by an "informal survey of ALANA students" as the "Top Five Anti-Multicultural Administrators on campus." One of the administrators so labeled was the director of the Everywoman's Center and the criterion on which this was based was "director of what is better known as [the] Whitewoman's Center."

According to EWC's 1995 Annual Report, available to anyone who cares for facts, 5 out of 13 full-time professional positions were filled by women of color and 37 out of 53 paid student staff were women of color. In addition, 22 women of color volunteered their skills at Everywoman's Center. In its mission statement, EWC "works to stop the cycles of all forms of oppression, particularly those based on gender, age, class, ethnicity, race, mental and physical ability, sexual orientation and spiritual belief." Providing a range of services to the diverse cultural and linguistic populations of the university and Hampshire County."

It is hard to see why so many women of color would be attracted to work at Everywoman's Center if it did not support them or allow them to scope for learning and growth.

Students celebrate Haitian night

By Humphrey brown III & Gregory Casimir
Collegian Staff

"By ourselves we are weak, but together we are strong" read the inside cover of the program, in creole, for the Haitian Night semi-formal, last Saturday.

Hundreds of students and faculty, Haitian and otherwise, were elegantly dressed to celebrate Haitian heritage and culture in the Student Union Ballroom.

The evening's festivities began with the singing of the Haitian national anthem. Directly following the anthem, there was a briefing on the origins of Haitian culture by Magalie Lamour who co-Meed the event with Guy Victor.

"In 1804, we were the first African country to gain our independence," stated Lamour with pride.

She went on to discuss the many years of political strife that Haitians have gone through in gaining their freedom.

"We are still fighting, have been fighting and will continue fighting until we have peace. Viva Haiti!" concluded Lamour to the sound of applause and various cheers from proud Haitians in agreement.

Brunuir Shackleton, key note speaker of the evening, followed Lamour.

Shackleton's speech emphasized the need for Haitians and all Africans to do well in school in order to better themselves as a people.

"You've got to step up to the intellectual table in order to fill your plate of education," said Shackleton.

Freshman journalism student, Kenny Lacoste, read an original poem entitled "Prince of the Sugar Cane Field." After the reading, Kenny was showered with applause as the dancers prepared to perform.

The Negre s & Neg' Kreyol, a group of Haitian UMass students, performed a traditional Haitian dance that moved the crowd to a standing ovation.

Marie Duplessy, one of the participants in the dance, explained how difficult it was getting the dance together and how much effort was put into making it happen.

"[We] worked very hard and practiced almost every night for three to four hours a night. And, we sewed our own costumes," said Duplessy. "It took a lot of our time, but people were really dedicated."

After the dance, the Haitian American Students Association HASA, gave out awards to hard working and deserving members. Among the recipients were Frantz Bien- Aime', a junior sociology major, who will be next years HASA president.

The night was capped off by power house Haitian band RA RA Machine, who had the whole Student Union Ballroom shaking. much to the delight of the many students and faculty who began to dance in true Haitian fashion.

Co-MC Victor explained the significance of Haitian night to students.

"Basically, it's a chance for the African-American community to get together and see what other African cultures are like," stated Victor. "It's also a chance for people to celebrate and see what Haiti is about."

President of HASA, Daphne Francois, held a similar view on the necessity of events like Haitian culture night.

"Since this is a multi-cultural campus, if we have a certain number of Haitians on campus, it's important to have a voice to represent them," Francois said. "There are a lot of stereotypes. This is an opportunity to show UMass what we're all about."

The right to write

This semester, Gregory Casimir and myself, have had the opportunity and privilege to bring you the Black Affairs page. And although we've done the best we can, with the staff we've had for help, the Black Affairs page is still in need of talented, well versed and concerned writers to keep the only black voice in the Collegian, going strong.

Humphrey brown III

Ever since it's birth in 1975, the Black Affairs Page has remained the avenue for which black writers got the word out on issues that directly affected the black community, here at University of Massachusetts.

It was, and still remains, one of the most efficient ways to reach the majority of black students on this campus and help create change and awareness in the UMass and Five-College area.

Now, as the semester comes to a close and we start to look ahead to Fall '96, the time has come to take hold of the opportunities in front of us and do something to help erase the ignorance that plagues the minds of many who are lost

We have major plans for the page next semester. We're looking to make the Black Affairs Page more informative and more useful to the black UMass student body.

The media is a tool to be used. It's up to us to take advantage or be susceptible to anything that's thrown in our faces.

If ever there was a time to get involved, it's now. We are on the threshold of some major changes within and around the black community. If we don't arm ourselves with the power of knowledge, we will only get left behind.

It's up to us to stay informed and be on top of things that are going on around us.

Many students, time and time again, have claimed that they don't have the time to put into being involved in something like writing for the Black Affairs page.

True enough, writting for the page can be time consuming, but the results and benefits in knowing that you've contributed in educating and informing your people, are well worth the time spent.

The black media must and will have it's voice heard on this campus.

We can no longer let others define what kind of people we are and what isn't going on in the black community.

We have to redefine ourselves and let the real word be heard about the 7.2 percent of us here at UMass. If we don't, no one else will.

Next semester, Gregory Casimir and myself, plan to make moves with the Black Affairs age and do our best to represent the feelings and over all opinions of blacks here on campus.

If you want to do something for your people, get involved. If you don't stand for something, you'll fall for anything. Stand up and be an active member of the Black Affairs staff.

To all those who have helped make the Black Affairs page what it was this semester, Cas and I thank you. A special thanks goes to Allana E. Todman for all her dedication to the page and the cause.

When it all goes down, where will you be? If you don't get involved, you may find yourself left out. Peace.

Seniors keepin' it real

Allana E. Todman

Now that there are only a few weeks before you seniors have to roll out, ask yourself a couple of questions. What are some of the things you will remember about this year?

Will it be those cold, blustery days in the winter, when you were tired and hungry, and had to rush to the DC to get a good, hot meal?

Or will it be those days, on Friday nights during your freshman and sophomore years that you went to the X or the Southside to get your groove on?

Will you all remember all those Funk-O-Thons and Jeans and T-Shirts that didn't erupt into Mortal Kombats?

Bet you can't.

All those nights when you just wanted to chill, outside after parties, but couldn't because 5.0 rolled by?

Those nights when you had work to do, but went creepin' instead, chillin' to when Bump n' Grind was the joint?

Or will you remember the time your eyes were bleeding because you tried to read three chapters in one night for a test in psychology the next day?

Well seniors, for those of you who have been in school for four, five, six years and we won't even mention those of you super duper seniors, it's time to move on and to grasp those opportunities that lie ahead.

I'm sure it was not easy, but you persevered through thick and thin, and hard work can only bring positive change. I'm sure you guys have heard many say that as a black race we have to take that extra step up the ladder in order to attain success. You have taken many of those extra steps, and I'm sure you will continue to do so.

I am tired of turning on the television and reading the paper, about black individuals selling, getting shot or doing other negative things.

I can't wait for the day when my children and their children, can be used to seeing successful black educated business men and women portrayed or the day when it's unusual to see our black people in declining urban communities.

Like I said in a previous editorial, your education, is not an individual accomplishment, but a unified one.

In a couple of months from now, you'll be putting on new shoes and a new suit. Ask yourself where will those shoes be leading you in the future.

Whatever you do in life, never forget where you were where you are and where you plan to be. Congratulations class of '96. Never forget to keep it real.

Falling prey to labels

Gregory Casimir

Personally, I love Tommy Hilfiger clothing. The fabric he uses is of top quality and his designs are pretty phat. That's one reason why his clothing have such mass appeal.

However, it's also a known fact (whether or not the general white populace wants to acknowledge it) that Hilfiger became as big as he did through a brilliant advertising campaign involving black models.

"What black models?," you ask yourself.

Why people like you and me, silly.

You see, Hilfiger employed a superb strategy of having black adults pay him to model for him. We pay that 60 beans for that Tommy Rugby, or break ourselves just to sport that butter $300 winter coat with his name on it. But we do more than just buy them. We advertise for him.

Obviously, blacks are running the hip hop culture, which seems to be the dominant culture among both black and white teenagers and young adults.

But in addition to dictating the type of music that most people our age listen to, blacks also influence the style in which clothing is worn and the type of labels that are sported. So people like Hilfiger and Ralph Lauren get bigger because we blacks sport their clothing in our videos, or find new ways to wear them on a daily basis.

Some people say, however, "Well why don't you stop buying Tommy and get up on some Mecca or Kani?"

Good question. Why is it that blacks don't flock as hard to find that Kani shirt like they do that Nautica shirt?

A possible answer is that the purpose of black clothing should have been to make the same quality clothing, but at more affordable price. Why should I go out and purchase that $80 Mecca when I could buy that Tommy shirt for $40 at the outlets?

What makes it worse is that most black clothing is sold at exclusively at all black outlets, like Mecca is, and it's still as expensive as buying them in stores like Lords & Taylor.

To me, it makes no sense for black clothing designers to charge you for the same break-neck prices that the great white retailer does. Otherwise, what's the point?

When black clothing designers realize that they should make clothes at prices that fit our already meager budgets, then more and more of us will start supporting their wares. Then, like we did for labels like Hilfiger and Polo, blacks will make Kani and Mecca a priority on their clothes shopping lists.

Until then, we'll all be some Tommy Hill ice-rocking mofuf*%$!.

ALANA RSOs call for action against SGA cuts

By Gregory Casimir
Collegian Staff

Last Thursday, at 9 p.m. in the Southside Room in Southwest, hundreds of minority University of Massachusetts' students were gathered in response to an emergency meeting called by the leaders of UMass' Registered Student Organizations (RSOs).

The purpose of this meeting was to discuss the recent budget cuts made by the Student Government Association (SGA), cuts that would make functions like the Funk-O- Thon, Spring Concerts and Jeans and T-shirts obsolete next year.

Dan Lizana, the president of the Black Student Union (BSU), spoke about RSOs and their respective budgets.

"Seventy-five hundred dollars was cut from the entire budget. Fifteen hundred dollars from white groups, but $6,100 from black/Latino organizations," Lizana said.

Lizana said that SGA does have extra money, about $43,000, so there should be no need to cut any organizations this semester.

He pointed out the disparity in the distribution of funds amongst the RSOs by the SGA. According to him, University Production and Concerts (UPC), for example, was cited as one of the RSOs with an increase in funds despite their bad year.

Lizana also pointed out that the Black Mass Communications Project (BMCP) was treated unfairly as an agency, instead of an RSO, because of their large budget. According to him, this was in direct violation of the Student Government Constitution, which states that, "every RSO will be treated equally."

Another problem brought up was the disunity among the leaders of the RSOs. Latoya Simms, a junior political science major, spoke about how RSOs need to be unified, and work for the common benefit of all ALANA students.

"If it's not in the interest of the community, then it's not in the interests of the individual," Simms said.

Lizana urged those at the meeting to join an RSO and get to know how the system works.

"Policies work for you or against you. But if you're not involved, they will always work against you." said Lizana.

The demands wanted by the ALANA RSOs were: 1. to have a $5,000 in all ALANA reserves and 2. to have left over money allocated to RSOs cut, or that received level funding.

The SGA was given a deadline of Tuesday to decide what actions will take place if demands aren't met.

Picking a university; how important is attending a black university?

Humphrey brown III

In a country where racism has remained the most dominating and pressing issue for the past 400 years or so, it is no wonder that many black students would want to attend a college where they would be surrounded with students of their own race.

I know how difficult it can be, going to a school where all your teachers, staff and most of the student body are all white. It can be extremely stressful. It's hard enough dealing with a racist society outside of school without having to deal with the same kind of ignorance in a place where you spend most of your time and energy.

Although it seems only fair or justified to enroll into an all black university, we have to keep in mind that running away from having to deal with other races isn't going to benefit anyone in the long run. They won't understand us any better and we won't understand them, leaving a big gap between the races that will become filled with stereotypes, prejudices and misjudgments of character.

Let it be understood that I support black colleges. It is of great importance to be in touch with your culture and know your history. There are many fine black institutions throughout the U.S. known for their academic excellence and high standard of achievement, but my concern is not the level of education received, necessarily, but the type of education one receives both academically and socially while dealing with other people who are not black.

America is the most diverse country in the world and the job market reflects that. Most major corporations and businesses are run by whites, but there is a large surge of Japanese and Middle Eastern companies making moves and trying to get a piece of the pie. Meanwhile many blacks tend to miss their opportunity to get their slice due to lack of interacting with these various cultures and races.

We can't talk to and relate to them, and they can't relate to us. Because we have little experience dealing with them, we don't get the kind of jobs that we need to really compete on a national and even global scale. Consequently, we find ourselves, basically, back to where we started — struggling to comprehend, while they stereotype and prejudge us.

A black university should not be used as a scapegoat for dealing with other cultures, whites in particular.

One should attend a black college as a good way to get in touch with yourself and history, while getting a beneficial education. Being in touch with your own culture doesn't mean losing touch with others.

Ultimately, it depends heavily on the individual. Even though I attend a university where blacks only comprise 7.2 percent of the entire student body, I still have used the resources available to learn about the plight and struggles of my ancestors. And even as I'm learning about my own culture and heritage, I am constantly interacting with other races and cultures, which is essentially the only way we are going to stop the racism and prejudice that supersedes us all. You can't fight the battle to stop racism if you're not on the battle field. Dig? The struggle to end racism isn't going to be fought where we're all the same. Eventually, you'll have to come out of that comfort zone and security within the confides of the black college and fight.

Being in touch with your people, self and heritage are the most important qualities any of us should have. The black college was initially built with that particular purpose in mind and the benefits of attending a black university are good, but we can not afford to shelter ourselves within the walls of the black college to keep away from having to deal with whites and other races who may have warped mentalities and distorted truths.

If we are ever going to change anything in this nation, we have to do it where change is needed. There is definitely the need for change in every major university and college in America. We always talk about it, now's the time to go out and do it. We've got to face the world sometime.

Pallbearer's Schwimmer can't carry movie

By Laura Stock
Collegian Staff

THE PALLBEARER
Directed by Matt Reeves with David Schwimmer, Gwyneth Paltrow
Playing at Hampshire Six

COURTESY BARRY WETCHLER

Gwyneth Paltrow and David Schwimmer have a geeky kind of love in The Pallbearer.

The Pallbearer is not the processed little romantic comedy you might expect from the fresh-faced couple that David Schwimmer and Gwyneth Paltrow comprise onscreen.

Instead, first-time director Matt Reeves propels this film into the macabre depths of the indie black comedy world, without completely besmirching the reputations of rising stars Schwimmer and Paltrow, and keeping the film somewhat entertaining.

Forget Schwimmer as the dorky, but adorable Ross on "Friends." As Pallbearer's Tom Thompson, Schwimmer plays a complete loser, sporting a bad haircut, horribly unfashionable outfits and still living in his mother's home. Tom is permanently stuck in high school mentality (even though the jobless geek just graduated from college). He prides himself on his ability to remember everything from his childhood education days — down to who played flute next to him in band.

For the first time in his life, Tom's impeccable memory fails him, as he can't remember one of his classmates, Bill Abernathy, even after Bill's mother, Ruth (Barbara Hershey), phones him to say that her son committed suicide. Since Tom is written into Bill's will, she asks him to be a pallbearer at the funeral. Hence, Tom becomes ensnared in the grieving mother's bizarre web, which includes delivering the eulogy (in the film's most hilarious scene) at the mysterious man's service.

Even more disturbing is the fact that the dye-bottle blonde, lower-middle class Ruth is so messed-up from losing the last man in her life (she is a widow as well) she pulls a Mrs. Robinson on the innocent, spineless Tom. From this point on, Pallbearer takes on a kind of sentiment of The Graduate, Spanking the Monkey sort.

It is surprising that the wholesome Tom succumbs to Ruth's wily ways, because his grade school sweetheart, Julie DeMarco (Paltrow), has just come back into his life. Tom never actually dated the girl, he just drooled over her from afar. In an ironic twist, she doesn't even remember his name when they first meet.

Through their mutual circle of friends, Julie and Tom begin to spend a great deal of time together. Like Tom, Julie is also confused about where she is going in life, and she doesn't even have a stylish Pinto, like Tom, to get her there. Tom and Julie become close as they both realize neither of them has a future if they can't let go of the past.

The internal rantings of Tom, coupled with the distinctly New York dialogue that flows between Tom and his companions (a notable one played by Michael Rapaport), reveal somewhat of a Woody Allen influence on Reeves' writing and direction. However, Reeves adds an arty flavor with creative, slo-mo cinematography that smacks of indie.

If you can get past Pallbearer's darkness, then it becomes an intriguing film — but its plot is not as unique as one would think, especially from a freshman director. The characters are well acted, as we are disgusted with Hershey's Ruth, and we pity the charming Paltrow. One thing damaging the film, though, is Schwimmer's successful stint on "Friends" follows him like the plague, and Ross is only fitting on T.V. B–

Valley faves Papas Fritas bring tunes back to town

By Mike Burke
Collegian Staff

Papas Fritas make a quick return to the Valley after headlining the final night of the Loud Music Festival at the Iron Horse Music Hall. The band's set was brief but easily the highlight of the four-day event.

Since the release of their self-titled debut album on Minty Fresh, there has been an enormous hype in the music scene. Even SPIN joined in — naming the album, one of the 10 best albums ignored in 1995. But music critics and fans, in the know, hardly ignored this fabulous trio.

Papas Fritas formed in 1993 at Tufts University where Tony Goddess, Keith Gendel and Shivika Asthana met at school. Although only Goddess had a true background in music, the trio hit it off playing low-fi Pavementy tunes around Boston. On the band's first two cassette only releases, Goddess handled all the singing duties leaving a rather dull sound on the band's excellent songs.

Their seven-inch "Passion Play" b/w "Lame To Be" brought the band to a new level. Papas Fritas had developed into a true band. All traces of Pavement in their blood was gone and "Lame To Be" became an instant classic.

But the seven-inch was a mere teaser for their flawless album that was easily the best pop record of last year. Their live show has flourished too. Goddess remains the musical master, often improvising the guitar parts to entire songs while the rest of the band smiles along. Their on-stage presence is more goofy than rock star as they look more similar to your older brother's three friends uselessly jamming on Steve Miller tunes than the finest pop band Massachusetts has produced since the Pixies.

Opening up tomorrow night's show are Sone and Flora Street. Sone hail from Portland, OR and mix Pavement's messy ideas with Brian Eno's far-out ideas for a unique sound. Flora Street features Dave Auchenbacher, formerly of Small Factory.

Papas Fritas, Sone and Flora Street perform at the Amherst College Front Room Tuesday night at 8 p.m. The show is sponsored by WAMH, call 542-2288 for more information.

by Robin Prince and Brian McNally, who each had three goals in the game.

The Massachusetts extra man unit turned in it's best showing of the season as the Minutemen scored three times in six chances with the man advantage.

"Special teams wins the game," senior Dennis Kelly said. "Coach [Jim] Strub and Coach [Chris] Burdick had us well prepared on both the man-up and man-down units."

The crowd for Senior Day was an impressive 425 despite the miserable weather. Those on hand witnessed what proved to be the final collegiate games of six Minutemen seniors.

After being on the short end of the New England rivalry the past two seasons, beating Brown this year was special for the Minutemen.

"I think its great to beat a team that has done what Brown has done over the past few years," Cannella said after the game. "It's big for our seniors, who struggled through those losses, the last couple of years. It's great for them to go out a winner on this field."

"Playing sports you take a chance of heartbreak which was last week, this week you take a chance because of feelings like this," Kelly said. "Brown came in barking, talking a lot of trash, but we held it together and played good poised lacrosse."

Glass dedicated the win to his coach.

"This win is for coach," Glass said. "We have a heart and soul award that we give out once a week, but he's really the heart and soul of our team. Everyone knows it. People are going to realize this guy's a great coach and he's going to be around here a long time."

set last year.

Henderson allowed a total of three hits in her six innings of relief, improving her record to 20–5 with a minuscule ERA of 1.05. Her school-record streak of 20 consecutive wins places her in a three-way tie for eighth on the NCAA's all-time list.

The lack of an easy victory over the Rams was looked upon as a positive by Sortino after the game.

"I think that we needed to go through this," she said. "It was important for us to find that we could come through it. It was character building. I think that you need to do these things to see what you're made of. The kids came through in the end."

Friday was more of routine game for the Minutewomen and a typical outing for their flame–throwing right–hander.

The Explorers couldn't discover a solution to the phenomenal freshman's blazing fastball, as Henderson went the distance, allowing two-hits and an unearned run, while striking out six in dreary conditions unconducive to pitching.

Cardenas powered UMass offensively throughout the contest, and wasted little time in facing Janice McGinty's first offering to left field for a double. Cardenas would score the game's first run as La Salle rightfielder Lisa Robbins misplayed a single by Stephanie Mareina.

The floodgates opened in the second, when a combination of a steady rain and a barrage of UMass hits sent McGinty searching for shelter.

McGinty opened the inning by giving up a single to Galas, and seeing Becky George reach first on what was intended to be a sacrifice bunt. McGinty's own error on a grounder by Tracey Osier loaded the bases, and prompted Explorer coach Ray Perri to go to the bullpen for Lori Congdon.

Cardenas greeted Congdon with an opposite–field double that scored a pair, while a Gutridge sacrifice fly and a Buckley single, put UMass up 5–0 after the inning.

Henderson cruised from there, allowing just one run in the sixth, set up by a two–base throwing error. Henderson held La Salle hitless until the fourth and enjoyed a trio of 1–2–3 innings.

In other action from this weekend's festivities from Totman Field, the Rams advanced to the final by slipping by what proved to be a gritty La Salle team yesterday 2–1 in eight innings.

Senior Ram pitcher Sue Foggo appeared that she has no desire to see her career end, picking up a pair of wins on the day, including a 2–1 win over second–seeded Temple, which she no–hit until the seventh.

The Owls, despite an exceptional performance by Desiree Wallace fell 4–3 to La Salle in the first elimination game, a 10–inning affair that was the second longest in the 14–year history of the conference tournament.

Rhody topped the up–start Explorers to earn the right to face UMass this morning at 10 a.m. If URI wins the game, the two teams will face–off at noon for the title, while UMass will wear the crown with a win in the morning affair. The original schedule was ravaged by rain that cancelled all of Saturday's play and part of Friday's forcing the rare Monday title game.

• UMass' record is identical to its record during the 1995 season, which they did get a bid, and the 1996 schedule was tougher.

"We took care of ourselves now it's up to the critics," Buddy Hoffman said after the Brown game. "Hopefully they'll come through for us."

So now, the Minutemen, who had a perpetual case of rotten luck throughout the 1996 campaign are left asking, "What if"?

Unfortunately, we'll never know.

tice every single day doing the exact same stuff, all the same drills, getting up at six in the morning, just like us, running and it paid off because they're part of the UMass aura that Dick Garber started."

"[Assistant] coach [Chris] Burdick said we have got to give Brian Turk a chance," Cannella added. "I said all right we'll do it. He goes in there and scores a big goal for us at a time where we stop a rush by them and Bob Lukacz scores an unsettled goal. It's super and great to see."

When the UMass lead that was once five dwindled to two with less than three minutes remaining, it was Bailey who found Brendan Glass all alone in front of the Brown net to effectively put the game away for the Minutemen.

All in all it was a game the graduating class feel they can end their college careers with their heads held high.

"I personally ended on a good note and I think everybody did," Turk said after the game.

ELIZABETH BROWN / COLLEGIAN

Melee in the morning

Senior Amy Powell scored the winning run to put the UMass softball team into the Atlantic 10 final today at Totman field. First pitch is scheduled for 10 a.m.

UNIVERSITY STORE'S Textbook Annex UMASS AMHERST

Protect your Textbook investment!

To prepare for finals you really need your textbooks. Beware, other people also want your textbooks.

Textbook Theft

Theft of books occurs all the time. To protect your investment:

1. don't leave your books or backpacks unattended,
2. don't leave your room open,
3. do write your name in your books.

If your books are stolen, file a report with the University Police and the Textbook Annex.

Buyback Scam

Beware of people who come to your dorm to buyback your books. Last semester people went through the dorms buying books door to door. They are not authorized and will not give you the best prices (despite what they tell you).

They do not have access to the list of books that we are buying at 50% of the publisher's list price. They will pay you less.

If a faculty member has placed an order for your book to be used in the fall semester we can pay you 50% of the publisher's list price for that book. People going door to door will not!

Textbook buyback starts May 15th at the Annex and in Campus Center Room 162. The buyback at Hampden starts May 22nd.

We're up all night putting together New England's Largest College Daily...

Where our job is done, your day is just beginning...

Your Horoscope

By Jeane Dixon

ARIES (March 21 – April 19) — As you ride the crest of popularity, your confidence grows Do what is best for your offspring, someone may send you a cryptic message Read between the lines

TAURUS (April 20 – May 20) — Although self-sufficiency works for you, others expect you to be a team player Avoid forcing issues let any criticism slide off your back Romance puts you in an upbeat mood Show your playful side

GEMINI (May 21 – June 20) — Investigate new employment possibilities Consult college bulletins and attend career clinics Those who feel tired will soon get a second wind Meeting new people puts you on your best behavior

CANCER (June 21 – July 22) — Money making ideas abound However, you need a really practical one A casual approach will keep a new romantic admirer guessing Let the other person make the first move

LEO (July 23 – Aug. 22) — Fight off a lethargic mood! You score important points with influential people if you show that you are on top of things Doing your own research makes excellent sense now

VIRGO (Aug. 23 – Sept. 22) — Do not let delays upset you the pinnacle of time will work to your advantage Deal with a family problem head-on Acting too controlling will jeopardize romance.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 – Oct. 22) — Stay focused on work that is useful to society Public support is forthcoming when you share your talents and ideas Your popularity with family and friends soars to new heights

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 – Nov. 21) — A good day for mental pursuits Study hard, then launch a pet project. Business travel is best postponed until a routine matter has been resolved

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 – Dec. 21) — Travel brings intense pleasure now Be adventurous An artwork or other public expression of your talents may get mixed reviews Do not worry

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 – Jan. 19) — Work goes well A struggle to launch a special project will be rewarded with new profits Enjoy the happiness created by a loving friendship A pal has a lot to share.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 – Feb. 18) — A search for something at distance requires persistence Your work hold a strange fascination You are developing a special talent Heed a partner's desire for peace Handle your money and other resources carefully

PISCES (Feb. 19 – March 20) — Approaching a sensitive subject requires courage and tact Clear communication is vital to your success Partnerships and friendships are fulfilling Do not neglect the needs of a young person Give family life top priority.

Despite beating Brown, UMass denied NCAA bid

By Matt Vautour

When senior Buddy Hoffman walked off Richard F. Garber Field Saturday, blood dripped from cuts on the bridge of his nose and several spots on his legs, while mud covered his uniform almost hiding the No. 20.

Across Hoffman's muddy face however, was a smile. The very same smile that was present on all of the Minutemen's faces after they had upset No. 7 Brown in the rain-drenched field conditions.

Massachusetts	11
Brown	8

Those smiles were cut abruptly short just over 24 hours later, as the team watched the NCAA Selection Show. When the 12 teams were announced, the University of Massachusetts was not among them.

"It was very disappointing," UMass coach Greg Cannella said. "Especially for our seniors. I feel we had three top 10 wins and one of the top schedules around, but obviously the committee didn't feel the same way."

"I'm very proud of what our team did this season, but this one is going to stay with us for a while. I know it will stay with the seniors for a long while."

"Shock," Hoffman said, when asked about his feelings. "We did our best to put ourself into the playoffs, but it just didn't come through."

UMass finishes its season at 7–5.

The disappointment of not getting a tournament berth overshadowed the impressive win over No. 7 Brown.

The Minutemen came out of the gate in impressive fashion, led by a tremendous game by junior Jim Kennedy, who figured the first five UMass goals. He finished with a career high six points on three goals and three assists.

Junior All–America candidate Brendan Glass gave the Minutemen a 1–0 lead just 1:11 into the contest, a lead UMass would hold throughout the game.

Off the ensuing face–off, Kennedy collected the ball, sprinted down the field and fired a shot on the run past Brown goalie Greg Cattrano just 16 seconds later. Both teams would tally two goals before the end of the period to give UMass a 4–2 lead.

UMass dominated the second stanza, outscoring Brown 3–1 and pushing its advantage to 7–3. The period was highlighted by Glass' 100th career goal, making him only the fourth junior to surpass the century mark. Glass would finish the day with a game–high four goals.

Brown would outscore the Minutemen 5–4 in the second half, but it wasn't enough as UMass would go on to win.

The Bears, also left out of the tourney, were led offensively

Seniors did all they could to keep their season alive

By Justin C. Smith
Collegian Staff

As is tradition for all sports at the University of Massachusetts, the men's lacrosse team honored its graduating class in its final home game of the regular season.

"Senior Day" as it is most commonly called, had more than that particular flavor during Saturday's contest as the class of 1996 was a large reason the Minutemen knocked off New England rival Brown 11–8, attempting to extend their college careers one more game.

As fate, or in this case the NCAA selection committee would have it, this was to be the last game for Eric Bailey, Buddy Hoffman, Dennis Kelly, Bob Lukacz, Kevin Ratkiewicz and Brian Turk, as lacrosse players, but they would not go down without a fight.

Kelly, an All–American Candidate at the defensive midfield position, has made it a practice of shutting down the most prolific offensive opposing middie. Kelly made life unbearable for David Evans for 60 minutes as the high–powered Bear attacker was held to just a goal and one assist on the day.

With UMass already leading 2–1, Greg Cannella's squad went on their second extra man opportunity (EMO) of the day and Hoffman stepped up as he rocketed a shot form 15 yards out that beat Brown goalie Greg Cattrano over his shoulder to double his team's lead.

The Minutemen converted two more EMO's before the end of the first half after the Bears had cut a three–goal UMass edge down to one. Again it was Hoffman breathing life into a Minutemen man–up unit that entered the game converting on just 17 percent of its chances. The senior tri– captain found Jim Kennedy camped in front of the Brown cage on both occasions pushing the UMass lead back to three.

Less than a minute after the second Kennedy goal, Lukacz stepped onto the field for the first time on the day and UMass immediately had a transition chance in the offensive zone. P.G. Massey ran the length of the field before finding the senior who had only two goals previously this season.

Lukacz then made like a 20–goal scorer, depositing the ball on a one–timer behind Cattrano for a four–goal Minutemen advantage as they went to the locker room.

"On senior day it's great to see seniors step up like that," Cannella said. "I think Bobby Lukacz was on the field for 10 seconds before he scored that goal. It's great to see guys like that really hang in there. They haven't played that much over their careers."

As Brown was making a run at the Minutemen and time running out in the third period, Turk picked the most opportune time to notch his only goal of the season. With four seconds remaining in the third stanza, the Maryland native found the five–hole on Cattrano to boost the UMass lead back to four entering the final 15 minutes of play.

Kelly was the first of many to applaud the accomplishments of the less publicized members of the senior class.

"They are less fortunate that they don't get the amount of time that myself, Bailey and Buddy do," Kelly commented. "Other people might just want to quit but they are team players and they stuck it out. They are at prac-

Questions of 'What if' linger over tourney snub

Matt Vautour

Perhaps the toughest thing about the NCAA selection lacrosse process, or the selection process in any sport, is that the tournament participants are decided in a conference room, instead of on the field.

The players and coaches from various institutions sit in front of a television with torn fingernails and crossed fingers, hoping that their team's name will be called and that their season won't be over just yet. The system guarantees that somebody will feel, after the fact, that it's team received the short end of the proverbial stick.

That was the case for the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team yesterday. The team, the coaching staff and several onlookers huddled around the screen at Rafters nervously hoping for their name to be called.

When the field came up on the screen, one player shouted "Where are we?" in disbelief as the harsh reality set in.

The nervous excitement quickly turned to a disappointed silence.

The seeds were: No. 1 Princeton, No. 2 Maryland, No. 3 Virginia, No. 4 North Carolina, No. 5 Syracuse, No. 6 Hofstra, No. 7 Johns Hopkins, No. 8 Towson State, No. 9 Loyola, No. 10 Notre Dame, No. 11 Harvard, and No. 12 Army.

The Minutemen weren't alone among the disappointed. Bucknell, who was this year's surprise member of the top 10 going undefeated at 12–0, was also left out of the tournament, sparking several Minutemen to express sympathy for the Bison as well. Bucknell was hurt considerably by a very weak schedule.

The selection committee said that six other teams were considered besides the bid recipients. UMass, Bucknell, Brown, Duke, Yale and Georgetown were all left out.

The Minutemen are disappointed and they appear to have good reason to be.

- John Hopkins rode its history into the tournament, after having a sub–par season. There hasn't been an NCAA tournament without the Blue Jays and this committee wasn't about to make this one the first. The Jays finished the season in a severe slide getting upset several times. How you play in the late part of the year should play a big part in the selection process. If a team is slumping late, there's no reason to think that their play will pick up in the tourney. So why not give the bid to a more deserving squad?
- Army was a surprise in many peoples eyes, as well, as a weak schedule looked like it would keep the Cadets out of post season, but not this time around.

The NCAA looks at a variety of factors when picking tourney participants. Strength of schedule plays a heavy role in the process. Of UMass' 12 games, nine were against top 20 teams, including all five losses.

- The Minutemen finished with a 3–2 record against top 10 teams. With the exception of the season opening 15–9 loss to then No. 1 Virginia, UMass's four losses were by a total of five goals. Three of those losses came in sudden–death overtime, leaving the Minutemen just three goals away from being 10–2 on the year.

One of those losses was an April 28th 10–9 overtime heartbreaker at Syracuse. The Orangemen are historically the nation's best late–April/May teams. The fact that the Minutemen did as well as they did against the defending National Champions shouldn't hurt UMass, it should help them.

UMass gets through to A–10 final

By Leigh Torbin
Collegian Staff

Thursday evening it was announced that the Massachusetts softball team had swept the Atlantic 10's awards for the first time in the school's rich history as Kim Gutridge was named the A–10's Player of the Year, Liz Wagner its Pitcher of the Year, Danielle Henderson its Rookie of the Year and Elaine Sortino its Coach of the Year.

After a 14–0 regular–season conference mark, UMass will look to similarly sweep through the A–10 postseason as it hosts Rhode Island bright and early at 10 a.m. at Totman Field in the Atlantic 10 Championship game.

LaSalle	1

After defeating La Salle 5–1, amid steady rains on Friday, and Rhode Island by a 2–1 count yesterday, the Minutewomen stand poised to capture their ninth A–10 postseason crown in 11 years, and with it advance to an NCAA play–in game on Thursday against the Red Foxes of Marist College.

Sam Cardenas, a glaring omission from the All–Conference team, went 2 for–4 with two RBIs including the game–winner against the Explorers, while Henderson threw six innings of shutout relief as UMass edged the Rams.

The weekend also saw another encouraging sign as Chris Martens returned to the UMass lineup yesterday after sitting out since April 15 with back pains. Martens went 1–for–3 as the designated hitter against Rhody.

Yesterday, the Minutewomen did not open the game in typical defending–champion style, as the Rams loaded the bases in both the second and fourth innings, but brilliant defense by Kim Guttridge and tough pitching by Henderson saw UMass escape the jams down just 1–0.

"Everyone was tight," Sortino said. "The whole team was tight. Liz's back and even the national anthem singer was tight. Everybody was a little tight."

Wagner started yesterday's affair, but was clearly bothered by her sore back, pitching just over an inning. Wagner allowed a pair of hits in the first, and was pulled after Lisa Smith singled to lead off the second.

Henderson looked shaken as she took the mound far earlier than anticipated, and walked her first batter, Dori Venditti, on four pitches. Paula Astl reached on an error scoring a run and Sarah Villa singled, to load the bases with none out for the top of the URI order.

"I was a little nervous with the first batter, that's probably why I threw four balls in a row, but after that I calmed down," Henderson said.

Massachusetts	2
URI	1

The Ram rally was squashed though as both Meredith Cloutier and Jeanne Ferrier tapped to Guttridge at first, who calmly fired home to Kelly Buckley for a pair of force outs. The third came when Cloutier was hit by a grounder to short.

The Minutewomen loaded the bases in their half of the second on a Hayes walk and infield bunt singles by Mandy Galas and Amy Powell, but could not convert.

Henderson once again found herself in trouble in the fourth as the sacks were full with two–outs, but Henderson induced Sue Kessler to ground to Cardenas at third for the put–out.

Galas doubled to lead off the UMass fourth, was pushed over to third on a Powell sacrifice bunt, and came around to score on an Osier single to right, tying the score at one.

After a trio of 1–2–3 frames, the Minutewomen completed their come–back win by plating a run in the bottom of the sixth.

Powell, who also played solidly in the midfield for the women's soccer team in an international friendly against Omega de Montréal Saturday night, drew a two–out walk. After advancing to second on Osier's second single of the afternoon, the senior captain wheeled around to score the winning–run on a bleeding single to left by Cardenas.

"It didn't happen to be the greatest hit in the world, but it got the job done," Cardenas would comment afterwards.

"Sam came through with a very clutch hit," Sortino said. "She struggled in three at–bats and I was very glad to see her [get a hit]. That was a huge psychological victory for her."

The RBI was Cardenas' team–high eighth game–winner of the season and her 42nd overall, tying the school–record which she

Questions arise over UMass Police policy

By Daniel E. Levenson
Collegian Staff

Two University of Massachusetts police officers removed Ryan Gormady, a first–year student in the School of Management, from a class on the afternoon of April 29 as part of an on–going investigation involving stolen bicycles.

The student, his professor and a teaching assistant were upset by the incident and question the policy regarding the police action.

"It was a total disruption of the learning environment," said Kenny Levin, a teaching assistant in Professor Richard D. Wolff's economics class. He said he did not know the policy regarding police activities in the classroom.

The Undergraduate Rights and Responsibilities Handbook guidelines do not outline a policy regarding questioning procedures of this nature. The handbook only provides information regarding the arrest of Undergraduates.

"The general policy is to make notification when appropriate on a case to case basis," Lieutenant David Grader of the UMass Police said.

Gormady said that he had no idea at the time why the officers wanted to speak with him.

"I walked into the building and they were standing right there, they could have talked to me before or after class," he said.

He added that it would be understandable if it had been an emergency situation, the officers' actions would have made sense. Given the circumstances, however, he said they could have spoken to him outside of class time.

According to Gormady, the officers told him they were investigating a case involving a stolen bicycle. His father called the UMass police and was told that his son was no longer a suspect. Gormady has not heard from the police since.

"I invited them back to my room, they said they wanted to search it," said Gormady "I missed class, I was embarrassed."

Wolff said the officers made Gormady leave his seat "in the full presence of 200."

"The only reason they picked me out," said Gormady, "was because I had a Grateful Dead patch on my hat, and that fit the description of the subject."

Wolff, who was waiting for the students to get settled before he began his lecture, noticed the officers who were standing at the back of the auditorium.

As he was about to begin his lecture, one of the officers came from the back of the room and pulled Gormady out of class.

The professor was not informed beforehand of the officers' intentions. Wolff said he followed Gormady and two officers outside of the class room to inquire about their actions.

"Absolutely nothing was told to me beforehand," Wolff said. "I had no idea what was going on."

Wolff asked the officers asked why he was not informed of their intentions. "I mainly stressed that I was disturbed," he said.

Many students came to him and the other teaching assistants after class on Monday and on Wednesday, visibly disturbed by the events, said Wolff.

"They were shocked. They were upset — their learning process was upset," Wolff said. "It seems to me there ought to be a policy [to prevent] police from entering an almost full classroom, unless it's an emergency situation."

Wolff told the police of his grievance and said, "We're in the process of talking it over."

"The cops never informed the professor of what they were doing, the cops told the professor what to do they didn't allow him to say anything," said Levin. "It seemed almost like a display of intimidation."

"Why risk students safety?" asked Levin. "Before or after class would have been better."

"Generally we try to contact people at their residence, if the person is avoiding us, we have no alternative [but to contact them in the classroom]," Grader said. "Hopefully, they will be attending class."

"It is a matter of privacy for the student," said Grader. "It's no one's business, we don't like to share information with anybody not involved [in the case]."

As a matter of courtesy, officers try to inform professors. In cases where safety may be compromised, officers will make their intentions known to the concerned parties.

Collegian Staff member Daniel Sullivan contributed to this article.

Former Texas federal court judge presides

THE HAGUE, Netherlands (AP) — The first international war crimes tribunal since World War II opens Tuesday with a Texan in charge, a former U.S. federal judge who worked as a civil rights lawyer in 1960s.

Gabrielle Kirk McDonald will preside over a three–judge panel trying a Bosnian Serb prison guard for murder, rape and torture – an event that marks the world community's first attempt to try violations of international humanitarian law.

Previous war crimes trials were set up by victorious nations, like the Nuremberg and Tokyo trials after World War II. But the tribunal was put together by the U.N. Security Council in response to international outrage at atrocities committed in Bosnia. The defendant, Dusan Tadic, is not the big fish U.N. prosecutors had hoped to catch. Far from the commanders accused of ordering the murders of thousands, Tadic is an alleged thug–for hire accused of killing and torturing Muslim inmates at a Serb–run prison camp. He is one of 57 war crimes suspects named by the tribunal. In the long run, McDonald hopes, the tribunal will pave the way for a permanent international war crimes court.

"These international rules of human behavior have not been enforced for 50 years," she says. "It would be a real void if it wasn't carried on, because I'm afraid that inevitably there are going to be conflicts. They are not going to stop with the former Yugoslavia."

Judge dismisses some Whitewater charges

LITTLE ROCK, Ark (AP) — A judge threw out four charges each against Gov. Jim Guy Tucker and Susan McDougal in the Whitewater trial Monday, but let stand all 19 counts against James McDougal. Tucker and the McDougals, who were the Clintons' former partners in the Whitewater land development, were indicted last August on fraud and conspiracy charges for allegedly misusing $3 million in federally backed loans.

In the original indictment, McDougal was named in 19 counts, Tucker 11 and Mrs. McDougal eight. Tucker still faces seven felony charges including conspiracy and Mrs. McDougal, four.

Among the charges the judge dismissed against Mrs. McDougal was the conspiracy count alleging she helped plan some of the loan transactions. Tucker was cleared of counts involving a real estate loan.

In throwing out the charges, U.S. District Judge George Howard Jr. said a reasonable jury would not infer guilt based on the evidence presented by prosecutors. The defendants had argued that the government failed to prove its case.

Besides the conspiracy count, the governor still faces charges alleging wire fraud, falsifying loan documents and misapplying a $100,000 loan. Mrs. McDougal still is accused of misusing a $300,000 loan.

Hormone may increase risks

By Paul Recer
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Federal officials are moving swiftly to start new human research to see if a synthetic hormone used in popular injectable contraceptives increases the risk of AIDS virus infection. The action was prompted by monkey research that suggested the connection.

A study at the Aaron Diamond AIDS Research Center in New York City demonstrated that monkeys injected with progesterone were seven times more likely to become infected when exposed vaginally to simian immune deficiency virus, or SIV.

"It was a very striking result and one that we did not anticipate," said Dr. Preston Marx of the New York University School of Medicine, leader of the research team. A report on the findings was presented yesterday to a meeting of clinical researchers. Progesterone is a natural hormone, but a close synthetic chemical relative, progestin, is used in two injectable contraceptive that are widely sold in the United States.

Dr. Duane Alexander, director of the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development, which funded the monkey study, said his agency was "moving as quickly as possible to follow up on these research findings."

"We need to understand the transmission mechanism that is apparently at work in these cases and we need to determine whether it may be applicable to humans," Alexander said in a statement. Alexander noted that Marx used natural progesterone in his study and it is not known if the synthetic progestin, used in the contraceptives, will have the same effect.

Marx said a study is planned in which biopsies will be taken periodically from women volunteers to determine if progestin thins the vaginal lining.

Earlier animals studies, he said, found that progesterone can cause the lining of the vagina to become thinner. He said his team conducted the new study on monkeys to determine whether the change in the lining made it easier for virus to cross the mucous membrane barrier within the vagina and then infect cells in the circulating blood.

In the study, pellets of progesterone were implanted under the skin of 18 female rhesus monkeys. Ten other female monkeys received only a placebo.

All of the monkeys were then exposed vaginally to SIV, a virus that causes an AIDS–like disease in monkeys. SIV is closely related to HIV, the virus that causes AIDS in humans.

After 21 days, 14 of the 18 monkeys that received the progesterone were infected with SIV. Only one of the 10 monkeys in the placebo group was infected.

Marx said the study demonstrates that the thinning of the vaginal wall by progesterone increases the ability of the virus to cause infection in monkeys.

"The vaginal lining is a strong barrier against infection. That's the way it is supposed to function," he said.

"Progesterone will thin that barrier."

Two contraceptives marketed in the United States, Depo–Provera and Norplant, contain synthetic hormones called progestins that mimic many of the effects of progesterone. About 1.5 million American women use Depo–Provera and about 1 million use Norplant. Marx said human studies need to be conducted to determine whether women taking these drugs are at increased risk of HIV. "Nobody knows if the women will have this marked effect that we have seen in the monkeys, but that is the implication," he said. "We have to set up human experiments and do it as quickly as we can."

Student businesses celebrate achievements

By Jonathan Liberty

Over 120 people were in attendance for the Board of Student Businesses' Dinner last Thursday evening. The event was centered around the theme of "Collectives Building Community."

Board of Student Business and Campus Design and Copy (CD&C) member Maydad Cohen said, "The dinner helped us realize the strength of the student businesses. By seeing all of the businesses together, we see how strong we are collectively."

Members of Earthfoods, People's Market, CD&C, the Greenough and Sylvan Snackbars, Sweets and More, the Bike Co–op, TIX Unlimited, the Center for Student Businesses (CSB) and the Student Federal Credit Union attended the dinner. The Student Government Association (SGA), Auxiliary Services, and the Campus Activities Office (CAO) were also represented.

"This dinner allows the student businesses to be appreciated," SGA President Maurice Caston said. "Community support is strengthened by bringing all of us together in celebration."

After dining on linguine with marinated red peppers and black olives prepared by Earthfoods, each student business performed a skit. Additionally, each group raffled off gift certificates for their respective business.

Earthfoods served fresh strawberries, watermelon and pineapple for desert while Sweets and More provided chocolate chip cookies and brownies.

After half of the skits were done, Assistant Vice Chancellor for Student Affair Ric Townes addressed the audience.

Townes began by stating that he has been working at CAO for the past 21 months. "We are here to respond to the needs of students," Townes said.

Townes thanked the willingness of the students and staff members to get involved and stay involved in their business. "Your commitment to this University is incredible," Townes said. "All of you perform a great service."

In addition, Townes spoke on the need for more unity and respect amongst students on campus.

"I am asking that we can all find that positive feeling of love for yourself and others," Townes said. "What we need now is a lot more love, and we need it on this campus."

He added, "We need to have an optimistic view in order to find the love; I know we can."

Chabad celebrates Lag B'Omer

Jewish communities usually celebrate Lag B'Omer with some sort of fire, but Chabad House will be celebrating it University of Massachusetts style with a barbecue and tailgate party.

Tomorrow at 5 p.m., Chabad House will celebrate Lag B'Omer in Lot 32, across from Chabad House.

Lag B'Omer is the celebration of the end of a plague which claimed the lives of 24,000 students of the Judaic scholar Rabbi Akiva. Only five students survived the plague, and the holiday commemorates the day the dying ended. The holiday also serves to remember the death of Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai, a scholar of Kabbalah, Jewish mysticism.

"The plague occurred because the students, who were the cream de la creme, didn't respect each another and on that day, Lag B'Omer, the plague stopped," said Yonah Blum, director of programming at Chabad House. "From that we see we should celebrate Jewish unity and accept all Jews no matter what kind of outlook they have."

The other part of the celebration, the remembrance of Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai, is because he wished that his death should be celebrated with happiness.

Lag B'Omer traditionally celebrates the importance of learning Torah and is celebrated with a bonfire, festivities and music.

The name Lag B'Omer comes from period of the Jewish year in which it occurs. In the time period between Passover and Shavout, Jews count the Omer, or the days between the two holidays. Each day, they try to make themselves better people and strive towards attaining a higher plain of being. Lag B'Omer occurs on the 33rd day of the Omer.

The cost of the event is $5 per person and is open to the public. Vegetarian options are available by prior request by calling 549-7655.

U.N. camp attack caught on

By Hilary Appelman
Associated Press

JERUSALEM — An amateur videotape aired yesterday has reinforced claims that Israeli artillery deliberately struck a U.N. base in Lebanon where at least 91 civilians died last month. Israeli officials had maintained the base was mistakenly hit by one or two stray rounds. Maj. Gen. Matan Vilnai, Israel's deputy chief of staff, conceded Sunday it could have been hit by as many as five shells.

A preliminary report by U.N. investigators says the remains of 15 shells were found at the base near the village of Qana in southern Lebanon.

The videotape, taken by a U.N. peacekeeper a mile away, shows a series of puffs of smoke emerging from the base, indicating when shells hit.

"The importance of the tape is that it shows the shelling is not one or two rounds that overshot, as we've been told for the past two weeks... but that it was a targeted shelling," Timor Goksel, spokesman for the U.N. peacekeeping force in Lebanon, said yesterday.

Goksel did not speculate why the base might have been targeted. "It's up to the Israeli side to explain, I think," he told Britain's Sky Television.

Israel insisted the shelling of the base was an accident and sent a top army officer to the United Nations in New York to explain. Brig. Gen. Dan Harel brought aerial photographs and technical data, including logs of the two batteries that fired the shells, in an attempt to convince the United Nations that the attack was an accident.

The rounds fell short because of mistakes in calculating range and the weight of the projectiles, Israeli officials said. Even if the Israelis had seen Hezbollah guerrillas seeking shelter in the camp, "we wouldn't shoot at it," Harel told reporters in New York. "This is a U.N. camp and we put parameters of safety around each and every U.N. compound in south Lebanon when the operation was going on."

"We made a mistake and we are terribly sorry," Prime Minister Shimon Peres said at a campaign stop. "We regret it. But, in my opinion, everything was done according to clear logic and in a responsible way. I am at peace with it."

The attack on the U.N. camp took place April 18, midway through Israel's 16-day campaign to stop the Lebanese guerrillas from firing rockets on northern Israel. The offensive ended with a U.S.-brokered truce.

Violence continues in Monrovia

By Jonathan Paye-Layleh
Associated Press

MONROVIA, Liberia — A top warlord called for a cease-fire yesterday, but young street fighters kept up their territorial battles in the looted, torched capital of Monrovia, even dragging Marines into the fighting.

The Marines fired on militiamen shooting outside the American Embassy after the gunmen fired in the direction of the embassy, U.S. military officials said. It was unclear whether the Liberians were directing their gunfire at the compound or at opponents outside.

No one was injured in the clash. Marines killed two Liberians in a similar confrontation last week.

The United States has ferried more than 2,100 people to safety from the embassy compound. Another 10,000 Liberians have sought shelter from the mayhem in a separate U.S. residential complex, Charles Taylor, head of one of the militia groups that have ravaged Monrovia in a month of bloodshed, ordered his loyalists to lay down their guns at noon yesterday, but acknowledged it would take time for his command to hit the streets.

"We are serious about this," Taylor said. "(But) even up to 6 p.m., we should expect that small-arms fire will be heard, especially around the main military barracks."

In fact, hundreds of his militiamen and allies continued to pour into the city center yesterday to increase their manpower around the besieged military training camp at the center of the battles. The camp, held by fighters loyal to Taylor's rival, Roosevelt Johnson, has been besieged since April 6.

Several rocket-propelled grenades slammed into the military camp yesterday, and small-arms fire between the two sides kept up even after the noon cease-fire deadline. Johnson's fighters are determined to hold the camp even though their leader was evacuated out of the country Friday by American troops.

Taylor dismissed concern over the continued fighting, saying it could take a day for calm to come to Monrovia.

He said West African peacekeepers had been ordered to enter the military camp to disarm Johnson's fighters.

"The holding of the cease-fire declared today is dependent on the complete disarmament of forces in the bar racks by peacekeeping forces," Taylor said.

But the peacekeepers, who killed two of Taylor's fighters in clashes Sunday, have previously refused to get involved in disarming fighters and it was doubtful they would begin to do so now.

Taylor's young fighters, meanwhile, continued to guard the territory they have gained around the military bar racks.

"Please don't take my picture," said a Taylor loyalist who would only give his name as Eddie. "My mother lives in Brooklyn. She would be ashamed if she saw me in the newspapers."

Eddie, who appeared to be about 20, said his younger sisters and brothers also lived in Brooklyn, N.Y.

"I'm the oldest of the children, so I have to defend my family and fight for my country," he said.

Taylor, who touched off Liberia's civil war more than six years ago with a failed attempt to overthrow then President Samuel Doe, has refused to join other militia leaders and fellow members of Liberia's ruling council at peace talks to begin Wednesday in Accra, Ghana.

Taylor has said his presence in Monrovia was necessary to keep civil order — a claim that could be disputed by those who have witnessed anarchy, not order, on the streets of Monrovia. Some Liberians fear he might try to use the other leaders' absence to make a power grab.

The U.S. State Department said yesterday it would bar faction leaders' relatives and associates from the United States, along with any others "who are impeding Liberia's peace process and transition to democracy."

Even before the latest violence, six years of war had killed more than 150,000 Liberians and forced half of the country's nearly 3 million people to flee their homes.

The bloodshed in Monrovia began after Johnson was fired from his Cabinet post and charged with murder in connection with clashes in March.

Johnson's refusal to surrender touched off fighting that quickly spread into a citywide spree of shelling, gunfire, looting and arson. Johnson had been barricaded in the military training camp since April 6, but was hustled out in an armored convoy to the U.S. Embassy on Friday.

On the Issues

ELECTION '96

WASHINGTON (AP) — And then there were two.

Breaking clear in a contest once crowded and tangled, Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole has secured the Republican presidential nomination and won the right to engage President Clinton in the fall.

Neither man at this point has a comprehensive platform. But what they do have, after Clinton's three years in the White House and Dole's 27 years in the Senate, are records. And since January they've answered questions on a variety of subjects put to them by The Associated Press.

Here are their answers, plus summaries of their words and actions on a variety of issues. Positions may change, and Ross Perot may yet jump in again to mix everything.

EDUCATION — GOALS 2000:

Bill Clinton

'Proposing 30 percent budget increase for program he introduced after it was developed under Republican President Bush. Administration says history standards proposed by a panel are a voluntary model and not turn out right and will be redone.'

Bob Dole

'Criticizes the history standards as flying in the face of American values.'

The naked truth

How does it make you feel when a total stranger sees you naked?

If you're running through the streets without any clothes on, then you get what you deserve. If you're in your own shower, then that's another story. Most people would feel violated, embarrassed and quite angry. The point is this: each and every person is entitled a certain amount of privacy.

Even though many people think of privacy as being only a factor in which naked bodies and personal space are involved, the issue extends far beyond that. One issue that will be more and more important as the years roll along is medical privacy. Every one of us has a health record of some sort. Who ought to be allowed to access that record? As a patient, you may assume that only your doctor can see it, and in many cases that may be true.

Mark McGrath

But you must be wary. There are hundreds of individuals and companies out there who would love to get their hands on your medical records. They would love to "peep" if you know what I mean. With the new waves of technology that are hitting hospitals, they may soon be able to do just that. You see, almost all hospitals are now making a move to computerize their records, and even to put them on various networks. While computerizing medical records will make them easier to find and keep in order, this action comes with a set of problems that must be considered.

To put a person's medical history on a computer network is to make it available to any number of people, whether that be a doctor, his or her secretary or a 15-year-old kid in Wisconsin, who happens to be able to crack whatever code or device is being used to safeguard the files. And if that kid can do it, any number of computer hackers could also do it, instantly making your information available to any number of interested parties including prospective employers.

Employers would love to see what possible employees have on their records. Say, for example, a person was to have a history of drug abuse or mental illness behind them. Even if it really was behind them, these problems carry such stigmas that they'd have little chance of actually being hired.

If psychological histories were kept in the same manner, anyone could have access to the most secret of secrets in your personal life. If you were to tell a psychologist that you were a man who liked to wear women's clothing or that you have repeatedly tried to commit suicide, anyone who wanted that information could know. Your life could be ruined because you had confidence in the patient-doctor relationship.

There are advantages to having medical information widely available as well. If you were to have some sort of accident while traveling, doctors could almost instantly make use of a certain amount of information about you. Records could also provide a vast amount of data that could be used in studies to improve medical knowledge. These benefits included, the disadvantages still outweigh the advantages in such a situation.

The scariest idea involves genetic testing and the role it plays in this discussion. As technology is improved, genetic information is beginning to resemble more and more a road map of life. With genetic testing, your medical records can be a very accurate prediction of your future because there are tests for any number of heritable diseases and illnesses; many of which are untreatable or very expensive to treat. Currently, there are tests that accurately detect a predisposition to cancers of the colon and breast, Alzheimer's disease, Huntington's disease and many others.

When a genetic predisposition to a particular condition exists, companies like insurance providers are brought into the mix. They don't want the responsibility of providing health care for someone who they know may be genetically "risky." It's just not good business sense. For that reason, they could conceivably, because of your genetic makeup, withhold coverage. Even scarier, this could happen without your approval.

When we talk about secrets that are hidden in your genes, we're talking about things that are so personal, that you yourself may not even want to know about them. Many people refuse to be tested for deadly diseases because they view not knowing as better than a virtual death sentence that would come with a positive result.

When you have a genetic test, you are improving your chances of successfully overcoming potential problems by getting a look at what you have in store for you. However, any information revealed would undoubtedly have to be placed on your permanent medical record and therefore terrifyingly close to the hands of the aforementioned companies, or should I call them the "peeping toms?"

Accessing people's private medical records can be just as invasive as a peeping tom looking through the foggy windows that separates him from his victim's exposed privates as they step out of the shower. And like peeping toms, these other violators may look for many nights without being spotted. While preventing the problem could be extremely difficult, it is important that we know it is out there and do what we can to prevent such gross invasions of personal privacy.

Mark McGrath is a Collegian columnist.

You know you're a senior when...

A - I was sitting writing my column last week. I came to a shocking realization. Considering school is winding down, I only have a couple of articles left to write. Unfortunately I still have so many more things I wish to express my opinion about. I never got to tell you how I feel about national health care and the welfare system and I've promised dozens of people I'll write about them and how they've changed my life in some way (or possibly how we just happen to live in the same apartment building). However, with only two more opportunities to let you know just how I feel about everything I guess I'll just try to cram in as much as I can. So please excuse me if I seem to jump around a bit.

Dawn Jennings

First of all, and don't take this negatively, I'm very flattered when people come up to me to say they read my column. However, if I was to write articles about each and every one of you that's asked me, I'd never be saving anything else. So I was standing in line at Mike's and was talking to so and so... While at Stop and Shop last week I met this great guy, so and so ... etc."

I'm also not supposed to use this column as an advertisement section. I met these really cool kids, and I think everyone should buy the t-shirts they're selling. I went to the Hobart party on Saturday and not like I'd say which apartment is the best or anything (12) but maybe I could just kinda hint at it? Really folks, if you want to be mentioned, you have to be a little more creative.

Speaking of the Hobart party, I had a really unusual experience happen to me this weekend. I know we've all been introduced to someone with whom it turns out we had a previous encounter. It happens all the time. Perhaps both your parents forced you to go to the same summer camp when you were kids. Maybe you both randomly have relatives from Idaho and happened to be in the same town for the Potato Fest in '85.

How you would ever get in a discussion where you'd find this out, I don't know. However, to meet someone that it turns out was in the jail cell next to yours two hours earlier, is where I must draw the line. Not only that, but to be drinking with this person, which is why you both got arrested in the first place, is something which, really, just doesn't happen. When you see this on a Seinfeld episode next year...

Yes, my roommates are probably going to kill me for mentioning yet another little fact about our lives, but we were arrested this weekend. Mind you, this was two days after I was given a lecture in one of my classes not to do anything stupid like get arrested only a couple weeks before graduation. However, the whole thing was pretty ridiculous. I mean having to get mug shots and sitting in a jail cell for three hours because we were carrying an open container of Bud Ice Light (yes, they actually specified the type of beer we were drinking when we went to court yesterday), seems a bit much. What killed me though was when they asked if I was contemplating suicide because of the charge. Ummm... maybe if I had been arrested for shooting someone or something, but I think I can handle this situation without any major psychological scaring.

Alright, here's one of those jumps between topics I warned you about. However, I need to say something about car alarms. I understand why they were originally invented. Yet, explain to me the point of having your car make loud, obnoxious, beeping noises when something like the wind blows, if you're not going to go and check to see what's wrong. My parking lot has one such car, whose owners live somewhere near my apartment. It goes off all the time. If they were to come running out to make sure their precious car was OK each time it went off, maybe I wouldn't mind as much. However, they probably live on the other side of the building and don't even hear it going off at four in the morning. Really, have some respect for your neighbors who might have early classes.

Sweet dreams are made of these

Has anyone else been having really messed-up dreams lately? I don't know if it's the change in seasons (even though it's May and we still have temperatures in the 40's) or if I'm just getting anxious over graduation. Either way, I have had a dream every night for the past two weeks, and I think I need to have them analyzed.

A few nights ago, I dreamt that I was scuba diving with a whole bunch of people in a contest. The object of the contest was to find a brand new car that was at the bottom of the ocean and use a special floatation device to get it to the surface — whoever did it first wins the car. I found a brand new Nissan Pathfinder at about 35-feet down, and started to attach my special devices to it. It was me and this guy neck and neck — he was trying to surface a new Toyota Tercel, which just isn't fair because it's such a lighter car. But anyway, I finally got the truck to the surface and won it.

I don't need this one analyzed. I just have to remind myself never to watch The Abyss before I go to bed.

About a week ago, I had this dream about a clown that really really wanted me to eat this pickle he had. I mean, this clown wanted me to eat this pickle so bad, it was killing him.

"Come on! This is the best damned pickle you'll ever eat in your life! Eat it! Eat it!"

He wouldn't leave me alone and people were starting to look, so I just bit the bullet (a.k.a. the pickle) and ate the stupid soaked cucumber. When I bit into it, the center was filled with a bunch of worms (kind of like a Stephen King Twinkie). I didn't find this very funny but that freaking clown did. I guess you might call this a nightmare.

If anyone out there can accurately analyze this mental burp I call a dream, you may be eligible for a Nobel prize.

I know I'm not eligible for a Pulitzer here.

A few nights later was a much more pleasant dream. I met a nice woman in a bar (now you know it's a dream)... I mean, we were really hitting it off. She tells me that she has to go to the bathroom so she leaves, and I wait and wait and wait. Finally I go to the bathroom to make sure she's OK. I open the door and it turns out to be an elevator. I travel to the "boys" elevator, and go down a floor looking for her.

The doors slide open. I turn the corner and there she is, hitting on Darth Vader. I think to myself "Oh man, not again."

Since I started liking girls (no, not last year you jerk), Darth Vader has always stolen them in my dreams. Don't the women know that even though you should never under-estimate the dark side, the force is where it's at?

Maybe I should just calm down a little bit.

Of course, then I had this lovely dream of this woman and I at the beach and... whoa, sorry, family newspaper, I'll skip this one.

The other night I dreamt I was sitting at graduation, my parents were there, looking proud. I was about to flip my tassel when Chancellor David K. Scott stops the ceremony.

"Wait a minute," he said in his heavy English accent. "Timothy J. White? You failed gym... give me your robe, you disgrace."

I don't need an analyst to tell me what that one meant. I'm still trying to figure out what the bottom half of Chancellor Scott's body was doing in a Barney costume though.

Sometimes I get those dreams when I know that I'm in a dream, so I do things that I would never do in real life.

"Hey Schwarzenegger, yeah I'm talking to you dirt-bag. Why don't you and your sissy muscles take a walk so me and Shriver here can get to know each other?"

The other night I had this nightmare that I had a paper due the next day and I hadn't even started reading the book... oh wait, that's my life.

I don't usually dream this much, I'm just on a streak right now. Or maybe, I need lots of heavy medication... which is perfectly fine with me.

I'm starting to be able to control what the subject matter of my dreams will be — a lot of practice I guess. I just think about something a lot before I fall asleep and that seems to work.

Tonight I'll think about Cindy Crawford and I hanging out at a beach enjoying the sun. With my luck though, it won't turn out exactly how I want.

"No Cindy I won't eat the pickle, I've fallen for that before."

You deserve a break today...

Anyone with a television over the past week has probably seen the various commercials with Ronald McDonald doing everything from playing a round of golf and being a pool shark at the local billiards hall to cutting some rug at a hip- hop dance club.

The promotional advertisement is for the May 9th commencement of the "McDonald's is for grown-ups, too," campaign which just boggles my mind.

As old as I am, and as many Chicken McNuggets I have already eaten in my life, I still enjoy taking regular trips to the Golden Arches for the best French fries in the world. But the question still lingers in my head. "How can you make McDonald's, the fast food chain which has served more people than there are on Earth, more appealing to the older generations who grew up on Filet-o-Fish and special sauce?"

Justin C. Smith

Here are some of my suggestions to Ray A. Kroc's successors:

Beer on tap in Ronald's Playland — How many times in the beautiful summer months are kids frolicking outside, diving into the colored ball tank as they scream at their parents to let them stay all night. Well, with this new enhancement, they can. Mom or Dad can have their fun too as they watch their kids from the bar. It will be the kids who will have drag their parents away kicking and screaming.

Keno — The lottery style game is popping up everywhere. Heck... I stop into the Mobil Mart near my home and while I'm filling my gas tank, I can play Keno, so why not at Micky D's?

Mayor McCheese — In this little bit of commercial genius, who else should be going for a light jog through Central Park with a Mayor then Mr. President himself, Bill Clinton. He already has done enough promotional good for the restaurant chain that he hasn't gotten paid for. At least this time he will be making more money for another real estate investment.

Hamburglar — Now that he can't grab burgers from the clown, he is trying to improve his image by stepping up his grade of meat. The caped grade D thief attempts to duplicate the feat of nabbing cows' heads from the front lawn of the Hilltop Steak House.

Big Mac (The Burger Bobbie) — Takes a stab at the Los Angeles police department, but after three weeks on the force, his fellow officers serve him up medium rare.

Justin C. Smith is a Collegian columnist.

Speaking of Birdie, all of the new commercials involve only Ronald himself and have neglected to mention any of his friends in the advertisements since he has started his Metamucil habit. I wonder what they might be doing if they were to have their own 30-second spots.

Grimace — I can picture it know. Caesar's Palace this November as Michael Buffer belts out for Wrestlemania XXV, "For the WWF Heavyweight title in the Steel Cage match, in the red corner at 320 pounds from parts unknown... Grimace. He will take on in the blue corner at 410 pounds from Never Never Land... Barney the Dinosaur."

The Fry Guys — These three compatriots will be taking the place of the Hanson Brothers and the "Doobie Doobie Doo," penguin in the latest spin-offs of the Bud Ice commercials. Beware of the Fry Guys!

Mayor McCheese — In this little bit of commercial genius, who else should be going for a light jog through Central Park with a Mayor then Mr. President himself, Bill Clinton. He already has done enough promotional good for the restaurant chain that he hasn't gotten paid for. At least this time he will be making more money for another real estate investment.

Hamburglar — Now that he can't grab burgers from the clown, he is trying to improve his image by stepping up his grade of meat. The caped grade D thief attempts to duplicate the feat of nabbing cows' heads from the front lawn of the Hilltop Steak House.

Big Mac (The Burger Bobbie) — Takes a stab at the Los Angeles police department, but after three weeks on the force, his fellow officers serve him up medium rare.

Justin C. Smith is a Collegian columnist.

Players Plus Trivia — This is the perfect opportunity for parents and children to learn useless information together. While the family enjoys their McD.L.T.'s and McLean's, they can answer questions that they might some day actually use.

Magazine rack in the bathroom — In the lower racks you can have the regular Highlights, Ranger Rick and Boys Life and on the highest rack, well out of any children's reach can be your typical adult entertainment magazines. The two types of magazines are in the same genre anyway... no matter who picks them up, everyone just looks at the pictures.

Early Birdie in a Hooter waitresses outfit — There's no more standing in line waiting deciding whether you want the Strawberry or Shamrock shake, as the scandalously dressed bird takes your order while you sit in your booth.

Scooby–Who?

Remember the good old days? Remember Saturday mornings, waking up to eat a bowl of sugary cereal, watching shows like "Star Blazers," "G Force" and "Dungeons & Dragons?" Remember Spiderman, Iceman and Firestar, or the heroes of the Justice League? Those were the days.

It was an age of innocence.

You could play cowboys and Indians, tag or build-the- army when there wasn't anything else to do. It was an age of imagination.

But now we are all corrupted. We have eaten the apple of knowledge and grown up to know everything at once and yet nothing at all. To prove this, just watch an episode or two of "Scooby Doo." When we were kids, "Scooby-Doo" used to be just a cool cartoon: Scoob was a dopey dog, Fred was cool, Velma was smart, Daphne was a girl and Shaggy was a little weird.

Evan Young

Boy, how the meanings can change when you grow up.

Now, most of us have heard about how Scooby–Doo is just a show about pot, how the Dream Machine (yunno, with the big trippy-colored flowers on the sides) is like the CRC headquarters on wheels or how Scooby Snacks are addictive pot cookies and Scooby is hooked. Well, that's all very funny, but it's all true too!

Let us look a little deeper. The following is a quick list I've compiled of reasons why Scooby-Doo is a cartoon about sex, drugs and rock and roll...

Sex: First, Fred is a stallion. Blond hair, big muscles, surrounded by two chicks. Second, have you ever really watched Daphne? Check out how she stands. She's always got her hands on her hips, sticking her butt out in either direction, making ga–ga eyes at Fred. Sure, Velma may be smart, but you know what she's really thinking about.

Ever wonder why Shaggy and Scooby are always the ones that have to go find all the bad guys or crawl in the basements or go out to the eerie docks at night? It's cause Fred is gettin' down with his babes. Besides, how could they resist a guy with a scarf like that? If nothing else, Fred is a snappy dresser.

Drugs: Yunno how I just mentioned Fred's scarf? Right? There is reason numero uno why he's wacked out. Velma has to be high. You ever hear how many different names she calls Shaggy and Scooby? Besides the fact that she can never remember their names, she's always calling them some kind of food. For example: "You turkeys!" or "You fried chickens!" I even heard her say "You guys are a bunch of chicken burritos!"

What's the deal with Scooby Snacks? We all know they're addictive and all, but have you ever noticed the crazy stuff that Scooby does to get them? Have you ever noticed the ridiculous things Shaggy and Scooby do anyway? They are constantly wigged about something.

Yunno, you'd figure that they would all have learned that ghosts don't exist by now... or vampires... or seaweed men, but NO! Every friggin' episode, they get all bugged out about some guy that turns out to be just a dude wearing a mask or a hologram. They just don't have any idea. I was watching an episode the other day about some pterodactyl– man monster. At one point in the episode, the five of them walk into an inn. The innkeeper gets them rooms, and then a seven-foot tall really creepy quiet guy takes their luggage. The innkeeper says "See you in the morning... I hope," then as they are walking by the window the pterodactyl-man flies up to it and screeches really really loud.

Does the gang notice? Nope.

Scooby always laughs at things that really aren't funny. His eyes bulge out. Scooby and Shaggy get into a closet with the bad guy in every episode. Shaggy says "Zoinks!" like five times an episode.

As a final note... Have you ever seen Scooby–Dum, Scooby–Doo's crackhead cousin? If you've ever wondered where they get the drugs, well, he's your answer.

Rock and Roll: I guess this isn't as obvious as the other ones, but next time you watch an episode, listen to the music. It gets spooky, or fast, or whatever the scene might call for. But pay attention next time — every so often the music starts gettin' funky! Like, not bad '80s funky, but they really get down! But the funk is rare; usually they just rotate between the five different kinds of music. Something else to watch out for, though... listen every time one of them makes an exclamation. Some kind of freaky bass drum sound goes off in the background. Just something to think about.

Now, did any of us notice this stuff when we were little, like 12 years ago, or whenever the show was on? I never remember thinking "whoa, check out Fred. He's pimpin'."

Well, like I said: Those were the good old days.

HAVE YOU NOTICED WE FIGHT THE SAME FIGHTS OVER AND OVER AGAIN?
DON'T I KNOW IT? IT ALL STARTS WHEN YOU ASK SOME SEEMINGLY INNOCENT QUESTION, BUT WHICH I HEAR AS AN ATTACK ON ME, YOU LITTLE CREEP!
THEN I GET DEFENSIVE AND RESPOND IN KIND, YOU STUPID WHINER.
THEN I START BOILING INSIDE AT THE PERCEIVED AFFRONT TO MY DIGNITY, AND WITHOUT WARNING I EXPLODE IN ANGER!
YOU HEAR ME, JERKO?
IN THE FACE OF YOUR RAGE, I WITHDRAW EMOTIONALLY.
WHICH LEAVES ME SEETHING IN FRUSTRATION. OOH! I COULD JUST--!
WHICH GIVES ME A GREAT DEAL OF SADISTIC SATISFACTION, HEH HEH
WHICH MAKES ME WANT TO SMASH YOU WITH SOME COOL REMARK, LIKE "YOU'D BE MORE SUCCESSFUL IF YOU WEREN'T SUCH A PATHETIC LOSER."
WHICH IN TURN MAKES ME WANT TO INFLICT SOME SORT OF VICIOUS REVENGE ON YOU, SUCH AS POINTING OUT YOUR HUGE HONKER OF A NOSE.
AND THE STUNNING MEANNESS OF YOUR EMOTIONAL ABUSE DEVASTATES ME. I CONSIDER KILLING MYSELF OUT OF SHAME AND SELF-HATRED. I'M SUCH A WORTHLESS FOOL.

DAMN, WE'RE INSIGHTFUL.

The importance of foreign aid

Foreign aid is an international financial issue which directly affects the American economy in a big way, yet it is one of America's most misunderstood government programs.

Most Americans believe we just give money to other countries and never see it again, but statistics disprove that fact. The Foreign Assistance Program was created to encourage economic, military and strategic defense cooperation between the United States and many other countries. Foreign aid also aims to build a more stable and democratic world by funding countries attempting to fight terrorism and oppression, helping the world's poorest countries to strengthen joint research and educational programs with many universities and create more markets for our products and jobs for our workers.

Alan Weinfeld

A major question asked by every taxpayer is what percent of the federal budget is spent on foreign aid. The answer is that foreign aid is only nine-tenths of one percent of the budget. Another key issue is that 73 percent of all foreign aid is spent here in the United States and specifically 83 percent of Israel's foreign aid is spent in the United States. As you can see, a majority of the foreign aid we grant to other countries is spent in the United States economy with the goods being purchased from American companies employing American workers.

With interest on our national debt skyrocketing every year, every federal program, especially foreign aid, will be under severe pressure. The foreign aid budget will continue to be in competition for limited resources this year. We cannot afford to cut foreign aid because in our new global economy, the United States will need to cooperate with several countries and eradicate trade barriers in order to economically compete with the rest of the world.

Foreign aid is a basic instrument of American foreign policy. For nearly half a century, America's overseas assistance programs have helped advance American security, political, economic and humanitarian interests. By assisting American allies and trade partners around the world, fostering democratic ideals and providing friends with the means to sustain themselves economically, politically and militarily, foreign aid remains a cost-effective tool of statecraft.

The reasons for granting foreign aid to Israel are compelling. As already stated, 83 percent of Israel's foreign aid is spent in the United States creating 304,645 jobs and generating $16 billion in exports. A state-by-state breakdown shows that in Massachusetts alone, over $729 million was spent creating thousands of jobs for Massachusetts residents. Another huge reason to grant aid to Israel is that it is the only democracy and our only ally in the Middle East. The biggest threats to the security of both America and Israel are the proliferation of nuclear, chemical and biological weapons by extremist states such as Iran, Iraq, Syria and Libya. At less that one percent of the U.S. budget, foreign aid is a cost-effective way to strengthen allies, promote democracy, achieve humanitarian goals and protect U.S. interests overseas.

The biggest reason that the United States should continue foreign aid is because it is a large U.S. economic interest. Overseas assistance generates significant returns at home. At less than one percent of the federal budget, foreign aid has a powerful multiplier effect on the U.S. economy, creating exports, jobs, tax revenues and other economic benefits that greatly outweigh its budgetary cost. America's main economic competitors are well aware of the benefits reaped from foreign aid, and allocate significant resources to their own foreign assistance programs.

Foreign aid helps maintain America's competitive edge in the race for markets, exports and jobs by promoting the purchase of U.S. products, fostering business relationships, attracting foreign customers, increasing exposure to U.S. firms and breaking down trade barriers. Foreign aid also helps U.S. exporters penetrate foreign markets through competitive financing, loan guarantees, political risk insurance, feasibility studies and technical assistance.

The United States must keep its promise to Yitzhak Rabin and the many other Israelis who gave their lives for peace and continue to grant foreign aid funds to Israel at the current level. In this time of peace, it is most crucial for the United States to stand behind Israel in light of the significant risks Israel is taking for peace. The Foreign Assistance Program will definitely contribute to the Unites States being a superpower country and the global leader in our new world order.

Cars are driving us crazy

Recently there was a traffic jam on Rt. 9. This should not come as a surprise to any of us. I had the good fortune to be stuck inside a PVTA bus during this affair. Normally, such a predicament would try my patience and incline me towards anti-social behavior, but this time I happened to glance out a window and observe a fascinating situation. Car after car was backed up for several miles.

Jed Curtis

This seemed tragic on the surface but further inspection made it impossible to muster any pity for these motorists: in almost every case there was only one person in the car, leaving four or more seats empty. If the combined motorists had been willing to car-pool with each other, there would never have been a traffic jam.

Why then was everyone alone in their cars? Fear was one motivating factor. If these automotives had passengers they would have to engage in conversation, and human interaction can be messy. It is much easier to turn on the radio and be lulled into passivity by the mindless drivel of most radio stations. The second major cause of the traffic jam was fascism.

We have allowed ourselves to be brainwashed into thinking we need a car in order to exist in our society. Fascism is a word that scares people due to its association with Nazism. Actually, fascism is the result of unconscious or unquestioning conformity, such as buying an automobile or turning on the radio and being manipulated by the media. The consequence of fascism under Hitler was mass genocide, but our American fascism is leading down the same road. Next time you are bored and think about watching television, try this short experiment instead: stand on the roadside and take a deep breath after a single car drives by. You will find your lungs filled with carbon monoxide.

Every day we unquestioningly drive around in our cars, polluting the air. This method of genocide is not the most efficient, but it works on the same principle as Nazi death camps: poison gas. After this experiment you may suddenly experience a pang of conscience. If not, then you have proven your allegiance to American fascism and may feel free to turn on the television to receive the latest brainwashing bulletin.

The idea of the car in itself is not necessarily bad. But several automotive conspiracies need to be pointed out. First, the car is deliberately constructed out of corrosive material that will decay after several years and need to be replaced. It would be simple for car companies to use more durable materials but this would not be in their economic interests.

Moreover, it is now possible to manufacture cars that get up to 80 miles of travel per gallon of gas. If this was done, our poor oil companies would suffer. However, there is hope that electric cars will eliminate the need for oil all together.

Unfortunately we are often handicapped if we do not have access to a car. But this does not mean we need to own a car. By any sensible standard only one in five citizens should own a car since most cars can fit five people. Failure to car-pool should be a capital offense. But hopefully we can be responsible enough to car-pool out of our own initiative rather than feeling compelled to do so out of fear of being reprimanded.

American individualism has led to greater investment in private cars than public transit. We can learn a lot about public transportation from Europe which has an extensive and efficient monorail system. The PVTA is a step in the right direction but runs on gasoline and belches out carbon monoxide. The advantage of a system such as the monorail is its ability to cut down on pollution, expenses and traffic jams.

In religion the term karma is used to describe the consequences of past actions. One aspect of United States citizens' collective karma is the millions of polluting cars we have produced. This situation lends itself to the coining of a new term, carma. We have no choice but to face the reality of our fleet of millions if not billions of cars. It is up to us to decide whether we like what we see and, if not, to adjust our lives accordingly.

Insane in the dorms

Any days in the dorms slowly dwindle down I am slowly going insane.

This is a new development. Very recently, I was undecided as to whether I should remain in the dorms for my senior year. I finally have a cool roommate, I eat well (the Off Campus Meal Plan kicks butt!), the dorms are conveniently located and it's nice that there are always people to party with.

Jeremy Hurewitz

Despite these benefits, I now feel differently. I now feel that if I had to spend any more than the next few weeks in the dorms I would hang myself out my third floor window.

My change of heart occurred after spring break. Lack of funds caused me to have an uneventful spring break, cribbed out at my pad in New York.

Drinking alone, reading and playing my guitar with no one else around was one of the finest weeks I've enjoyed in a while.

Since spring break, the little things have gotten to me and I'm as skittish as a wet cat.

I can't handle leaving my room to take a leak and having to see, and exchange pleasantries with half a dozen people. It's annoying and embarrassing walking down the hallway in my towel to the swamp-pit showers as the drafty building shoots cold breezes up my towel and girls snicker and laugh at me. I resent not being allowed to burn a candle or incense. Most of all I hate being held accountable to some weenie RA for blasting Nirvana at 2 a.m. on a Monday night.

The main thing that has grown old is dealing with the people I meet in the hallways. My friend and I have been wondering why it is that people our age seem to greet each other with inane, unanswered questions. How many times have you walked past someone and said "What's up?" or "How ya doing?" only to have them nod at you and return that same question right back at you? Lately I've been trying to answer people honestly when they query me and its raised some eyebrows. "How ya doing, Jeremy?" "feel sick." — "What's up, dude?" "Well... I just masturbated and now I'm gonna go by a soda."

What makes it all so dull, tiresome and phony is that I just don't care. Because of this I feel like a fake when I say "What's up? or "How are you?" I've been trying to say "Hi" or "Hey" when I see people and save the questions for when I really want to know the answers.

On a similar point I feel that people may think I'm an arrogant bastard if I don't stop and hacky–sack with them or talk about how wasted I got last night. Really, I just want to use the bathroom and get back to my room with minimal social contact.

Another point of irritation, and this may be just a central thing, is the big man status of marijuana. Some people are just out of hand and gripless. I'm supposed to respect and seek the friendship of the person who has the dankest, most crystallized weed? Sorry, I don't feel that way. I know there's always an in–group mentality wherever you go and I prefer it right here on the outside looking in.

Furthermore, and this may seem like blasphemy to some, I prefer to burn commercial pot over kind buds. I don't get high that often anymore and when I do I don't need to feel like I'm tripping, just a little re–tuning the frequency of life is enough for me.

This marijuana elite has led to much arrogance. Can't you snap–hippies just get over yourselves?

All right I've said my piece. For the rest of the semester I just want to be left alone in my room, drinking, listening to Coltrane and reading Charles Bukowski. If you come knock on my door and I yell "GO AWAY!" — please do.

Letters to the Editor and Columns
Attention all columnists: If you haven't yet, please come down this week to get your picture taken. Questions? Call Bob. The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes and encourages letters to the editor. When writing, please type your letter and keep it to a maximum of 400 words. We would much rather print several concise letters in the limited space available on the page. All letters should include a name, address and phone number (for verification purposes only). Students should also include their year and major. The Collegian reserves the right to edit submissions for grammar, clarity and length. Send all letters to the Ed/Op page c/o the Collegian, 113 Campus Center, UMass.
Letters to the Editor can also be sent through our e- mail account: letters@olvms.olt.umass.edu
The Ed/Op page is also always looking for columnists. If you are interested in writing columns for the Collegian, come down to the office, or call at 545-1491, and ask to speak to Bob Dunn.

Comparisons unfair

To The Editor:

I am writing in regard to an editorial published Thursday, May 2, 1996. The author states that Shimon Peres, in accidentally killing innocent Lebanese refugees while trying to defend his country, is another Adolf Hitler, who purposely killed 6 million Jews because of his own hatred. First of all, one can not compare a defensive act to save a country with a predetermined strategy to purposely kill an entire race. The atrocities that Hitler and the Nazis performed were despicable and I am horrified to see his name and his actions so loosely attached to world leaders trying desperately for peace. Second of all, no one is saying that Israel was not wrong or made no mistakes. However, the bombing of innocent Lebanese people was accidental. In fact, Hezbollah purposely places army sites near civilian populations to ensure that innocent victims do get caught in the crossfire.

If this author wants to compare the Holocaust to present times, one should not overlook the striking resemblance of the use of words for propaganda between this author and the Nazi's, such as condescendingly calling Jews "God's chosen people" or saying that Shimon Peres ordered the bombings to be tough on "filthy Muslim babies and women." These were not Peres' words. These were words that the author used to twist reality around and make people believe false information. This is precisely the kind of misrepresentation that Holocaust education is essential for. We need to learn from the past to prevent history from repeating itself.

The Holocaust was "genocidal annihilation." The war in Lebanon is part of a long series of battles between Israel and its surrounding countries that has been going on since the creation of the State of Israel. The author does not seem to be concerned about the hundreds of innocent Israeli lives, including children celebrating Purim on the streets of Tel Aviv, that were taken by the same people who are now calling Israelis murderers. The author needs to decipher between historical events and readers should distinguish between fact and opinion.

Students not the only victims

To the editor:

The April 30 Collegian reported on the Free Our Fee Coalition meeting with SGA officers and the unhappiness with Chancellor Scott's "unfair" treatment of students — which consisted of stringing students along, then surprising them with unpleasant news, according to the story.

You should know that this is the way the administration treats workers too. For all the idealistic rhetoric we hear from the University managers, our real experience is of manipulation and self serving actions on their part. Thus students and workers are treated unfairly by management, and there is common ground for students and workers to join together to work for honest and fair policies in the university — an unfortunate distraction, from our work to provide the state with good quality education, in order to get a fair framework for our efforts.

Your story made reference to civil disobedience, which the Coalition had discarded in favor of negotiations. Isn't a shame that management responds so badly to reason, thereby inviting other approaches?

Another view of Colvin

To the editor:

I feel compelled to give another perspective of the Shawn Colvin/Cowboy Junkies concert at Amherst College. It was the first time I had seen Shawn Colvin but I have been listening to her CD's for a long time. I was so impressed with Colvin's performance, that I was shocked by the review that [Lisa] Oliveri had written. My reaction to the concert was the complete opposite to Ms. Oliveri's.

Colvin's performance was outstanding. It was very impressive to hear a live performance that sounds exactly like the recordings. Shawn Colvin is not only a gifted performer, but she is also an entertainer. The performance could in no way be described as dull if the audience's reaction was any indication.

Taking a look at free software available on the world wide web

Shareware offers some inexpensive, powerful applications that people can easily find on the Internet.

Below are some of the best shareware and freeware applications that the Internet offers.

WinZip 6.1

WinZip 6.1 is one of the best zipping utilities for Windows.

It reads every type of archive from the standard zip to obscure formats like arj and lzh.

A nice feature that makes WinZip great for novices is the Wizard.

The Wizard simplifies the interface of WinZip, so it becomes less confusing for people who know very little about computers.

The Wizard takes the user through a step by step process. It prompts the user to answer questions before it unzips the archive.

For advanced users WinZip is still easy to use, but quite powerful. WinZip's best feature in the classic interface is the install button.

Instead of simply unzipping an archive, then installing it, WinZip offers the user the opportunity to install the application without wasting hard drive space. It temporarily unzips the archive, then deletes everything after successfully installing the software.

WinZip is a must for any Windows user whether using Windows 3.1 or '95 — it comes in versions for both operating systems. To download a copy off the Web go to http://www.winzip.com. A

ACDSee

ACDSee is a simple graphics viewer that reads practically every format from BMPs to JPEGs.

ACDSee touts itself as the fastest viewer available. It supposedly decodes images and displays them at the same time unlike other viewers such as Lview Pro.

ACDSee is a bare bones application when compared to its competitors.

It lacks editing features — even Lview Pro has a few simple editing functions.

Although it lacks editing features, it excels at slide shows. It also provides users the opportunity to convert any image into the desktop wall paper.

ACDSee comes in two versions: one for Windows 3.1, and another for Windows '95. The only difference is that the Windows '95 version reads long file names.

To download a copy go to http://vvv.com/acd/acdsee95.html B-

Paint Shop Pro 3.12

If simply viewing GIFs and JPEGs is not enough, then check out Paint Shop Pro.

It is not quite as strong as commercial applications such as Adobe Photoshop, but it is still very powerful for shareware.

It allows users to create and manipulate images unlike ACDSee.

Anyone with a web page who is tired of simply stealing other people's images, can use this to create simple banners and even graphics.

It supports scanners, so users can create new photographic images too.

For Windows '95 users there is now relief from the cumbersome problem of using the built in winsock.

When the winsock is clicked on, it does not immediately attempt to connect, nor does it redial if there is a busy signal, but Dunce remedies that problem.

Dunce automates the whole winsock.

When a winsock connection is clicked on, Dunce immediately connects, and then shrinks it when the connection is established.

Dunce always runs in the background, and the icon appears in the icon tray rather than the toolbar.

"Dr. Katz" catches on

Boston animator a hit on Comedy Central

By Nancy Rabinowitz
Associated Press

BOSTON — When comedian Jonathan Katz premiered his show "Dr. Katz, Professional Therapist" on Comedy Central last May, he didn't know how long it would last.

A year later the animated ode to therapy, featuring computer-generated animation and the voices of guest stand-up comedians, has gained a cult following and Comedy Central has ordered 13 new episodes.

"I never in my wildest dreams thought it would be this successful," Katz said from his Newton home. "It's really the brainchild of me and Tom Snyder, who is my partner in this project."

Snyder, not the talk show veteran but a Cambridge software whiz, developed a technology called Squiggledivision, which involves making a single line drawing of a character, tracing it unevenly several times and using computers to regenerate the traces hundreds of times to make the animation shake like Jell-O.

The characters are in color while the backdrop is painted in black and white. The result is somewhat unsettling, which was what Katz intended.

"The movement of the characters shows the emotional turmoil that they're all in. It's a combination of artistic choice and technical breakthrough," he said.

Dr. Katz is routinely manipulated by Ben, his 20-something son who still lives at home, his bizarre patients and his surly secretary, Laura.

Storylines for the new episodes include: Ben and Dr. Katz experimenting with henna on their hair, Dr. Katz having a "sleepover" with a female friend and Ben operating a limo service for famous authors.

"We went though a series of stages, it started as a biography of Mr. Katz and then it became seven one-minute pieces called Dr. Katz Professional Therapist' that aired within other programming [on Comedy Central]. It happened over a period of about four years," Katz said.

The show now airs Sundays at 10 p.m. and repeats Tuesdays at 8 p.m., Thursdays at 9:50 p.m. and Saturdays at 11:30 a.m. and 9 p.m. Katz said the show is a bargain: "every episode of that show costs $30," he said. His new foray into network television might be more expensive. Katz has two sitcoms in the works — one animated sitcom for ABC and a live action show for NBC. "On that show I'm going to have to get the characters to shake just by shaking them," joked Katz.

Although Katz won't talk about the premise for the NBC show, he will say the animated program is "about a guy who inherits his father's casting company."

"Dr. Katz Professional Therapist" is produced in Katz's Watertown studio with Boston-based actors providing the voices of the show's regular characters. The setting for the show is deliberately vague, although a picture on a wall in Dr. Katz's office shows a basketball player wearing number 33. (Larry Bird, perhaps?)

The patients who frequent the therapist's office are often played by real stand-up comedians, using dialogue culled from their routines — a technique referred to as retro-scripting.

"A lot of the stuff for the show is autobiographical. In fact I'm in therapy right now — he's on the other line," said Katz, before putting a caller on hold.

"I don't know why I'm such a card on the phone," he said when he picked up again. "It's really obnoxious."

Center, the loss for the Blackhawks is immense. Hackett wasn't horrible in Game 2, but around now we start hearing lots of talk about how a team plays better in front of a particular goalie, and there's no doubt Chicago is at its best with Belfour at the back.

• Only one of the four conference semi-finals isn't tied 1 - 1. How shocking that the lone 2-0 cushion belongs to Detroit, courtesy of an 8-3 lambasting of St. Louis in game two Sunday? There's some truth to the rumor that Mike Keenan will scratch Wayne Gretzky, Brett Hull and Al Macinnis for game three to jump start his team.

By blowing the car doors off of everyone in their way, the men of Motor City are really just increasing the pressure on themselves to win it all. They are the Chicago Bulls, Atlanta Braves, Dallas Cowboys and Manchester United all rolled into one, and each Red Wing roster from Livonia to Kalamazoo has every intention of suicide if their boys don't drink from Lord Stanley's Cup.

• NHL commissioner Gary Bettman is an old NBA man, and yet again he need look no further than his former firm for tips on how to improve his new one. You've got to enhance the subplots, Gary. Attention centering on the Bulls– Knicks matchup would be ridiculous even if the country were at war, but by turning Michael's "injury" into the big story, his 44-point output seemed all the more startling. Why not claim that Sergei Fedorov or Jeremy Roenick is questionable with some sort of ailment, then when he scores a couple of goals it will become the stuff of legend? Well, at least there might not be several thousand empty seats at the Hangar for Game 4 of Chicago–Colorado.

• Sports Illustrated usually sends Michael Farber out to cover the glitzy NHL matter of the moment, but for the Blues defeat of Toronto in round one, Austin Murphy picked up the pen. Murphy does some nice, humorous work this piece on picked kicking, complete with descriptions of his own moonlighting efforts, is a classic), but of course he leaks an indication of his poor understanding of his subject by noting that Grant Fuhr should win the Vezina Trophy. To the surprise of no one with a clue, Fuhr wasn't even a finalist. I wonder, did Keenan tell Murphy to put that remark in his story?

• There were more than three worthy candidates for the Vezina, but Martin Brodeur and Ron Hextall were somehow both left out. The NHL takes another step toward the other mainstream sports by failing to properly distribute its awards.

• A friend and Bruins fanatic observes that Jon Rohloff may be progressing as Don Sweeney did. Remember what a sketch Sweeney was in his early days fresh out of Harvard? He's as dependable as they come today, and Rohloff was much less of a liability late in this season, so perhaps he's going to fit in after all. Maybe he'll even score a goal next year while there's still snow on the ground.

Sox pitching gone wild

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

BOSTON — What's white, has five sides and is buried in the ground in front of the catcher? If you said home plate, you're right. Now tell the Boston Red Sox pitchers.

They've had trouble finding it all season, and their wildness reached a low point in the weekend series against the Toronto Blue Jays. They walked batters in 18 of the 27 innings and issued 26 walks, nearly one per inning. Thirteen of the 15 pitchers they used gave up free passes.

That wasn't all.

Felipe Crespo, a Toronto rookie who had never reached base in his three major-league at bats, walked on four of his five trips to the plate Sunday. And he was batting ninth.

Sammy Ellis, who replaced Al Nipper as pitching coach last Tuesday, is aware of the problem but remains calm.

"If you're asking me if I'm concerned, no. If it continues another two weeks, yes," he said. "There's one thing about walks. The more you start addressing it and talking to pitchers about bases on balls, you're going to get bases on balls.

"All we're talking about is getting ahead in the count." After the Toronto series, Boston led the majors with 163 walks, 5.4 per game, and had the worst record.

Six of its 11 pitchers have more walks than strikeouts. Only six of the 26 pitchers the Red Sox used last year did that.

This season, middle reliever Stan Belinda is the worst at seeing opponents stroll to first base. He has 14 walks and five strikeouts in 14 innings. In 69 2/3 innings last year, he walked just 28 and struck out 57.

Bill Haselman was behind the plate Saturday when Belinda faced six batters. He walked three, hit one and tossed in a wild pitch.

"They're not missing by much. They're right around the plate," Haselman said of the pitchers. "Sometimes with certain guys you don't want to throw close to."

Like Joe Carter, perhaps, who had three homers in the series. But Felipe Crespo?

"The worst thing a pitcher can do is try to be too fine or making too good a pitch," Ellis said. "Nobody in the history of the game had such good command of his pitches to start nibbling from the get-go."

Despite the wildness against Toronto, Boston won two of the three games. But it was costly early in the season as the Red Sox walked 8, 11, 10, 8 and 7 batters in its first five games.

It lost them all.

They finally won the next game, 5-1 over Kansas City and gave up just two walks.

"I can't criticize my pitching staff. We have to score some runs for them," Mo Vaughn said. "I have noticed this year most of the time I've walked I've scored. You walk people, it's going to give you some problems."

Five of the 26 Blue Jays who walked ended up scoring, and the problem intensified in the late innings, when games often are decided.

Hobson arrested for possession

By Joann Loviglio
Associated Press

PAWTUCKET, R.I. — Butch Hobson, the former Boston Red Sox manager now managing in the minors, was arrested over the weekend and charged with cocaine possession.

He was given a leave of absence Monday as manager of Scranton-Wilkes- Barre, the Philadelphia Phillies' Triple-A farm club in the International League.

"Butch has told us that he is innocent of any wrongdoing," Phillies general manager Lee Thomas said.

Hobson, 44, was arrested Saturday at The Comfort Inn in Pawtucket, where the minor league team was staying during a two-game weekend series against the Pawtucket Red Sox.

Authorities had a search warrant, found two grams of cocaine in Hobson's hotel room, and arrested him at 1:30 p.m., said Drug Enforcement Agent Thomas Pasquarello.

Hobson's arrest is part of a larger investigation that will include more arrests in other states, Pasquarello said. He would not say how Hobson got the cocaine.

Television station WJAR in Cranston reported the cocaine was delivered to Hobson in an express-mail package from an acquaintance near Hobson's off-season home in Fairhope, Ala.

WJAR said Hobson told investigators he had lent the acquaintance "a few hundred dollars" and he thought the package might have contained a repayment. When he opened the package, it contained a magazine and a cocaine packet.

Hobson was arraigned at police headquarters and released on personal recognizance. He stayed in Pawtucket overnight and managed on Sunday before returning to Pennsylvania.

He has a court appearance set for July 10 in Rhode Island state court.

"We were absolutely blindsided by this," Scranton-Wilkes Barre general manager Bill Terlecky said.

The Phillies said Hobson would be on leave from the Red Barons "until the situation clarifies."

Roving minor league infield coach Ramon Aviles was assigned to manage the Red Barons. He was scheduled to join the team Tuesday. Terlecky said the team has had no problem with Hobson since he joined the club this year.

"That's why this is so hard to believe, it comes as such a shock," he said. "There's a lot of loyalty that I have for Mr. Hobson. There's a really strong sense of bonding that develops between the manager and general manager of a baseball team."

Red Barons' spokesman Mike Cummings said the team had not been able to reach Hobson at his Gouldsboro, Pa., home and would not comment beyond the Phillies' statement. There was no telephone listing for Hobson.

Phillies manager Jim Fregosi, who managed Hobson in 1981 when both were with the California Angels, said he did not know any of the circumstances surrounding the arrest.

"I just hope that we still live in America," he said before Monday night's game with Houston.

"We just have to wait and see what happens. Any time anybody has to go through something like this, your first concern is always for the family."

Hobson managed the Pawtucket Red Sox during the 1991 season and took over the managing job for the Boston Red Sox from 1992 to 1994. He was fired in 1994.

His record was 207-231 in three seasons, including the strike-shortened 1994 campaign.

Payton named Defensive Player of Year

By Jim Cour
Associated Press

SEATTLE — Gary Payton mentioned Michael Jordan, Alvin Robertson and George Gervin. He talked about Ralph Miller and Tim Grgurich, too.

He said they all helped turn him into the NBA Defensive Player of the Year, an award he received yesterday.

Miller, now retired, was Payton's coach at Oregon State. At Skyline High School in Oakland, Calif., he wanted to be like Gervin, an NBA Hall of Famer.

"In high school, I was offensive minded," Payton told a news conference. "I liked George Gervin a lot and you know he didn't play no D. He didn't play no D at all."

At Oregon State, Miller convinced the 6-foot-4 point guard he could be an outstanding defensive player as well as a top offensive player who averaged 25.7 points as a college senior.

With the Sonics, Grgurich, a George Karl assistant and former UNLV head coach, has worked with Payton, who led the NBA in steals with a career-best 2.85 steals a game this season.

After the Sonics made Payton the second pick in the 1990 NBA draft, he found out quickly about Robertson, another 6-4 guard and then a six-year veteran with Milwaukee.

"When I faced him for the first time in my pro career, I threw the ball up the court and he jumped in the middle of the air and grabbed it," Payton said. "I said, 'Hey, I'm going to be like him. I'm going to imitate him a lot.' That's what I've been trying to do the last couple of years."

Payton, 27, whose nickname is "The Glove" because of his defensive prowess, won his awards hands down.

A panel of sports writers and broadcasters gave him 56 of a possible 113 votes.

Chicago's Scottie Pippen was second with 15 votes. Denver's Dikembe Mutombo, last year's winner, was third with 13 votes. Other players receiving votes were San Antonio's David Robinson (9), Houston's Hakeem Olajuwon (8), Chicago's Jordan (7) and Dennis Rodman (4), Golden State's Latrell Sprewell (1), Orlando's Horace Grant (1) and Bo Outlaw of the Los Angeles Clippers (1).

Olajuwon, Robinson, Rodman and Jordan are past winners of the award. Payton, a two-time NBA All-Defensive team selection, helped Seattle lead the league in steals (10.7 per game) for the fourth consecutive season. The Sonics also led the league in turnovers forced with 18.5 per game.

Payton said a final-minute steal from Jordan in a 97-92 victory over the Bulls in Chicago Nov. 26 was the most important of his 231 steals this season. Jordan is considered the favorite to win the NBA MVP Award this year.

"I made the big play and we beat them," he said. "I think that made a good impression on you writers."

In his sixth NBA season, Payton will become a free agent after the playoffs this summer. It has been speculated it will take a $50 million contract for the Sonics to keep him.

Asked if the prestigious defensive award will help him get a more lucrative new contract, Payton's eyes lit up like he'd just seen a loose ball on the court.

"It's great for me," he said with a smile. "I hope a lot of people are worried now. It (his contract) might go up. I hope so." Payton scored 28 points in the Sonics' 108-75 win over two-time defending champion Houston in the opener of a Western Conference semifinal series Saturday. The teams met in Game 2 Monday night. Payton, who averaged 19.3 points during the regular season, said he was prouder of Seattle's defensive effort on Olajuwon, who was held to a playoff career-low six points.

"I think six or seven steals are better than 20 or 25 points," he said.

duce and do well for the next couple of years."

His plan is just that. Two years. Or shorter, hopefully. Rene is using this as a springboard. His dreams consist of the NFL. The disappointment of the last two weeks can't even squelch that.

Let's hope that Rene makes it. Not just because he's a UMass alum, or because he works so hard. If you know him, you know what I'm getting at. He's a class act, one of the friendlier guys I have encountered in interviewing athletes. As much passion as he has for the game of football, he treats people with an equal amount of respect. Win or loss, good game or bad game, drafted or not drafted, Rene Ingoglia treats you the same way, regardless.

Bonne chance, Rene.

the meet, 38 walked away having scored points for the team. Of these individuals, 20 registered their seasonal best performances showing that this squad may have yet unleashed their true potential.

Freshman middle-distance runner Neil Concepcion posted his season best time in the 400 meters at 49.04, qualifying him for the New England Championships, as well as placing him 11th on the all-time list. Sophomore Chris Conner followed Concepcion, picking up third place points for his squad with a time of 50.76.

Even with the depth and balance that the Minutemen have displayed, they also showed that they can thoroughly dominate several events as well. In addition to Toye's finish in the 200m the Minutemen also captured all but fourth of the top six positions. Massachusetts also managed to sweep the top three positions in the 5,000m with junior Matt Behl leading the pack with a time of 15:18.67.

"We've had a good first half of the season, won all our meets, and were mentally up for this meet," O'Brien said. "This was the first meeting of the second half of our season, which is the championship part of the season. It was a good measure of how deep our team is in a fairly competitive meet. From this point on, individual performances will become more important."

The Massachusetts squad will face a difficult task this weekend at the New England Championships in Williamstown where 26 individuals have qualified to compete. The team will need to adjust to this weekend's situation and come up with individual wins to accompany their depth.

UM clinches A–10 title without breaking a sweat

Leigh Torbin

The Atlantic 10 conference redefined the term student-athlete yesterday when it awarded its 1996 softball championship trophy to Massachusetts in a vacant Totman Gym classroom.

Rather than exhausted, mud-splattered players walking across a torn-up diamond to accept their awards fresh from a fulfilling triumph, the Minutewomen, wearing clean, new A–10 softball sweatshirts, rose from generic desks in Totman Room 156 to accept their prizes.

Their official coronation never came on the field, as after a third day of rain delays, A–10 Director of Championships John Ruppert finally relented, stating that enough was enough, and cancelled the championship game between UMass and Rhode Island.

As the team that advanced to yesterday's scheduled final out of the winner's bracket, including a 2-1 win over Rhody on Sunday, UMass was awarded its ninth postseason title in 11 years, and will host Marist College in a best-of-three NCAA play-in series starting on Thursday at 3 p.m. at Totman Field.

Despite the tireless work of groundskeepers Mike Isabel and Dennis O'Neill, Totman Field's red clay infield began to resemble the Red Sea under a weekend's worth of abuse from the sometimes torrential downpours. In addition to the infield, the outfield grass was saturated with water and was mushy like a bog.

Valiant efforts by the embattled grounds crew against the elements, coupled with a warehouse worth of diamond dry, could not make a difference.

The title game had already been pushed back to yesterday due to a complete wash out of Saturday's action, and with an infield hidden deep beneath standing water like the lost city of Atlantis, the conference's softball committee had no option but to cancel the game and send URI home. Its second place trophy will be mailed from the league headquarters in Philadelphia this morning.

The morning's games were initially postponed at 10:45 a.m., much to the chagrin of some players and media members involved with the tournament, who now found themselves without an excuse to miss their 11:15 classes.

By the time Ruppert and the rest of the committee reached their verdict to scrap the game altogether at about 1 p.m., the attitude had not changed.

A slightly less than enthusiastic UMass team entered the classroom to find an A–10 banner draped over the chalk board. Otherwise the room looked something like a Political Science discussion section as Cathy Bongiovi from the A-10 presented the awards.

Posing for a team photo with the trophy afterwards, the fairly apathetic players had to be encouraged to cheer, wave the No. 1 sign, and at least look like they had won a title.

For the record, four Minutewomen, Kelly Buckley, Sam Cardenas, Mandy Galas and Danielle Henderson were named to the All-Tournament team, while Henderson was named its Most Outstanding Player for her 13 innings of work, which saw her allow just one uncarned run and five hits.

Yesterday's hastily assembled ceremony and lack of a championship game were a fitting ending to a dreary weekend. A recap of the weekend's events or lack thereof should be included in course materials for Sports Management majors.

From a broken regular season championship trophy to the sporadic scheduling of games, everything that could go wrong did, but the A-10 officials handled it to the best of their abilities.

Things will hopefully go more according to plan as the team might be hosting Princeton in a crucial doubleheader today at 2:30 p.m. The contest is entirely contingent of the conditions of the field, and whether the ominous clouds that have lingered in Western Massachusetts lately dissipate.

Leigh Torbin is a Collegian columnist

The Massachusetts softball team clinched the A–10 championships without playing a final game, as wet weather prevented the Minutewomen from taking the field.

Women's track remains perfect

By Jen Ryder and Casey Kane
Collegian Staff

For the second time in as many weeks the Massachusetts women's track and field team travelled to Philadelphia, and Saturday the Minutewomen ran away with a victory.

The Minutewomen kept their season record perfect, as they won the Atlantic 10 Invitational this past weekend in Philadelphia.

None of the other eight teams participating proved to be a challenge for UMass, as it cruised to the victory, tallying a season-high 188 points.

Virginia Tech finished a distant second with 98 points. Temple (82), LaSalle (69) and Dayton (53) rounded out the top five, while Fordham, Duquesne, George Washington and St. Joseph's also competed.

The Minutewomen received stellar performances from sophomores Rosey Bryan and Rebecca Donaghue. Each won two events on the day to lead UMass in the win.

Bryan won the long jump with a leap of 18-feet-1-inch.

On the track, Bryan came away with the crown in the 100m high hurdles.

Her winning time of 14.69 seconds was good enough to rank third on the UMass all-time list for that event.

Donaghue also brought home a pair of first place finishes, taking top honors in the 800m and 1500m. She won the 800 in a time of 2:13.61, and the 1500 in 4:35.54.

Junior Heather Brown continued her string of strong performances, winning the javelin. Brown, who stands atop the UMass all-time best list for the event, threw 152-feet 3-inches for a season best.

Last week at the Penn Relays, Brown was the Minutewomen's top finisher. She took sixth in the javelin with a distance of 143-feet-one-inch.

Also contributing in the UMass victory was freshman Alyssa Angers.

Angers won the triple jump with a leap of 35-feet 3-inches. The leap places Angers fourth on the UMass all time list for the event.

The Minutewomen will continue with the invitational and championship stretch of their schedule next week when they travel to Boston for the New England Championships.

The meet is scheduled to begin at 10 a.m.

Men in stripes give Avalanche the edge

The Blackhawks weren't going to beat the Avalanche in Game 2 of their Western Conference semi-final if they had a two-man advantage for 20 minutes, but Colorado quickly got on the road to evening the series through its own one-man advantage — his name was Rob Schick.

I haven't been around that long, but I've seen a good many hockey games in my time, yet I've never witnessed a worse piece of officiating than the one rendered by Schick in the Avalanche's 5-1 win on Saturday.

Clinton's Scott Young gave Chicago defenseman Steve Smith a nasty forearm shiver that completely took Smith out of the play and gave Colorado a 3 on-1, which Craig Wolanin converted for the decisive score. The correct decision would have been a ticket to Young, two minutes for elbowing or some such violation, but no.

Instead it was Smith who got a minor and a 10-minute misconduct. Smith's fury over Schick's monumental gaffe spread to his Blackhawk teammates, who weren't able to keep their emotions in check for the remainder of the game as the Avalanche tacked on several more goals with Chicago skaters in the box, precisely the result Chicago coach Craig Hartsburg hoped to avoid.

In the May 10 issue of The Hockey News, Mike Brophy's sidebar on the "Inside Hockey" page is headlined "Let's cut refs a little slack." For Schick, that couldn't be done with a bag of razors bearing his name. Here's hoping NHL Director of Officiating Brian Lewis repeats the sanctions he laid on Andy van Hellemond last year and fines Schick a pretty penny, as well as ruling that he not work playoff games after this season.

Like the teams, referees are supposed to earn the privilege of post-season assignments, but Schick has crossed the boundaries of that honor.

• While Schick's impaired vision kept Smith, a player who had just returned to health, out of a key stretch of a pivotal contest, a pair of more durable Blackhawks missed Game 2 on account of violent stomach illnesses incurred shortly before faceoff. Goaltender Ed Belfour played through the pain of a back injury all season, and winger Murray Craven also doesn't skip a lot of games, but both were scratched Saturday.

Ted Kottler on the NHL

Chicago can survive without Craven, and one thought Jeff Hackett, certainly the league's top "backup" could fill in ably for Belfour, but it's clear now that Harrisburg saw something quite intangible in Eddie the Eagle that makes him the obvious choice as the No. 1 netminder. If he wasn't available for last night's Game 3 at Chicago's United

NFL dream stalled, Ingoglia inks with CFL

Andrew Bryce

Rene Ingoglia, the greatest running back in Massachusetts football history, signed a two-year contract with the Montreal Alouettes of the CFL last Thursday. He reports to camp in two weeks, and the season starts in late June.

"Hopefully, this will be a two year stint," Ingoglia said.

I talked to Rene Ingoglia less than four days before the NFL Draft a couple of weekends back. The reason I spoke with him was because there was a chance he would be drafted. If he wasn't drafted, free agency would be a possibility. In fact, Rene thought he would be a sure invite to an NFL camp and that he would know where his destination by 10 p.m. on that Sunday night. He thought there would be about 20 teams looking to take a shot at him. He thought.

But as the draft came and went, he wasn't signed. When the draft was over, and the NFL teams were scurrying to grab the other players for their camps, he wasn't called. The phone was ringing, but the persons on the other line were not the ones he wanted to hear; his agent telling him the disappointing goings-on, and curious reporters, like me, looking to see which NFL city was going to welcome the former UMass star.

Rene woke up the next morning wondering where his career was going. The next two weeks were spent in limbo. His career hadn't even started yet, but already it was giving him problems. These two weeks were supposed to be filled with anxiety, but not as to if he was going to get a professional football contract.

It was supposed to be where that chance would be given.

An NFL team had to take a chance on Rene Ingoglia. I mean, he did rush for over 4,600 yards and score some 50 touchdowns in college. He did run a 4.4 40 at an individual workout, benchpress 225 pounds 23 times, jump 39 inches off the ground, and broad-jump 10 feet.

Nope.

Unfortunately there were many other running backs in higher demand as they were picked up in the seven rounds of drafting. Unfortunately, there was that inevitable, "Hell, he did all that on the Division I-AA level."

Unfortunately, those NFL teams just don't know Rene.

Around here, we know he'll do anything a coach asks of him. He'll run. He'll block. He'll catch passes. He'll block kicks. He'll return kicks. He'll block for kicks. He'll be a spot back. And he'll do it all with a tenacity that cannot be expressed on a scouting report. The way he attacks the game of football cannot be measured, timed, or weighed by any old scout.

All that a guy like Rene needs is a chance. Give him a chance to show that he will run through a wall for you and prepare to make plans for the carpenter to come repair the damage shortly after. You've heard about the Notre Dame caliber high school back who suffered the knee injury his senior year, before venturing on to an outstanding career at UMass. You've heard about the natural tailback being converted to fullback for the sake of the team.

Unfortunately, the NFL didn't.

So Rene Ingoglia is now a member of the Montreal Alouettes. He'll play in the eight-team Canadian Football League, the minors of the NFL. He'll make less than an NFL minimum wage, but, as he terms it, "a good first job salary." He said a couple of NFL teams did end up calling him, interested in his services. But by then, Rene had already brainstormed. He had weighed his options.

"I was invited to a couple of NFL camps. We decided I had a good chance of starting for the Alouettes by going up there for two years," Ingoglia said.

If he went to the NFL camp he was invited to, he faced the possibility of being cut at any time, maybe even before he had a chance to prove himself on the field. By going to Montreal, he'll be able to showcase his skills and his tenacity, amidst all of the scouts searching for NFL talent. And going to the CFL team will give him something that an NFL team can't offer him at this point and time.

Stability.

Men's track destroys field at EIC's

By Jay Warner

The Massachusetts track and field team traveled to New Britain, Conn. this past weekend to take part in the Eastern Invitational Championships, coming away with a dominant victory over the rest of the field. The Minutemen posted a total of 272 points out-distancing Rhode Island (142), New Haven (50), Southern Connecticut (46), Central Connecticut (33), Bentley (24) and Keene State (20).

The Minutemen took home first place for a second consecutive year over Rhode Island, although the results were far closer in the previous contest. Knowing the Rams' squad particularly well, coach Ken O'Brien felt that his team would once again challenge for the top prize in this year's competition.

"I had anticipated a meet that was similar to last year's," O'Brien said. "Based on the way that we finished with these teams during the season, I was confident about our chances, but it wasn't as close as I thought it was going to be."

Rhode Island jumped out to a quick 32-point lead after three events and looked to seize the opportunity to avenge its second place finish to the Minutemen last year. Despite their quick start, O'Brien knew those events were the Rams' strongest and that his team was gradually going to climb back into contention.

"As the meet began, Rhode Island jumped out to a fast start but we anticipated this knowing that these were their strongest events," O'Brien said. "We slowly began to pick up some points, hitting some events that were our strengths, and took off from there. Having been a little concerned early, I was surprised by the final score."

Leading the way for Massachusetts was freshman sprinter Tom Toye, who throttled the competition by winning two individual events and played an important role in the 4x100 relay team's second place finish. Toye captured the 100 meters with a time of 11.03 and took top honors in the 200 meters in a time of 21.76. For his performance, Toye was awarded the "Outstanding Performer of The Meet" honor that is voted upon by the coaches. While Toye's performance was remarkable, the team has come to expect such a display by the frosh.

"He has done this for us all year long, shouldering a lot of responsibilities for this team," said O'Brien. "I would say that the leader for our team's sprinters is Tom Toye. This was just another outstanding performance in a long line of outstanding performances from him."

However outstanding any individual was in this meet, the Minutemen's depth and balance played a decisive role in the outcome of the competition. Of the 42 individuals that competed in

Italian politician calls for Northern secession

ROME (AP) — The Northern League has risen from being a regional protest movement to a party that made, and then broke, a national government.

Now, it is sending shockwaves through the establishment with calls for northern Italy to secede, and with the appearance of an ominous-looking green-shirted security force that evokes Italy's fascist past.

Mainstream political parties, the Roman Catholic Church and government officials all have protested since Northern League leader Umberto Bossi said Saturday that the north should become a separate nation.

The rhetoric at the rally in Mantua jumped up a notch from Bossi's usual agenda of more autonomy for Italy's regions. His talk touched a nerve across Italian society — and so did the rally's green-shirted guards, whose presence recalled Fascist leader Benito Mussolini's black-shirted paramilitaries.

Mantua's prosecutor, Mario Luberto, is investigating whether Bossi can be charged with threatening the unity of the state, a crime under Italian law. And he said yesterday that police are looking into whether the green-shirts serve "a subversive function."

Justice Minister Vincenzo Caianiello declared flat out Monday that "Secession is against the constitution."

Breast cancer deaths declining in America

WASHINGTON (AP) — The breast cancer death rate for American women continues to decline, the National Cancer Institute said yesterday, attributing the decline to early detection and improved treatment.

Despite the overall decline, the death rate among black women who succumb to breast cancer continues to increase, although at a slower rate.

"These findings are good news, but not good enough," said Health and Human Services Secretary Donna E. Shalala.

From 1989 to 1993, the most recent period for which data is available, the breast cancer mortality rate for American women dropped 5 percent, from 27.5 per 100,000 women to 25.9 per 100,000. The age-adjusted breast cancer mortality rate fell about 6 percent in white women and rose about 1 percent in black women. Between 1980 and 1989, the rates increased 3 percent in white women and 16 percent in black women.

The median age at death for white breast cancer patients is 68 years, and 62 years for black patients.

According to researchers, early detection alone can't account for the decline.

Campus walk promotes student fitness awareness

By Melanie B. Arruda
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts' exercise science 130 class is sponsoring the first two-mile walk for National Workout Day on May 15 in front of Thompson Hall at 2:30 p.m.

"We want to bring attention to fitness," said Priscilla Clarkson, associate dean of the school of public health and professor of exercise science.

The more times you can bring it to people's attention, the better, according to Clarkson.

"Exercise science should take the lead and show that walking is good exercise," Clarkson said.

There is a gradual increase in weight among adults and kids in the United States over the past few years, according to Clarkson. This is associated with heart disease and diabetes, she added.

"Students, faculty and staff are encouraged to join me and 10 teaching assistants in a free walk through the heart of campus rain or shine," Clarkson said.

"Everybody can do it," said J.P. Hyatt, the head teaching assistant of the class. "Any type of exercise is good for you."

Benefits of walking include getting people moving, increasing cardiovascular strength and increasing oxygen transport, said Hyatt.

"We want to have everyone commit themselves to a healthier lifestyle by setting an example and going out for a walk," Clarkson said.

"We didn't realize how little daily activity we do when we get to college," Clarkson said. "For example, we always look for the closest parking space to our class, and spend a lot of time studying."

Hopefully this will encourage people to get interested in exercise and fitness, and what they can achieve from it, Hyatt said.

Hyatt worked in conjunction with Clarkson in organizing the walk.

The walk will begin at Thompson Hall and continue to the Campus Pond around the Graduate Research Center and back to the Student Union.

The event will last approximately 45 to 50 minutes, according to Hyatt.

Some of the groups participating include University Without Walls, ROTC, The Career Center, Undergraduate Admissions, Collegiate Center for the Education of Blacks and Other Minority Students and the Donahue Institute. Nutrition students will also be attending.

May 15 has also been designated Great Massachusetts Workout Day by the Massachusetts Governor's Committee on Physical Fitness and Sports, Clarkson said.

"[Great Massachusetts Workout Day] was done as a measure to encourage citizens of Massachusetts to participate in some sort of physical activity," Clarkson said.

Gov. Weld proposes gas tax cut; opponents say it's grandstanding

By Glen Johnson
Associated Press

BOSTON — Gov. William F. Weld inserted himself into the national debate over high gas prices yesterday, filing a bill to cut the state's gas tax until a proposed federal tax cut takes effect.

"Though I am allergic to any tax increase, I find the gas tax increase particularly repellant for two reasons: First of all, it's kind of sneaky," the Republican governor said as he stood at a Boston gas station. "The second reason the gas tax is particularly unappealing because it hurts working people the hardest."

Legislative leaders accused him of grandstanding and said there was no chance of his law passing because the state could not afford a revenue loss estimated at $108 million to $120 million.

Sen. John Kerry (D-Mass.) whom Weld is challenging this year, also accused him of pandering.

"I think given the fact that everybody knows we're going to have a vote here and it's going to win, it is just the most extraordinary posturing," Kerry told reporters in Washington. "I think the governor is proving that he is indeed 'Gov. Do-Anything, Say-Anything-For-Votes,' and not serious about public policy."

Gasoline prices are now at their highest levels since the Gulf War as a result of several factors: an unusually cold winter, the increased use of gas-guzzling sport utility vehicles and the depletion of oil reserves in anticipation of Iraq resuming oil exports.

The prices at the Gulf station that served as a backdrop for Weld ranged from $1.31 per gallon for regular unleaded to $1.51 for premium unleaded. Right now state taxes account for 21 cents of the cost of a gallon of gas, while federal taxes account for another 18.3 cents.

Republicans across the country have seized the issue, with the party's presumptive presidential nominee, Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, proposing to repeal a 4.3 cents-per-gallon gas tax increase approved by Congress in 1993.

Yesterday Senate Democrats blocked efforts to hold an immediate vote on Dole's proposal because it was attached to other legislation they opposed. They conceded, however, that the repeal will eventually pass.

Gingrich says low poll numbers due to problems of perceptions

By Sandra Sobieraj
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — It's just a matter of appearances. With that, House Speaker Newt Gingrich sought yesterday to dispel grumbling about divisions in the Republican Party and poor poll numbers for the GOP.

Gingrich promised "a tidal wave of communications" to reverse what he cast as misguided public perceptions that the Republican agenda is bad for women, the elderly and the poor.

But even as Gingrich made his remarks to a breakfast meeting of GOP women, Republican Sen. Alfonse D'Amato set off a fresh round of name-calling that revived impressions of a party imperiled by discord.

In a morning television interview, the New York senator denounced conservatives who he said have, of late, made opposition to abortion and an increase in the minimum wage a "litmus test" for Republicans.

"These are the kind of things I see taking place. We don't need these philosophical ayatollahs telling people you have to believe my way or we have no room for you in our party," D'Amato, co-chairman of Sen. Bob Dole's presidential campaign, said on ABC. D'Amato principally blamed Pat Buchanan, who nominally remains in the GOP presidential race, for any public perception of Republicans as exclusionary.

"That's what Pat Buchanan did to us — the party that's uncaring for working middle-class families," D'Amato said.

He backed off his assertions of just last week that Gingrich's House agenda was too extreme and threatened to hurt Republicans in this year's elections. But New York Gov. George Pataki, a D'Amato ally, picked up where D'Amato left off.

At a news conference in the Bronx, Pataki said: "I think the main force of this has been Pat Buchanan, but certainly some of the rhetoric coming out of Congress, talking about a revolution... There's a big difference between having an intelligent devolution of authority to the states and having a traumatic quick change before the American people are ready for it."

Gingrich did not address either of the New Yorkers' comments, but House Majority Leader Dick Armey (R-Texas) offered this rebuttal: "I would be thrilled if Al D'Amato would get in touch with the Republican message."

Yesterday's back-and-forth, coming during a lull in the presidential campaign, was the latest grumbling by Republicans doubtful of Dole's electability and eager to blame Gingrich for the party's problems.

Speculation that Dole would tinker with the party's strict anti-abortion platform — and the subsequent uproar from anti-abortion activists — has exacerbated divisions in the party. Polls show broad public support for the Republican agenda's centerpiece items, including a balanced budget, tax cuts, term limits for Congress and an

Latino students honored at BCP banquet

By Michelle Lugo
Collegian Staff

The Bilingual Collegiate Program (BCP) at the University of Massachusetts celebrated the 22nd annual senior awards banquet last Friday night. The event featured a special tribute to Latino athletes and brought a larger turnout than in previous years.

"For the first time in the history of the BCP, we have a large representation of student athletes graduating from everything like men and women's water polo, basketball, baseball, swimming, tennis, volleyball and crew," Dr. Benjamin Rodriguez, director of the BCP, said.

During his speech, Rodriguez reiterated the message of the alarming reality faced in hispanic education. Rodriguez talked about alarming statistics from the report, Hispanic Profile. He obtained it at a conference given by the Secretary of Education of the United States this February.

"Fifty-seven percent of all hispanics drop out before completing high school," Rodriguez said. "Seven percent of those who graduate enter college, and only 3 percent of those who enter college graduate. [estimated by Hispanic Profile]."

Although Rodriguez used the Hispanic Profile report to point out the nationwide trend, he added that the graduation percentage of hispanics at UMass was about 80 percent this year. In 1992, a class of 106 entered this University through the BCP. At the graduation dance, diplomas were handed out to 82 graduating seniors.

Many of the students who were honored thanked their families, classmates, friends and God. They also thanked members of the Latino community, including Nelson Acosta of the ALANA Affairs Office, Rick Townes, director of the Campus Activities Office and Jose Bou and Benjamin Rodriguez of BCP.

Bou and Rodriguez, in turn, thanked students who helped organized the event. Rodriguez said the success of this year's graduation was due to the participation of many BCP students. Even the cooking for the banquet was done by Belkys Alvarado, Casa Dominicana member and student.

"If everything goes right tonight, I want you to thank these students," said Bou, the main organizer of the graduation awards banquet, while pointing to a group of students. These students, who helped with the planning, include Alvarado, Ames Baez, Jose Candelier, Sandra Carbo, Yolanda Claudio, William Davila, Isadora Evora, Ruben Garcia, Edwin Matos, Juan Mejia, Julia Ramos, Sonny Rivera, Adrian Roman and Annie Sanchez.

"If anything goes wrong I want you to blame me," Bou added.

Bou was quick to point out in his speech that the only detail missing was UMass President William Bulger. Flores explained that Bulger had a last minute emergency that kept him from the ceremony. Flores also said a few words relating to his experience as a BCP graduate and as the first hispanic trustee.

Chancellor David K. Scott came to the celebration and spoke about his experience with UMass' Latino students. Scott pointed out names that he said made him shudder, but he will remember like ex-Student Trustee David Nuñez and ex-Speaker of the Student Senate Mercedes Betanco.

The activity took place with the help of other local organizations like the Hispanic Faculty Association of UMass, the New England Farm Workers Council and through the contributions of Dr. Juan Gerena, executive director of the Puerto Rican Cultural Center in Springfield.

"Every year I get different comments that this is the best graduation dance," Rodriguez said. "I would say, though, that this one has been one of the best because it was student engineered. It was all their ideas."

overhaul of welfare. But opinions of the party dropped during last year's budget debate and government shutdown, when President Clinton and congressional Democrats successfully painted Republicans as extreme on issues of health care, education and the environment.

Now, national polls show Dole trailing Clinton by roughly 20 points, and women voters favoring Democrats by double-digit margins.

In separate morning appearances yesterday, Gingrich and Republican National Committee Chairman Haley Barbour attributed the numbers to a "misleading" national ad campaign by labor unions sympathetic to Democrats and to Clinton himself.

The president, Gingrich said, has made a "shameful performance of systematically misleading the American people," abetted by an unquestioning liberal news media.

"You've had this passive conspiracy of telling us how clever Bill Clinton is," Gingrich said.

Democrats, who want to frame November's elections as a referendum on the unpopular Gingrich, seized the opportunity to accuse him of scapegoating Texas Rep. Martin Frost, who heads the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee, said Gingrich should "take a look in the mirror and apologize to the millions of families he has harmed."

Talking about how to overcome the GOP's giant deficit with women voters, Gingrich said, "The way we win in November is to unleash a tidal wave of communications." He listed the Republican women he has appointed to leadership positions in Congress and cast the GOP agenda as favorable to women.

"Liberals love to divide us, but we have a case, if we make it, that reaches every woman in America," Gingrich said. "It is the welfare state which has been the most systematic oppressor of young women in the last 30 years. What we are about is replacing that welfare state with an opportunity society."

Barbour, appearing on FOX Morning News, promised a public-relations counterattack.

"This month the television campaign will begin in earnest, and instead of the unions and the left being out there all by themselves making false claims, then people see both sides of the argument."

FTC recommends Time Warner merger be revoked

By Jeannine Aversa
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Raising antitrust concerns, the staff of the Federal Trade Commission is recommending that the $7.5 billion proposed merger of Time Warner Inc. and Turner Broadcasting System Inc. be reworked.

The regulators' staff is concerned that the deal, which would create the world's largest media and entertainment company, would hurt competition by giving the merged company too much control over cable programming, attorneys close to the matter said yesterday. The objections are significant, "more than just posturing," said one of the attorneys, who spoke only on condition of anonymity.

Dow Jones News Service reported that the FTC staff was preparing a recommendation that the full commission block the deal. The Washington Post reported that the staff had reached a general consensus to either oppose the transaction or call for substantial changes.

Attorneys close to the proposed merger could not confirm that. The FTC would not comment on the reports.

The agency's commissioners ultimately have the power to reject or approve the merger announced last September.

Consumer groups, cable television competitors and telephone companies have asked the FTC to look closely at the cable programming issue. Opponents say the new Time Warner Turner company could block rivals from carrying programs on cable, via satellite and over telephone lines.

The FTC also is concerned about provisions in the deal related to Tele-Communications Inc., the nation's largest cable company, attorneys said.

TCI now owns 21 percent of Turner. But the deal calls for TCI's stake to be reduced to about 9 percent and placed in a trust. Time Warner would get TCI's voting power.

In return, TCI would get numerous concessions, including long-term agreements to carry Turner cable networks at favorable rates and the right to buy Turner's interest in SportsSouth, a regional sports cable network, for $60 million.

The Consumer Federation of America says the deal would give the merged company access to cable TV systems covering 46 percent of all cable customers nationwide. That estimate includes TCI's cable systems.

Time Warner owns HBO, the most popular pay TV channel. Turner owns CNN, TBS, TNT and Headline News, all among the 15 most widely distributed cable networks.

Time Warner Chairman Gerald Levin said last week he is confident the merger will go through and be completed by September.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Fridays during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, and has been a broadsheet publication since January, 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

A few parting shots

Marni E. Helfner

As we head into the home stretch before graduation, I want to write about all the columns that I thought about but never actually wrote because I didn't have enough information to write a whole column, or simply never got around to doing it. This is my opportunity to present all those snippets of information and opinion that I have been carrying around in my head for the past three years.

The Swan — Everybody hates the swan. It is a vicious animal that bites children and adults every semester. It's time the University found another animal to put on its admissions brochures. Or if they can't do that, keep the swan at The Hadley Farm and only bring it to campus for photo shoots — kind of like President Bulger.

Sylvan & Noise — I've had it with people in Sylvan complaining about noise. After living in Coolidge, I can safely say that compared with Southwest, living in Sylvan is like living in a monastery. I would like to take all the people who live in Sylvan and make them live for a week in a tower, where they could deal with the noise, the vomit and the toilet wars. Then we'll talk — that is if they can stop hurling.

The Career Center — Liberal arts majors beware. The Career Center is designed for people who are either business majors or engineering majors. If you want a job or an internship that isn't in sales, steer clear of Mather. Learn to network or learn to say, "Do you want fries with that?"

Health Services — If you need to see a doctor because you're sick, you have to call by 9 a.m., otherwise you have to go to "Urgent Care." I don't know about you, but unless you're there at 3 a.m., there is nothing urgent about it. They don't have an ambulance, so if you fall and break your leg, an ambulance comes and gets you and tells you to Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton. You wind up paying for the ambulance, the hospital, and the side home, whereas if you went to Urgent Care, the costs would be minimal.

Smokers — OK, I've already written about this, but I just want to reiterate my thoughts. The University has a smoking policy. People have to smoke at least 20 feet away from the entrance to a building. Nobody bothers to follow this rule, so if you want to enter almost any building on campus especially the ones that house faculty and administration offices, make sure you get a deep breath at least 20 feet in front of the building. While we're at it, could we please make at least one residence hall on this campus a smoking residence hall? All the smokers who want to smoke in their rooms would have to move there and if you smoked in any other residence hall on campus, the penalty would be stiff.

People who don't bathe — As our parents trash our generation for being slackers, we should be doing everything in our power to destroy their stereotypes. Unfortunately, that is almost impossible to do because the majority of people fall into that stereotype. One of the minimum standards I have for the people I date is that they bathe on a regular basis. I can't even begin to explain what a problem that seems to be for 20-somethings. I swear, some of the people on this campus could be poster children for those mandatory showers they used to make you take in high school. Is it so difficult to comprehend how people don't want to bathe? Maybe it's true. You should hide the pot under the soap.

Greek life as a way of life — Enough said.

Administration Shuffle — In the time since I've been at UMass, the number of administrators has changed so many times, they're going to have to install one of those deli counter number machines in Whitmore. Why can't the University hold onto its administrators? Maybe because we pay them so much and don't expect them to accomplish any significant change.

Drinking uptown — It's not all it cracked up to be. After you get drunk off your ass, your only option is to go to Antonio's and have some drunk frat guy grab your ass. What a way to end a Saturday night.

Rape on this campus — FBI statistics say nine out of 10 rapes are never reported. Rape is a real part of our society and when people on this campus either deny or ignore it, they do nothing to fix the situation.

Basketball — We have a good basketball team. We also have a good equestrian team. We also have a good lacrosse team, and a water polo team. The point is that we need to support all our athletic teams. Even the ones that suck.

FYI — The For Your Information section on page two falls under my jurisdiction as managing editor. Everyday I deal with people who are furious over the fact that their FYI didn't print or was wrong. It's a free service. We do the best we can, but in the attempt to put out a newspaper every day and also be students, it sometimes falls to the bottom of the barrel. Give me a break.

People who write letters about my "fluff" columns — I'm a columnist. I try to write to my readers and the things they're interested in. I'm sorry if I don't address a hot political issue every time I write, but I would rather write about the things I know and I feel strongly about.

And so it continues...

And so it continues to get easier, and we accept it.

The pill hit the prescription market this week: a medical breakthrough that will perhaps eventually be more valued than "the pill." Although it is intended for usage by the severely clinically obese, it doesn't take Steven Hawking to figure out this drug will be exploited by those looking for a quick five-pound drop before bikini or Speedo season.

Why not make weight loss effortless? After all, we've let Ritalin become the Flintstones vitamin of the times, and you can probably order Prozac as a pizza topping, so pardon me if its spread. Might as well approve every OU812 or RX-7 pill the FDA says is kosher.

Here's a suggestion for a screening process that unfortunately can never be done: set up an actual prescription need test using criteria ranging from the most severe ("Death Prevention") to the least ("Getting To-Know-Yourself Your Children-And/Or Your Body Your Lazy-Ass Prevention.")

Approve that, FDA.

And so it continues. And we accept it.

Well, Hollywood, I hope you're happy — you let him direct a film.

While it is true that many action stars have successfully made the move to the director's chair, Clint Eastwood proved himself in front of the camera before he took the reins.

C. Taylor Conner

Sylvester Stallone already had a screenwriting Oscar for Rocky before he helmed a project; and Christ, even Steven Seagal had a consistent level of success before he made the abysmal On Deadly Ground.

But Jean Claude Van Damme? I mean, as long as we're giving auteur status to every snapperhead with a SAG card, why not let Pauly Shore really sink his teeth into his pet project? Or give Elizabeth Berkeley the green light to be a behind-the-lens visionary? Common sense says you wouldn't.

Ironically, however, despite reviews which rivaled those of Police Academy 21, Van Damme's piece de resistance, The Quest, topped the box office returns its opening weekend.

Yeah. That's what I said, too.

And so it continues. And we accept it.

"Hey, Nick. It's me, Jerry."

"Hey, Jerry. How you doing?"

"Fine. Say, man, sorry you got booted from the playoffs."

"That's Ok, man. I been screwed all season. Can you believe they suspended me for seven games just for shoving that ref?"

"Yeah, I know how you feel. You know. I hear I won't get Rookie of the Year just for jacking up Jeff Hornacek. That's B.S."

"No kidding. The only one who understands is Dennis."

"Yup. Anyway, I gotta jet. I have to pick up 30 new endorsement deals today."

"Only 30? That's an insult. We've proven ourselves."

"Yeah, well... What are you doing tonight?"

"Sorry, man, I'm busy. Gotta go hang out with the rookie."

"That's cool. He's got skills for a little eight-year-old. Can't believe they tried to keep him in the third grade. Oh, well. Later, Nick."

"Later, Jerry."

And so it continues. And we accept it.

If they've got the money to film them, why don't the camera crews feed those damned starving kids?

Was there one intelligent female character in Fear?

Will reactionary loons always drown out the efforts of proactive folks?

Dole versus Clinton. Clinton versus Dole. Either way you put it, it's still scarier than Roseanne's plastic surgery leftovers.

By the year 2000, will people get divorced before they're even married?

What if God retires?

And what exactly is this "it" thing I've been babbling about in italics every now and then?

Here's what I know. It's driving me up the wall, it never seems to stop and it feeds off modern complacency.

And so it continues. And we accept it.

Goodbye, UMass

As I write this, your vast lawns are submerged in a sea of rainwater. Your dirt paths are nothing more than beds of mud. Your great cement monoliths stand sullen against the glowering sky.

In a way, it seems appropriate that I should say good bye to you under such circumstances. I am, after all, about to leave you for warmer parts where the rain is warm and snow never falls. We will have flowers blooming in March and grass that's green all year long. Surely the University of Georgia's Greek Revival chapel will be more uplifting than the Campus Center.

Still, the rain is appropriate, for although it brings hardship in the form of cold hands, wet feet and unwieldy umbrellas, it cannot take away all that the University of Massachusetts has given me these last three years. The experiences I have had here will stay with me a lifetime, and in the end, despite all the unpleasant things I have had to endure on this campus, it will be the good things I remember, not the rain.

Coming out of high school three years ago, I didn't expect much from UMass. Throughout my college selection process, I had considered this my safety school. If I somehow couldn't go to one of the fancy private universities, then I would go to UMass... if I couldn't go to Rutgers instead.

But as things turned out, I couldn't go anywhere but UMass. In my family, you don't spend money you don't have and therefore you don't take out loans — especially if the cheapest school on your list offers you a scholarship. So you go, you grin and you tell yourself that at least it's better than a community college.

UMass has surprised me. So far, I've only had four large survey courses. One of them was dreadful, but the other three were great — and taught by exciting teachers with fresh and provocative outlooks on their field.

The rest of my courses have either been mid-sized, with around 30 students, or absolutely tiny, the kind where everyone in the class sits in the front row. More often than not, my professors in these classes were dedicated educators and admirable role models. In retrospect, I don't see how any large private university or small liberal arts college could have served me any better.

And yet, before I arrived here, I thought I was being tossed in a dung heap. Perhaps this university's reputation has risen since those bleak days in high school, but even so, it's a shame that people look down on this place.

Wendy Darling

And the hordes of people from all over the country and the world who come here. Oh, and did I mention that this place is still one of the most queer-friendly places on earth? That's a selling point for me.

Since the D.C. food is terrible. The weather definitely could use some improvement. Some of the buildings are decrepit. Some of my professors deserve to be kicked in the rear end for their sheer stupidity. There are annoying sorority girls, cracked graduate students, Phish-heads, pathetic right-wingers and hypocritical liberals.

But those things are like the rain. Once I leave here, the sun will come out from behind the clouds. The puddles will dry up and the warm breezes will blow. Only the blue skies will remain.

The American lobby... a time to act

The word lobby is being thrown around today with skepticism. But lobbying is an exercise of freedom of speech like that of writing. Citizens today across our nation lobby their legislators every day on a number of issues. Recently, the Jewish lobby has been singled out among ethnic groups.

Jay Bragg

The Jewish lobby is very well organized and directs its energies primarily toward foreign policy issues related to a single state: Israel. But let us all keep in mind that it is our right as Americans to lobby for what we believe in within the framework of democracy. The Jewish community is a small percentage of the nation's population (less than 3 percent). The notion of lobbying for fundamental values is part of American democracy.

The Jewish lobby is one of many ethnic groups that has seen success in matters of foreign policy. In a more limited way, the Greek lobby has enjoyed some success of its own. It was able to garner sufficient congressional support to impose an arms embargo on Turkey during the middle 1970s, despite active opposition from the executive branch.

Newer American ethnic groups are increasingly joining the foreign policy arena and are likely to exercise some influence over the next decade or two. Hispanics and African-Americans have begun to exert some policy influence and are likely to be more active in the future. In conjunction with the "Free South Africa Movement," Trans-Africa was crucial in the Reagan administration's executive order applying some economic sanctions in 1985 and in passing the Anti-Apartheid Act of 1986, which imposed even greater sanctions.

The most powerful Cuban American lobby, the Cuban American National Foundation (CANF) has had a noticeable impact on policy toward Cuba and Central America. In various congressional votes over aid to the Nicaraguan Contras, for example, one would be hard pressed to find a member of Congress with a sizable Cuban-American constituency lining to support this action.

Why have some of these ethnic groups been so successful? How can only six million Jewish Americans, three million Greek-Americans, 22 million Hispanic-Americans or 30 million African-Americans exercise any influence in a nation of over 250 million citizens?

They work at organizing their efforts and resources in order to be heard. They stress the importance of what they believe together, as Americans, to help shape America's foreign policy.

Important legislation now needs your support in combating terrorism. Iran is still the major force behind international terrism. It is responsible for taking hundreds of innocent lives around the world — from Jerusalem to Buenos Aries. Iran is the world's largest single provider of money, weapons and training for terror and is now seeking nuclear weapons that will pose an even greater direct threat to Israel's very existence.

The Iran Foreign Oil Sanctions Act strikes at Iran's ability to support international terrorist groups and fund its nuclear weapons program. The bill passed the Senate last December and will be marked up in the House International Relations Committee (HIRC) this month. When the HIRC finishes its work, the bill will be referred to the Ways and Means Committee which maintains jurisdiction over trade issues.

Even though the pending bill has not yet been enacted into law, it is already having a dramatic impact on foreign companies contemplating making energy-related investments in Iran. But, that impact will dissipate without House action. We must add to the list of over 70 co-sponsors already on this legislation so that House passage is assured. You can make a difference by contacting your representative today and urging them to co-sponsor this act.

Jay Bragg is a UMass student.

And yet, before I arrived here, I thought I was being tossed in a dung heap. Perhaps this university's reputation has risen since those bleak days in high school, but even so, it's a shame that people look down on this place.

The Class of 1996: ALANA seniors say goodbye

Each day I awake to a new reality, my realization that there are no fringe benefits to being born black in a country established on the principles of white supremacy came at an early age. My realization that as a black man I will forever be imprisoned by society's perception of me as a violent, irresponsible, criminal came soon afterwards. With each new realization, I grow stronger because I know that true freedom comes when you realize what you are up against and still have the courage and the conviction to struggle, to survive against the odds.

When I really think intensely about how much I love my people, I often cry. I shed a tear for my ancestors, who died by the millions while being brutally beaten into slavery during the middle passage. I shed a tear for my brother, who has been taught to hate himself so much that he vicariously commits suicide by killing his reflection, murdering other young men of color.

Among this river of tears shed by my people flows the strength and determination that carried us through the trials and of slavery, marched us through Selma, Ala., and guides us on our never-ending quest for the "promised land." I often conjure up this same strength and determination to march me through many rough times at the University of Massachusetts.

As a person of color, you feel suffocated by an educational system that disproportionately allocates more funds to suburban schools, while urban school children suffer from an inferior education through a lack of educational resources. You feel suffocated by a judicial system that boasts liberty and justice for all yet allows police to brutalize your people and violate their constitutional rights at will. You feel suffocated by the development of a political atmosphere conducive to reversing several years of progress with civil rights. Affirmative Action legislation is constantly being challenged and reversed, school desegregation after more than 40 years since Brown v. The Board of Education is still a major issue and our nation's poorest people are being victimized by welfare reform efforts.

I would like to thank the University of Massachusetts for my diploma because it symbolizes a breath of fresh air for all my people who struggle against adversity. I plan to use my degree to create an atmosphere where one day, all of my people can breathe freely.

Multiculturalism is a fictional term — it has no definite meaning, nor does it even imply anything specific. It could mean blacks and whites, Natives and Irish, but it doesn't. Multiculturalism means more than one culture. Great, another fancy term to slap on the pile of labels I already have to deal with, now I'm multicultural (whoopee!). First I was a savage, then I was a red skin, tanice, last week I was chief, in the 1600s white squatters couldn't even pronounce Haudenosaunee so they called us Iroquois. It's all a sham, get .02 percent Indians/Native Americans here on campus and you got a multicultural school. What's my point? Multiculturalism is a fancy term whites like, and it keeps people from seeing what is really going on.

Racism: Here's a good topic, if people wanted to talk about it. It's become the taboo word of the '90s — people don't like it when I tell them I've lived in a predominantly white building which was, and still is, racist. People also get confused about the context in which I use the word racist. I use it in terms of an ideologically white mentality, which I guarantee people will deny. Looking at the mentality of peoples in Chadbourne, where I live, many have inherited a great extent of ideological whiteness. It is this form of racism which people deny to the grave, and as well with Chadbourne residents.

ALANA: Minorities using this term have now been turned into an acronym — I'm even more excited than before. It's official I'm now reduced to the letters "NA." Native American to me could mean anyone born on the continent of the America. Its meaning is no better than savage, because people still cannot accept who we are. Society isn't ready to accept us as people, and putting a "nicer" term just removes people from the reality of the situation. Native people across the United States are still being oppressed, having land stolen, being arrested — all the same things that happened when they were calling us savage. The only difference is now, our culture has become the spice of the white masses — just look at all the people buying dream catchers.

Closing: Kamienkehaka people, when we speak, always end things with a closing. We do an opening, then bring things back full circle, because everything travels in circles. Our definition of respect is not based on Webster's New College Dictionary but a lifetime of learning. Its something you work on all your life, changing until the minute you die. Our holidays are not based on a calendar, but based upon our mother nature, she's the one we follow. The earth is our mother. One elder once stated that even if one's mother dies, Iroquois people will always have a mother, since the earth is our mother. On that note

I'll end this with "Respect my words, and I'll respect yours, then and only then will we have a good discussion, so that we may learn."

Seven Generations and still going.

Sitting at the local barber's chair in New Haven, Conn., I read one of the few Spanish newspapers distributed in the Northeast. Hardly objective and sensationalized down to the last word, the newspaper appeals to the basest tastes of the local barber shop crowd because it reports news on their community. The newspaper reported Latino issues and Latinos were going to read it, including myself on that promising day. My mood dampened by the third page. Drug busts, shoot-outs, gang wars — unfortunately I was used to hearing about these Latino issues. I was unprepared though for the lower left side clip, of about 50 lines, double column:

"Husband irons wife's face and... says 'disobedient.'"

Cracking the UN–NGO code

It is not often that the ideology of the Western-dominated United Nations agencies and Non-Governmental Organizations (NGOs) is exposed in all its vulgarity. These attitudes, bought and paid for by Western governments and corporations, are camouflaged by a pseudo-progressive slant that professes deep concern for Third World peoples, while in fact attacking their national institutions and traditions.

However, in a recent article in The Voice, entitled "Third World Cabal and Nativist Disinformation," Graduate Student Association President Shan "Nowhere" Manikkalingam has exposed the fundamental attitudes of racism and Eurocentrism underlying these NGO-style "postmodern postcolonial" ideologies, by expressing them with an unusual frankness. His article serves as a guide for decoding the normally encrypted pseudo-progressive rhetoric of the chic expatriate Third World UN/NGO crowd. These jet-setters seek to please their Western paymasters by opposing Third World industrial development, national unity and independent cultural traditions by portraying these as inherently oppressive of ordinary Third World people.

Shyamala Ivatury

Those who advance such morally bankrupt arguments with the normal degree of sophistication generally try to establish their pro-Third World credentials by giving some perfunctory condemnations of Western abuses. Shan, on the other hand, fails to attempt even this kind of pre-emptive defense and lays the blame for the world's ills directly at the feet of the countries of the Third World.

Spilling the beans, Shan writes, "more often than not, it is Third World states which have served as the chief perpetrators or instruments of oppression." Shan seems oblivious to the fact that the primary source of oppression in the world is that people in rich Western nations live in relative luxury while the majority of people in Third World countries live in a state of crushing poverty. This uneven distribution of wealth is the product of centuries of Western colonialism, the theft of resources and exploitation of Third World peoples. Blaming Third World governments, many of them still in their first few decades of independence, for this global plantation system is not only preposterous, but overlooks the colonialism, interference and neocolonialism the West continues to impose on the Third World.

Does Shan recall the U.S. military and monetary support for Israel that has kept the Palestinian people stateless; the ongoing U.S. occupation and CIA-sponsored military coup in Haiti; U.S. military bases in South Korea and Philippines serving as centers for prostitution and rape of Third World women; the U.S. prior approval of the massacre of thousands of unarmed South Korean students in the 1980 Kwanju Massacre; the U.S./UN troops massacring hundreds of women and children in Somalia. French support and backing of the Rwandan paramilitary groups that killed tens of thousands before the victory of the RPF; U.S. support for the 18 year Israeli occupation of Lebanon and the recent slaughter of many refugees; or the U.S. invasion of Panama, killing thousands of civilians? The list is endless.

Certainly the most egregious example of Western victimization of Third World people in recent years is the 1991 Gulf War. Perhaps the most egregious of Shan's statements is that, "Ironically, when we think about the Gulf War, what emerges for us are not the glories of military hardware but rather the nature of Saddam's tyranny."

While a large section of his article is devoted to the Gulf War, nowhere does Shan mention its central features: the killing of 300,000 Iraqis, the destruction of Baghdad, the massacre of the retreating Iraqi army on the "highway of death," the massacre of hundreds of women and children in the Amariya bomb shelter — in short, the mass killing of Third World people and the destruction of the infrastructure of Iraq.

Just like the State Department and U.S. media, for Shan, the Gulf War was not about these deaths and the suffering of the Iraqi people, but about the Iraqi style of government.

According to a Food and Agricultural Organization report, U.S. imposed sanctions have killed over 500,000 Iraqi children in the past five years due to malnutrition and lack of medicines. But Shan seems oblivious to the death of over 500,000 third world children, because given an opportunity to discuss the Gulf War in the United States, Shan chooses to ignore Third World suffering and parrots the line of the Pentagon. All he wants to talk to Americans about is how much he agrees with them that Saddam Hussein is a bad guy, thereby encouraging the bombing and sanctions.

Again exposing the thinking of the UN/NGO pseudo-progressives, Shan asserts that,"the post-colonial states have rarely functioned as instruments of liberation, nor have they demonstrated any commitment to social and economic justice." This perspective is oblivious to the fact that decolonization and the subsequent establishing of Third World nations has clearly resulted in increased life expectancies, literacy rates, income levels, female education, industrial development, rural electrification, availability of clean drinking water, health care and the decrease in infant mortality in almost all former colonies after independence. But, if Shan's claims were true, then most Third World peoples were better off under colonialism. Any takers?

When Shan and the pseudo-progressive NGO frequent flyers put forth such views, they are cynically playing to Western racism. By ignoring the achievements of Third World countries, harping on the notion that Third World states are oppressive, and suggesting that nationalism has been a "failure" in the Third World, the rationale for weakening of Third World states is promulgated. This weakening of Third World states, so as to better manipulate their internal politics, is currently the main goal of Western neocolonialism. Western governments and corporations are trying to achieve this goal by expanding NGO activity in the Third World.

While castigating Third World states for not fighting imperialism, Shan attacks the idea of self-defense for Third World nations. Again taking his cue from U.S. foreign policy and the UN/NGO agenda, Shan condemns Third World countries, such as India, for developing their own nuclear weapons. Given the enormous nuclear arsenal of the United States, and its refusal to commit to "no first strike" policies, it is clear that no major nation can conceive of self-defense without a nuclear deterrent. The origins of colonialism itself are rooted in this kind of military disadvantage, a lesson not lost on most people of the Third World.

But, for Shan and his ilk everything emerging from the Third World is tainted. For example, Shan castigates the entire Shahia tradition as an "indigenous ill." Thus 1,000 years of Islamic jurisprudence, one of the greatest legal, philosophical and intellectual achievements of human history, is dismissed because it is not Western. But the philosophical revolution of the European Renaissance would scarcely have been possible without the influence of this same Islamic jurisprudence Shan so denigrates. Shan uses this example without having even the slightest notion of what he is talking about simply to play on fashionable western hostility against Arabs, Muslims and Islam.

The UN/NGO project depends on the cooperation of a supply of Third World citizens, coming out of universities such as our own, willing to serve by betraying their own nations and traditions for the West. They serve to legitimize the UN-NGO agenda for the Third World. These are the modern missionaries of this most insidious form of neocolonialism. Hence the value of Shan's excellent exposé, a guide to decoding their real views and intentions.

People have been asking me recently why I want to study law. After an undergraduate education in both legal studies and journalism, and considerable experience as a reporter, they wonder why I just don't jump right into the work force. At those moments I wish I had that article in my hands. Holding it up I would say, "I either write about this or do something about it." I don't want to reiterate the facts only, I want to change them too.

Domestic violence, hate speech, housing discrimination, public policy and immigration law also belong to that list of Latino issues like drug busts, shoot-outs and gang wars. Every time a family member asks, I tell them not to question my intentions and support me because they need me.

The climate of our campus is not a welcoming and comfortable one for people of color. On a daily basis, we are ignored, stereotyped, attacked and overlooked because of race. The University of Massachusetts does not work toward ending ignorance, hatred and racism. It seems that no one is brave enough to look the Beast in the face.

In my time here, I have not seen the institution taking on its responsibilities for the ugly problems that affect us all. The University could fund offices like the Office of ALANA Affairs or New WORLD Theater which provide diverse programming that benefits the entire campus. The University could initiate academic programming in Ethnic and Race Studies by following up on student initiatives for Asian American Studies or Latino/a Studies.

The University could provide more tenure-track positions to professors of color. The University could fulfill its agreement with students in 1992 to reach 20 percent enrollment of students of color. The University could provide paid leave for staff who wish to attend diversity training or anti-racism workshops. The University could acknowledge and publically condemn the many acts of racialized violence that have taken place, student on student, police on student, staff on student, every day, every semester. The list goes on and UMass continues to fail us.

— Anh Li

Five years ago, the University of Massachusetts was introduced to me as a multicultural, and diverse atmosphere. I have experienced quite the opposite, however, both socially and academically. The most obvious being on the social level, which is commonly addressed and focused upon as one of the main dilemmas between ethnic groups. As a SOM senior I have witnessed a different form of separation that no one seems to take heed to, if detected at all. It may be perceived as harmless, which in all actuality it isn't.

According to statistics, students of color enrolled at UMass represent a minority in population. In the School of Management the minority population is even smaller, causing students of color to be isolated in classrooms. As a result there are many disadvantages, such as suspicion of exam cheating, not being selected for group projects and association between tall black males and basketball. It is completely sickening to be portrayed as such an individual. It is also a disappointment to know that my tuition dollar contributed to the same mistreatment and stereotypes that I initially intended to leave behind. If there is one thing that I have learned throughout my four and a half years at UMass is that there is no escaping racial ignorance.

I have only realized that it appears in different forms. It is ironic that this obstacle contributes to making me, as well as my friends stronger, blacker and prouder. So I tip my hat to UMass for misrepresenting the higher learning experience which will prepare me for the real and all so true world.

— Drew Brown with Shah Anderson

I came to the University of Massachusetts four years ago thinking that I was white. I desperately pretended, and was encouraged to pretend, that I was as lily-white as everyone else. This was how I began my college experience as a white wannabe.

That was four years ago. And now I am at another turning point, about to leave this place that has taught me so much. I've learned a lot about myself in the past four years, and had some really great experiences. But I've also seen the worst side of UMass — the scary side.

I've seen an Asian student attacked on campus by white students who called him "nigger." I've been through three years of a political science department without encountering a single professor who wasn't a white American male. I have had professors who are visibly loath to speak with me face-to-face, because I am Asian, or a woman, or both. I understand. Hopefully, others will take my place on these committees and chisel at the heads of these no-good do-gooders.

I must give credit to the students who have fought to make this campus more inclusive to those who are still here. Many, do not get the credit they deserve. They are not running around looking for someone to pat them on their back. They are working late into the night trying to figure out how to unite their own community and the ALANA community. To these students, I would like to say, thank you.

For all the alums, yourselves and the students of the future, keep up the good fight. One of these days, someone in the Whitmore, Bartlett, Thatcher Admissions, is going to have to listen, or just be left behind.

— Kristin St John

For better or for worse, I know now that I am definitely not white.

— Helen Hae Seung Hong

Being here at the University of Massachusetts for these four years I've learned a lot, inside and outside of the classroom. Some lessons have been hard to deal with, such as the fact that no one looks out for you as much as you look out for yourself. Other lessons were a lot more pleasant, such as giving up a little of your time can make a difference for a younger person. By spending a few hours a month with Jr. and Sr. high school students in Springfield with the SUMMA program, I learned so much. The greatest feeling is helping to make the "dream" of college attainable for young people who don't feel it can happen for them.

— Michelle Lugo

One of the greatest lessons I learned here at UMass is that true importance of a support system. There were many times when I didn't think I could make it, especially to this point — my senior year. I didn't believe I even belonged in college but the support system I developed soon after I arrived here let me know that this was untrue. I was here for a purpose, attaining my education and while I was here I could make a difference. If it wasn't for my support system I don't think I would have made it this far.

I took advantage of a lot of the opportunities this University had to offer, something that I would recommend everyone to do. Because of that, and the support I received I got the most out of my college career.

— Michele N. Scott

I've only been at the University of Massachusetts now for two years, having transferred in the spring of 1994. I felt alone and I really did not feel comfortable attending UMass once I entered the classrooms. I'm an English and psychology major and there are not many minority students at UMass, let alone in my two majors. I didn't get along with my two roommates, who happened to be white, during my first semester.

As a minority student, I experienced some discrimination and racism from a few students especially. Since I became a RA, however, I received lots of support from faculty and residence life staff. I felt very confident in myself and showed talents through maintaining good grades while involved in many activities.

It's tough as a minority student in college, because you're not expected to be here or even graduate. But as an African American student I went beyond what was expected of me, proven myself.

— Chinedu Ogbuike

There are many issues in our community, but the most debilitating one is our own lack of involvement in it. We do not get involved in the governing bodies that affect us. Here at the University, the ALANA community is constantly under attack and the only time students are concerned is when money is the issue.

I speak on behalf of my colleagues when I say that we do not always have the support that we need even from our own community. Is it fair that ALANA leaders had no support when we wanted to prevent the increase of SAT score standards at the University, because it is biased against students of color? Is it fair that when the ALANA Caucus was brought to the SGA Judiciary to be eliminated we had no one come out?

Leadership is not something that should happen when an issue arises, it is something that is born, grows and strengthens before something happens. Leadership is pre-cautionary and pro-active, not reactionary. I urge the ALANA community to get involved in the SGA and RSO's on campus. Self-representation is the only way to achieve self-empowerment.

— William Davila

After four years I am walking away with great memories, a lot of laughs, numerous run ins with the local police and a dim view of the "Happy Valley." The UMass experience without a support system is a four-year prison term. We are constantly at odds with ignorant instructors, administrators and staff who do not care about anything except getting their paychecks and accolades for encouraging a "multicultural environment."

Sitting on assorted administrative driven commissions I see which faculty and staff can actually walk the walk. There are not that many. Instead of working for progress on this campus, I watch these "distinguished adults" talk in circles to make themselves feel better. After eight semesters of the same proposals and language being tossed around, I am finished trying to make them understand. Hopefully, others will take my place on these committees and chisel at the heads of these no-good do-gooders.

I must give credit to the students who have fought to make this campus more inclusive to those who are still here. Many, do not get the credit they deserve. They are not running around looking for someone to pat them on their back. They are working late into the night trying to figure out how to unite their own community and the ALANA community. To these students, I would like to say, thank you.

For all the alums, yourselves and the students of the future, keep up the good fight. One of these days, someone in the Whitmore, Bartlett, Thatcher Admissions, is going to have to listen, or just be left behind.

— Kristin St John

This is it, our very last page of the semester. Ever since our first page, we've tried to represent the voices and concerns of ALANA students on campus and of all over the world.

One of the most pressing issues on campus have been the issue of ALANA representation among the students, faculty and staff. Today, Asian students comprise 6 percent of the student body, Black students 4 percent, Latino students 4 percent and Native American students 0.3 percent.

These miserably inadequate numbers are a blatant disregard for students of color by the administration. This, above any multicultural rhetoric, shows exactly where Whitmore stands on the issue of ALANA representation.

We pledge to keep pressuring the administration by any means necessary until we can truly say that we are a multicultural University. There are still a number of issues of concern to students of color that have yet to be addressed. Concerns such as police harassment, admission standards, Eurocentrism in the curriculum, diversifying the faculty and staff and acquiring the papers of Malcolm X, Shirley Graham Du Bois, and Herbert Apthecker for the W.E.B. Du Bois Library. We encourage all ALANA students to write for the Multicultural Affairs page and the other diversity pages. Students just like you fought to create these pages, let's continue their legacy...

Hard work has gone into these pages, hard work at the expense of academics this semester. Special thanks goes to Professor David Du Bois for his guidance.

This semester non-ALANA groups have continued to verbally attack and malign the Multicultural Affairs page and the rest of the diversity pages. However, the positive feedback from the students of color on campus has made the semester worthwhile.

The input from these students of color reminds us of the words of our great leader, Malcolm X, who said, "I have been more reassured each time the white man resisted me, attacked me, or handled me. Each time made me more certain I was on the right track."

New albums by Polvo and Unwound fall short

POLVO
Exploded Drawing
Touch & Go Records

The walls of the post-Sonic Youth world are plastered with a wide style of noise mongers from Blonde Redhead ("Let's sound like a SY cover band") to Unwound ("We are younger and punker than you"). Mixing quirks riffs with blasts of feedback, Polvo has found their niche owing a debt to Moore and Renaldo without sacrificing their own sound (see Blonde Redhead).

Led by Ash Bowie and Dave Brylawski, who share vocal and guitar duties, Polvo has remained at the forefront of the angular rock scene along with the now-deceased Slint and Rodan. Both Louisville sluggers released groundbreaking albums, Spiderland and Rusty respectively, only to disintegrate into pieces. Unfortunately, in some ways, Polvo has persevered for five years and their deep well of ideas has run shallow.

Exploded Drawing, Polvo's first release since Bowie joined Helium as full-time bass player, experiments with a few new sounds. On "Passive Attack" (a take on Massive Attack?) Polvo makes an ill attempt at an "unplugged" tune that adds little to the Polvo legacy.

Songs like "Snowstorm in Iowa" complete with fake metal guitar riffs keeps Polvo in a class alone in the post-SY guitar world, but the feedback explosion has become old hat, more tame and less riveting. B– (Mike Burke) something like this: not-quite-tuned-right guitars over a groovish rhythm section and a beefy jumble of post-modern dissatisfaction (screams).

It's all very creepy and empowering during the high-velocity songs, but the slower, dronier pieces yield the adrenaline-high some lag-time — in which you may pause and begin to wonder if all that angst isn't a little trite. Ever since 1977, it hasn't been easy for a rock band to be disenchanted and interesting.

Unwound seems to be aware of the limitations (Repetition isn't just the name of the album, it's photocopied successively down the cover), but their latest album is a little short on innovation.

It's as if they're really trying to remind us their method has played itself out so maybe we'll identify, catch the languor and still rock out. And why not? They know what's missing just as well as we do. "Message Received" — the album's first song — says it all: "chaos does not compute." B– (Michael Manekin)

VARIOUS ARTISTS
Twisted Willie
Justice Records

Here's the chance of a lifetime! Go cow-tipping with all your favorite grunge stars. That's right — the all stars of grunge take mighty weak whacks at old Willie Nelson songs that would leave the ol' cowboy turning in his grave, if he was dead.

Twisted Willie is yet another addition to the endless marathon of tribute albums that huddle the "best" of today's stars to cover songs of the best of yesteryears. Most tributes fall flat on their face like a cow tipped while sleeping — Twisted Willie falls even quicker.

The opening track, "Time of the Preacher," sung by Johnny Cash, shows the most potential as his backing band includes an all-Seattle line-up stronger than those mighty Supersonics: Krist Novoselic (ex-Nirvana), Kim Thayil (Soundgarden) and Sean Kinney (Alice 'n Chains). L7's version of "Three Days" brings the band one step closer to the cut-out bin of your local record stores. Meanwhile Kelley Deal of the Breeders (who teams up with Kris Kristofferson) proves that her sister, Kim, is the only Deal with an ounce of talent.

The Reverend Horton Heat, known as the leader of the cowpunk sub-genre, saves the album from complete disaster with their version of "Hello Walls." The Reverend has kept Nelson's tongue-in-cheek attitude along with the original western sound.

If you like Nelson — buy one of his albums. If you like grunge — dust off that copy of Nevermind. Need country? — check out the new Scud Mountain Boys, just don't

THE ISLEY BROTHERS
Mission to Please
Island Black Music

Four decades since they broke onto the scene with top 40 classics like "Shout" and "Twist and Shout," the Isley Brothers have become, according to the press release, "the perfect backdrop for one-on-one, late night love sessions."

Formed in the 1950's the Isley Brothers — O'Kelly, Rudolph and Ronald — have survived several line-up changes. On Mission to Please, Ronald is the only original member, but now he is teamed with brothers Ernie and Marvin.

Every single song here, with the exception of the closing tune, "Tears ... Ron Crying Along" revolves around the band's mission to please the ladies. Just listen to the titles: "Whenever You're Ready," "Let's Get Intimate," "Let's Lay Together" and "Slow is the Way."

Musically the Isley Brothers mix 60s soul and R&B with today's sounds. Top 40 hitmaker R. Kelly wrote and produced the first single, "Let's Lay Together" but every song blends together for an endless soundtrack for those "late night love sessions." C (M.B.)

Hype offers more than its name

By Laura Stack

THE GREAT WHITE HYPE
Directed by Reginald Hudlin with Samuel L. Jackson, Damon Wayans, Peter Berg
Playing at Hampshire Six

Despite what the title indicates, this film isn't a bunch of hype. It's a surprisingly entertaining movie that delivers a sucker punch to the industry it purports to revere — professional boxing.

In an allegorical fashion, The Great White Hype intermingles all of the glitz, glamour and gluttony of the Las Vegas boxing scene with a serious underlying message of racism and exploitation.

Samuel L. Jackson is poised on the Don King throne of boxing as the wealthy, underhanded promoter Reverend Sultan. Ostentatiously attired in glittering turbans, robes and gaudy gold jewelry, Jackson and his corrupt entourage (which includes Jon Lovitz and Corbin Bernsen) set out to manipulate the boxing industry and all of its financial rewards by creating the "fight of the century" — pitting the black heavyweight champion against a hyped-up white boy.

Damon Wayans (last seen in the atrocious Celtic Pride) stars as the champ, James "The Grim Reaper" Roper. He's as pompous as professional athletes come, relishing in his success and his increasing collection of Rolls Royces. His hyped-up opponent is Terry Conklin (Peter Berg) — a "retired" boxer who resembles a beefy Ethan Hawke, as he plays guitar

Last Dance just a bad knock–off

By Justin Daniel Smith
Collegian Staff

LAST DANCE
Directed by Bruce Beresford with Sharon Stone, Rob Morrow
Playing at Mt. Forms Four

Dead Woman Walking — there I said it. The problem is that Last Dance is not nearly half of the movie that Dead Man Walking is.

Sharon Stone is Cindy Liggett, a woman on death row for a vicious double murder that has haunted her for the past 12 years. In her teens she was a crack-smoking burglar, victim of a life of neglect.

Throughout her sentence she has tried to deal with her crime — examining her life and trying to make amends with herself. Though she could never fully make up for her actions, prison had reformed her.

Rick Hayes (Rob Morrow), on the other hand, was born with a silver spoon in his mouth. He never had to work for anything in his life. But after a recent bankruptcy of his father's firm, Hayes is left unemployed in a harsh world.

Luckily his brother, John (Peter Gallagher) scores him a job as an attorney with the Clemency Board and his first assignment is to review the Liggett case. The problem is that the governor, who has not granted clemency in his entire career, is up for re-election and has no plans on deviating from his past for Liggett.

1995 Academy Award nominee Sharon Stone stars as Death Row inmate Cindy Liggett in Last Dance.

COURTESY ZADE ROSENTHAL

Clearly Hayes has been assigned the case strictly for busy work. Hayes comes to sympathize with Liggett and though he believes that she should remain incarcerated, he feels that she has changed dramatically enough to avoid execution.

With her execution date set, Liggett will be the first woman executed in the state's history (the state is never mentioned but it is obviously in the South). Hayes is faced with the job of trying to give her a second chance.

Perhaps Liggett does deserve a second chance, but the film on the other hand does not. The plot and Dead Man Walking's are more similar than not. Sean Penn and Sharon Stone even have the same slicked-to-the-back hair. Their characters could pass for siblings.

Rob Morrow, who failed the Boston accent miserably in Quiz Show, misses again with his occasional Southern attempt. Last Dance is Sharon Stone's movie. After proving herself in Casino, and earning a Oscar nomination, Stone showed that she could be more than just naked. Though her performance is a cry away from saving the movie, she continues to establish herself as a versatile actress.

Australian director Bruce Beresford is far better film- maker than Last Dance proves. His credits include the 1982 critically acclaimed Breaker Morant — which, unlike Last Dance, actually worked as an examination of guilt, as well as the Oscar winning Driving Miss Daisy.

Without overemphasizing the fact, it is obviously unnecessary for this movie to come out so soon after such a great predecessor. Throwing in a weak subplot that involves Charles S. Dutton also nearing his day of reckoning certainly does not help matters. Whether it happened by chance or just coincidence, Last Dance will never be more than a hack Dead Man Walking. C–

Famous conductor switches to opera

By Mary Campbell
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Bright balloons shaped like red peppers festoon the hotel room of symphony conductor Zubin Mehta, who just celebrated his 60th birthday.

"I carry red peppers everywhere with me," explains Mehta, a native of India. "I have this Indian palate and stomach. I add them to everything."

Mehta was in New York with the Israel Philharmonic — both were born in 1936 — for two Carnegie Hall concerts, one a benefit for the orchestra.

"The orchestra has about a $4 million deficit," he says. "These celebrations of my birthday and the orchestra's birthday are to bring in lots of dollars that we need desperately."

At 60, Mehta considers himself experienced enough to know what he's about and young enough to still be vigorous. Now he's taking on a second important baton-wielding job, as music director of the Bavarian State Opera in Munich.

"It's now or never," he says.

Since 1968, Mehta has been music director of the Israel Philharmonic, which he first conducted when he was 25. In 1981 he was proclaimed "music director for life."

When Mehta left his native India, it was to study music in Vienna. He was music director of the Montreal Symphony from 1961 to 1967, the Los Angeles Philharmonic from 1962 to 1978 and the New York Philharmonic from 1978 to 1991.

From the first time he went to Israel, Mehta felt an affinity with the country. "My Asiatic background has a lot to do with that," he says. "It was almost like a homecoming.

"My connection with the orchestra is really from the heart. It is not only the musicians. It is my love for the country which expresses itself in my making music with the orchestra."

Asked about his plans for the future, Mehta says, "I'm going to take a head dive into this operatic world. I think I'm ready for it now. I have accumulated enough operatic acumen to go into the European repertory system."

Mehta will continue to spend three months a year in Israel and will lead the Israel Philharmonic's tours. The Bavarian State Opera job involves 40 performances in five months a season. Since Mehta left the New York Philharmonic, he has been conducting more and more in opera houses.

"It was among my principal reasons for wanting to leave one of the greatest orchestras in the world," he says.

When the prestigious Berlin Philharmonic was choosing a music director in 1989, Mehta declined to be considered for the job. He already was expanding his interest in opera.

In March, he conducted the Ring cycle operas at the Lyric Opera of Chicago, which he found exciting.

"Operatically speaking, the Ring in Chicago was absolutely the high point of my musical life," Mehta says.

Heading an opera company wasn't a secret ambition, Mehta says.

"I never knew whether I ever wanted to be music director of an opera house. When they came to me and offered me this job, I mulled over it a little bit, I must say."

Although he ranks Munich with Berlin and Vienna as the three most important opera houses in the German-speaking world, Mehta hesitated because he will conduct a lot of operas with little or no rehearsal.

"That's the way those opera houses exist," Mehta says. He decided, "I want to be part of that system."

Mehta says he'll guest-conduct infrequently after he starts the Munich job in 1998. "Once a year I go to Vienna and Berlin — I first conducted both orchestras when I was 25 — but I never did too much guest conducting. I never did enjoy that."

Nowadays Mehta enjoys passing on his knowledge to young performers, but he raises some of the older ones, such as violinist Isaac Stern, who has curtailed his performing.

"There were moments in many violin concertos where Isaac and I used to communicate so many things onstage," Mehta says. "When those moments occur with young kids, I think of Isaac. I can't help it. Asked whether his interpretations of music have changed, Mehta says that's an ongoing process.

"My basic concept doesn't change," he says. "There are always new insights. I get very inspired by my musicians. Many of my ideas I steal from them. In performance you change a detail here and a detail there. One floats with the musicians, interpretively speaking."

and sings in a Cleveland grunge band.

Playing up the fact that Conklin is the only man to ever beat Roper (in an amateur bout, that is) with his notorious overhand right, Jackson picks him up from the grungy bowels of the club scene and transforms him into "Irish Terry" Conklin — a myth to challenge the legend.

Sporting a Celtic jacket, kilt and all-green clothing, the poor, stupid, illiterate Conklin is roped into the "sham of the century" by Jackson. Even though he lacks the vocabulary to express it clearly, we know Conklin is sincere in that if he wins he will use the money, "to eradicate the homelessness situations in the world."

Meanwhile, the insulted, used Roper lets himself go — getting fat on ice-cream and chain smoking before the fight. Dressed completely in black, and seemingly always in a bad mood, we also know that the intelligent, professional Roper isn't really the dark, evil side of this movie — it's Jackson and everything he represents.

Director Reginald Hudlin (Boomerang) is masterful, as close attention is paid to every detail of the film — particularly the black–white dichotomy. He also expands on a third level of racism, as Jackson keeps fending off the black heavyweight challenger who wants Roper's belt. Even more impressive is although boxing takes a backseat to the personalities and issues raised in Hype, there is actually an anticipation built around the inevitable match-up of Conklin and Roper.

Unfortunately, Hype is flawed in that the development of the plot is somewhat uneven, taking valuable screen time away from the talented Wayans. Berg relishes in his ridiculous role, though, and the majority of the acting is on- target. Hudlin's blend of controversy and comedy proves that Hollywood may be offering us some hope instead of hype these days. B

UNIVERSITY STORE'S Textbook Annex UMASS AMHERST

Protect your Textbook investment!
To prepare for finals you really need your textbooks. Beware, other people also want your textbooks.

Textbook Theft
Theft of books occurs all the time. To protect your investment:
1. don't leave your books or backpacks unattended.
2. don't leave your room open.
3. do write your name in your books.
If your books are stolen, file a report with the University Police and the Textbook Annex.

Buyback Scam
Beware of people who come to your dorm to buyback your books. Last semester people went through the dorms buying books door to door. They are not authorized and will not give you the best prices (despite what they tell you).
They do not have access to the list of books that we are buying at 50% of the publisher's list price. They will pay you less.
If a faculty member has placed an order for your book to be used in the fall semester we can pay you 50% of the publisher's list price for that book. People going door to door will not!
Textbook buyback starts May 15th at the Annex and in Campus Center Room 162. The buyback at Hampden starts May 22nd.

him as soon as I got the job. He gave me a big hug. I hope that he was happy that it was someone he knew was going to represent the program well.

"I certainly hope [he was proud]. I hope he knew that I wanted to do what was best for the program," Cannella said.

Cannella has tried to keep Coach's ideals as the cornerstone for the program.

"The philosophy of learning life through athletics and learning about doing your best, and excelling and learning about trying to be your best now, to prepare yourself for the future," Cannella said. "Coach always told us that if we worked our hardest, hustled and played with our hearts, that was winning. That carries over to the rest of your life.

"For the rest of your life, you're going to succeed and you're going to fail. You want to make sure that you're prepared for that. Winning and losing wasn't like complete success or failure to Coach. He was a very positive guy. That's something that I'm learning."

Even though their contact with him was minimal, Coach still had a considerable effect on the current Minutemen.

"He always had a smile on his face," Hoffman remembered. "Even though he was hurting with his cancer, he never let anyone know it. His heart was still there and his smile was still there."

Kelly recalled his lacrosse brilliance.

"Coach Garber would just take over a conversation. He knew so much about the game. You felt his presence, his aura," Kelly said. "When he spoke, you just wanted to listen. You wanted to absorb all his knowledge."

On foggy days, when the field is vacant, if you look closely as you walk past, you can almost see a shadow of the legend with players gathered around him fixed on his every word with admiration in their eyes.

And when the current Minutemen step onto the field that is named in his honor, the feeling that he is watching over his baby, and always will be, is prevalent.

"As long as I'm the coach here, Coach will still be part of the program... in my heart," Cannella said.

And in everyone else's.

score early though, plating an unearned run in the first inning and three more unearned runs in the third, set up by a pair of UMass errors.

Henderson relieved starter Liz Wagner midway through the inning with the bases loaded, and surrendered the three runs on a sacrifice fly, wild pitch and a scratch single.

The righty threw 4.2 innings in the second game allowing five hits and dropping her ERA to 0.98. All five Tiger runs on the day were unearned.

Osier helped manufacture a run in the bottom half of the frame. After the speedy sophomore beat out a bunt single, she stole second, tying her own single season record of 22 stolen bases. Osier took third on a wild pitch and wheeled around to score when Sam Cardenas ripped a line-drive single to left off of a diving Michelle Morale's glove at third base.

UMass mounted a very serious rally in the bottom of the seventh, but the Tigers held on.

Galas led off the inning by lacing a single to left, advancing to second as Pam Reeves bobbled it. After being moved to third by Katie Kenderski, Galas scored on Osier's second infield single of the game.

Osier moved to second on Cardenas' third hit of the contest. With the tying run aboard Marcina hit a sharp grounder into the hole at third, but Morale was able to fire and catch the swift centerfielder at first by a whisker.

UMass will return to action tomorrow when it hosts Marist College in an NCAA play-in series starting at 3 p.m. The Red Foxes are 28-12 on the year against a soft schedule entering the best-of-three series.

Final Sports Staff Meeting

The final sports staff meeting of the semester will be Tuesday at 6 p.m. in the Collegian offices. This is mandatory and all in attendance will be greatly rewarded for attending.

Jackson named Coach of the Year

By Rick Gano
Associated Press

CHICAGO — Phil Jackson, philosopher, author, laid-back proponent of Zen meditation and former flower child, faced perhaps his greatest challenge as a coach this season.

His object: Take a team with the game's greatest player and its strangest player and mesh the personalities, characters, abilities and temperaments into a championship run.

Jackson did that and more, leading the Chicago Bulls to the NBA's best-ever regular season with 72 victories. His reward yesterday was being selected as the league's Coach of the Year. It's an honor that escaped Jackson during the Bulls' run of three straight tiles from 1991-93.

"He lets you be yourself," said forward Dennis Rodman, the man of many hair colors and body piercing who head-butted a referee for a six-game suspension, led the league in rebounding and released a provocative book.

Jackson kept moody and talented players like Rodman, Scottie Pippen and Toni Kukoc satisfied and productive as they surrounded and complemented Michael Jordan.

When the team hit a lull with Pippen nursing injuries and Rodman serving a suspension, Jordan took control on the floor and Jackson off.

"Mentally he challenged us in lots of different ways. And that wasn't every night. We had veteran players, so we went through stretches motivating ourselves. But he was very good at giving us a challenge and pushing us when we needed to be pushed," Jordan said.

Jackson received 82 out of a possible 113 votes from a panel of sports writers and broadcasters.

Mike Fratello of the Cleveland Cavaliers finished second with 22 votes. Six coaches received at least one vote for this season's award, including Detroit's Doug Collins (3), San Antonio's Bob Hill (3), Houston's Rudy Tomjanovich (2) and Atlanta's Lenny Wilkens (1).

Del Harris of the Los Angeles Lakers won the Coach of the Year award last year.

Chicago's 72-10 record during the season was an improvement of 25 victories over the previous season, the fifth largest single-season improvement in NBA history.

Jackson, in his seventh season with Chicago, also led the Bulls to NBA records for most consecutive home victories (44) and most consecutive home wins to start a season (37). Chicago ranked first in the NBA in scoring with 105.2 points per game and was first in point differential at plus 12.2.

But the numbers would not have been possible without the control Jackson demanded in his own unique way. His handling of Rodman, whose antics were blamed for derailing the San Antonio Spurs' title drive last season, was perhaps his greatest accomplishment. Jackson, trying to gain a new deal with the Bulls, is making $850,000 in the final year of a contract that ranks in the middle of the NBA coaching pack.

He owns a 70-28 playoff coaching record and is 414-160 in the regular season.

Leslie leads U.S.

CANBERRA, Australia (AP) — Katrina McClain wasn't on the court, but Lisa Leslie was yesterday, scoring 33 points and grabbing 14 rebounds as the United States defeated Australia 96-81 in a fournation women's basketball tournament.

McClain was forced to sit out yesterday's game with a sprained right ankle, suffered in Monday's win over Cuba in Melbourne. But Leslie, a 6-four, 5-inch forward from Inglewood, Calif., made up for her absence.

"She did a good job for us defensively, offensively and also off the glass," U.S. coach Tara VanDerveer said. "It was especially important today that she performed well while Katrina McClain was out injured.

"A game like this can only boost our confidence. To be able to beat a team as competitive and talented as Australia without one of our best players on their home turf is very promising."

The American national team, gold medal favorites for the Atlanta Olympics in July, led 50-44 at halftime and then withstood several Australian comebacks to stretch its overall record to 41-0 and 19-0 against international competition.

It was the first meeting between the two nations since the 1994 world championships, when the American team won the playoff for third.

The United States is using the 10-day tournament — which also includes Cuba and Ukraine — to help prepare for the Atlanta Olympics basketball competition which starts July 21. All four nations are in the same qualifying pool for the Olympics.

"We're like an orchestra; a band," Leslie said. "Sometimes a person has a big night, and it was that person. But it was a great team effort."

Ruthie Bolton scored 16 points and Teresa Edwards added 13 points for the U.S. team.

Michele Timms scored 20 points for Australia, which trailed 75-71 with less than eight minutes left before the United States pulled away.

In the other games yesterday, Maryna Tkatchenko's 29 points led Ukraine, the 1995 European champion, over Cuba 87-69.

The United States next faces Ukraine in Sydney tomorrow. Australia plays Cuba in the second game. Each team will play the other twice in the double round-robin tournament. The finals are scheduled for May 15 in Adelaide.

Taylor swallowed fake crack

MYRTLE BEACH, S.C. (AP) — Just before his arrest, former NFL Pro Bowl linebacker Lawrence Taylor swallowed the fake crack cocaine he was accused of buying from an undercover officer, police say. Taylor was among 18 people arrested during a random drug sting Friday night. He was charged with trying to purchase $100 worth of crack.

"He informed us that he ate all of it," city police Officer Len Sloan said Monday.

Sloan, who booked Taylor, said he long had admired the player and "I was surprised and hurt more than anything else." Taylor later was freed on $5,000 bond.

Hugh Munn, spokesman for the State Law Enforcement Division, said the fake crack is made from "food-grade substances" and is harmless if swallowed.

Taylor, who was a leader in the New York Giants' drive to Super Bowl championships after the 1986 and 1990 seasons, later said he was having personal problems.

"I oughta kill myself," he told the Sun News of Myrtle Beach.

Taylor's Myrtle Beach lawyer, Tommy Britain, said he did not believe Taylor would actually hurt himself.

"He's concerned and anxious to do the right thing like everybody else," Brittain said Monday. "He wants to face the future with a hopeful attitude and put anything that has happened bad to him behind him... He's strong and has never been under any kind of suicide watch."

Bobby Cupo, Taylor's agent, also said he was not worried about Taylor.

After his release, Taylor attended a sports memorabilia auction at a nightclub later Friday night but he skipped a charity golf tournament Saturday.

Taylor, 37, could be sentenced to two years in prison if convicted, but a prosecutor said jail time was unlikely because Taylor is accused of buying drugs, not selling them.

Brittain said he planned to meet with prosecutors in the next 30 days. At the pretrial conference, Taylor could agree to a plea bargain or request a trial.

not want it laying around, especially after there was a knock at the door.

"He didn't have any time to decide how to handle the situation," Carlin said. "But it was not his. He will be exonerated, we're confident."

Hobson has a court appearance scheduled for July 10 in Providence County Superior Court. The DEA said Hobson's arrest is part of a larger investigation that will include more arrests in other states.

Hobson's arrest is the only one so far, said John Yacup, special agent in charge of the DEA office in Birmingham. The investigation originated in Birmingham.

Hobson played in the majors from 1975 to 1982. A third baseman, his best season was with the Red Sox in 1977, when he hit .26-5 with 30 home runs and 112 RBIs.

He was fired from managing the Boston Red Sox in 1994, compiling a 207-231 record in three seasons, including the strike-shortened 1994 campaign.

After his firing he went to coach for the Mobile, Ala., BaySharks of the Texas-Louisiana League, then joined Scranton-Wilkes-Barre for this season, his first with the Phillies' organization. His compiled a 13-14 record before taking leave Monday.

In October, he said he hoped to get back to the majors. He is a native of Alabama who played baseball and football for the University of Alabama in the early 1970s.

Pre-Commencement General Information

1. There is no pre-Commencement rehearsal.
2. Tickets are not required for your guests and there is no limit on the number of guests you may invite. There is no reserved seating.
3. Caps, gowns, tassels, and announcements may be picked up at the Textbook Annex (545-3570) weekdays between May 1 and 24, 9:00 a.m.-4:00 p.m. Early May pick-up is strongly advised. Please bring your ID card so your eligibility can be confirmed. On Commencement day, regalia may be obtained at the Stadium after 8:30 a.m.
4. Diplomas will be mailed after grades have been received, recorded, and processed by the Registrar's Office, and the diplomas have been engraved. Inquiries in this regard should be addressed to the Registrar's Office, 545-0555.
5. Index orders must be placed by May 11. Call 545-0848 for additional information.
6. Commencement Videotapes may be ordered by calling 545-1284.

* This information supplements the information brochure mailed to seniors and their parents in February. Copies are available at the Visitors Center.

Commencement Day General Information

1. Routes to campus/travel assistance. Please advise your guests to plan ahead to allow sufficient travel time to campus. Traffic off major routes and into Amherst could be heavy as early as 9:00 a.m., and delays may be encountered.
2. Parking and shuttle services. Guests will be directed to designated parking lots. Beginning at 8:30 a.m., free shuttle buses will circle campus every 5-10 minutes, taking you and/or your guests to the Stadium, and returning after the ceremony.
3. Snacks and souvenirs. Coffee, soft drinks, donuts, and pastry will be available at the Stadium. University hats, banners, sweat shirts, film, and disposable cameras will also be available for purchase. The Campus Center coffee shop will be open at 7 a.m.
4. Food Services. Following Commencement there will be a "Food Court" adjacent to the Stadium. There will be a variety of reasonably priced items served including grilled quarter pounders, all-beef franks, grilled chicken sandwiches, and other selections. There will also be gourmet desserts, fresh fruit, chocolate-covered strawberries, and gourmet coffee. Beverage stations will be set-up around the Stadium. For information about this option, call 545-3570.

In addition, "Graduation Luncheons" reservations required, will be featured at the Top of the Campus Restaurant (549-6000) and at the Faculty Club (545-2551).

These options, as well as others in the community, will offer you and your guests an opportunity to celebrate graduation while waiting out traffic.

Commencement Morning Schedule

1. 9:00-9:40 a.m.: Arrive at the Stadium by 9:40 a.m., carrying your cap and gown.
2. 9:40 a.m.: Robe, after which you will receive instructions from Marshals about assembling and the Processional on to the field.
3. 10:10 a.m.: Processional of Degree Candidates begins.
4. 10:30 a.m.: Ceremony begins.
5. 11:45 a.m.: Ceremony ends. Alumni status begins!

What to do / Where to go / When

1. Enter via the Main Entrance Gates on the East side (side opposite the Press Box).

   - Humanities & Fine Arts (in the College of Arts and Sciences)
   - Natural Sciences & Math (in the College of Arts and Sciences)

NOTES:

* Each of the four gates is at the end zone ends of the Stadium.
* Each gate will be clearly marked.
* Marshals will meet you and help you to assemble for the Student Processional.

Routes to Campus (Please Alert Parents & Guests)

It is reasonable to anticipate heavy traffic into the Amherst area as early as 9:00 am on the morning of Undergraduate Commencement. Without careful planning, delays may be encountered.

The major points of congestion are usually at the intersection of exit 19 of I-91 and Route 9 in Northampton, Route 9 immediately after crossing the Coolidge Bridge into Hadley, and routes off Massachusetts Turnpike exit 8 (Palmer).

Local area police officers will be directing traffic at some of these points and others en route to campus.

We have arranged for radio traffic advisories to be broadcast. Tune to Amherst radio station WITT (1430 AM) within approximately 25 miles of Amherst, or WRNX (100.9 FM), within 50 miles.

On arrival, University Police and security officers will direct drivers to designated parking lots from which free shuttle buses, with frequent departures, will take guests to and from the Stadium. For services for mobility impaired guests, please call 545-0892.

If using the Massachusetts Turnpike from the east, one of the following routes other than exit 8 (Palmer) is suggested:

Exit 7 (Ludlow):	Route 21 north to US 202 north to 9 west
Exit 5 (Chicopee):	Route 33 north to 116 north
Exit 4 (W. Springfield):	I-91 north to exit 19 to 9 east.

If I-91 exit 19 is in gridlock, you may chose to continue north to exit 24, to Routes 5 and 10 north, and then immediately right to 116 south.

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST — Student Affairs Special Services

1996 UNDERGRADUATE COMMENCEMENT
FINAL INFORMATION AND INSTRUCTIONS

The following information will help you prepare for the Commencement ceremony. The document is admittedly lengthy and detailed. My endeavor is to be as helpful and complete as possible while providing a basic "checklist". Since there is no pre-Commencement rehearsal, it is VERY important that you take the time to review it to help ensure that the ceremony will begin and end on time and with a minimum of confusion.

On arrival at the Stadium, staff and faculty marshals and other volunteers will assist you and answer any questions you may have. They will also prepare you for the Student Processional and escort you onto the field and to your designated seats. Please cooperate with them throughout the ceremony.

The Student Processional begins at approximately 10:10 a.m. The ceremony begins at 10:30 a.m. and concludes at 11:45 a.m. In the event of heavy rain, it will still be held outside (at the Stadium) but the schedule will be shortened so as to conclude in less than one hour.

While the Commencement ceremony is, in part, a celebration, it is also a formal event. There are several significant ways in which you can contribute to its success. Perhaps most important is to observe regulations concerning alcohol. Abuses in the past unfortunately spoiled the day for many, subjecting the graduates and the University to public criticism.

Further, in keeping with the tradition and the dignity of this event, please be respectful to the speakers and honorary degree recipients. Several are UMass graduates and all of them are distinguished individuals, here at our invitation, and deserving of your attentiveness.

The Commencement Planning Committee, several hundred other employees, and many unpaid volunteers, have devoted considerable time and effort, some for more than a year, to ensuring the success of this important day. We are committed to doing all that we can do to make it as memorable, enjoyable, and meaningful as possible for you as well as for your guests. We ask for your cooperation in making it a day in which we can all take pride.

Thank you, and congratulations on behalf of the Planning Committee as well as the entire University community.

Student Affairs Special Services
Undergraduate Commencement Coordinator

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST — Office of the Chancellor

To the Class of 1996,

Within a few weeks on May 26, the completion of your undergraduate years will be recognized. While all graduations are a time of celebration, the graduation of the Class of 1996 is especially significant since it marks the one hundred and twenty sixth commencement of the University of Massachusetts.

The first class of the then Massachusetts Agricultural College graduated 7 individuals, all with Bachelor of Science degrees in a very limited number of majors. Many went on to distinguished careers in the Commonwealth. Their record of distinctive accomplishments helped to establish the notable reputation of what became in 1947 the University of Massachusetts.

And now one hundred and twenty-six years later, more than 4,000 of you, in nearly 100 different majors, will be graduating and making solid marks and mark in the Commonwealth but also throughout the United States and indeed, around the world.

On behalf of the faculty and staff, I congratulate you for having successfully fulfilled the demanding course of study leading to your degree. I know it is the result of much hard work, and you have every right to be as proud of your achievement as we are of you.

I look forward to joining with you, your families and friends on May 26 to celebrate your academic accomplishments.

Best wishes to you and the best of luck in the future.

Sincerely,

David K. Scott
Chancellor

My friend, Isaiah, ,has a lizard.
It stares at me.

I think it's about as smart as a box of rocks.

It has strange science fiction skin .

It has no sense of right or wrong.
It has no ethics.

It would eat me if it could fit me into its mouth.

It has no sense of past or future.
It lives only in the present.

I don't think it has any feelings whatsoever about anything.

I want to be a lizard.

Your Horoscope

By Jeane Dixon

ARIES (March 21 – April 19) — Be alert to new employment opportunities. Those with high tech skills will get first choice. A candid financial talk with your associates will clear the way for a compromise.

TAURUS (April 20 – May 20) — Redefine your long-term career or business goals. Then seek the cooperation of all involved. Your vivacious personality helps you sell others on your ideas and projects.

GEMINI (May 21 – June 20) — A fresh outlook on life helps you find the solution to a recurring problem. Co- workers want to join your team. Sharing a secret with your mate or business partner will give you new options.

CANCER (June 21 – July 22) — Good news could involve travel, favorable financial terms or offer of support. Obtaining a second opinion could bring you luck. Use your resources judiciously.

LEO (July 23 – Aug. 22) — Do not let an unfortunate clash of personality mar your image. Handle others with diplomacy. A physical fitness program will help you recharge your batteries.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 – Sept. 22) — Pooling ideas and resources with like-minded people will bring success! Key allies are ready to help out. Your technical know-how leads to new job opportunities.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 – Oct. 22) — Finish tasks on time and an authority figure will grant a request. Your powerful charisma draws eligible partners like a magnet. A message or phone call will bring pleasing results.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 – Nov. 21) — A key relationship grows more intense. Your tactful words help cool hot tempers. Avoid debating trivial issues. Getting down to the nitty gritty will keep an agreement intact.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 – Dec. 21) — Others may not pull their weight today. Make sure that you do! VIPs know where you are coming from; a promotion is possible. Romance could be a guessing game. Let the other person take the lead!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 – Jan. 19) — Power plays may be at the bottom of a work slowdown. Playing mediator could reverse this tricky situation. Check the fine print before signing agreements. Others will admire your thoroughness. Tonight, love blossoms anew.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 – Feb. 18) — Discussing your money-making ideas with influential people will leave them clamoring for more. Make certain they pay top dollar. Share good news with those who really care. The benefits will be long-lasting.

PISCES (Feb. 19 – March 20) — Business conducted behind closed doors has a profound effect on your career or company. Look for new options. A home-based business could mushroom overnight. Enlist the help of your mate and other family members.

Garber's spirit lives on in Massachusetts lacrosse

By Matt Vautour
Collegian Staff

Most of his players referred to him as simply Coach. But the late Richard F. Garber was more so much more to the University of Massachusetts. Even though he died early last spring, Coach's spirit still hovers around the UMass lacrosse program.

Visitors to the Minuteman lacrosse field that is named in his honor can feel the tradition that is UMass lacrosse. The tradition that Coach built.

That tradition was based on a lot of things, and while one of them was winning, it certainly wasn't the only thing. When Coach walked away from the game, he had amassed 300 career victories, the most ever by a Division I lacrosse coach, but victories were just the end result of the process.

For the early part of his career, there were no scholarships for lacrosse. Coach recruited, but not from lacrosse hot-beds like Long Island or upstate New York. Garber recruited from physical education classes.

In addition to coaching lacrosse, Garber taught the class Principals of Physical Education. His vibrant personality made him fun to be around, and consequently, his class was one of the most popular at UMass. To fill his teams' ranks, he'd convince players right out of class to join the team.

And despite their lack of experience, he guided players to nine NCAA Tournaments, and in 36 years, he suffered only two losing seasons.

More important to Coach than the on-field success was helping improve his players as people and making sure the game stayed fun.

"People say 'You're too concerned with how the players are doing in school,'" Coach said during his final season. "Shouldn't you be concerned with winning and losing? No, that's a shallow concern. I try to convey that to all the players. There are more important things in the world than lacrosse games.

"I tell my recruits, 'Don't come here just to play lacrosse. Come here to go to school and play lacrosse. The athletic experience is an important and vital part of the overall college experience, but it's not the end result; it's just the icing on the cake.'"

Men's track coach Ken O'Brien met Coach when he took his physical education class while he was a student at UMass. Years later, as his coaching colleague, O'Brien became good friends with Coach.

"He wasn't a self-promoter. His enjoyment from coaching came from the daily interaction with players and the students in the classroom. He wasn't looking for anything beyond that," O'Brien said.

It was that spirit that hovered around him and the program that he built.

One place that Coach's spirit still thrives is in the man who walks the same sidelines that Coach once did. Current men's lacrosse head coach Greg Cannella spent two years playing under Coach's mentorship, after transferring to UMass from Nassau Community College.

When Cannella was just a recruit, he visited Amherst on a recruiting trip. At dinner Coach asked the prospective player what he wanted to do with his life.

"I told him that I wanted to be a teacher and a coach like my father was," Cannella said. "I'm sure that made him feel good because that's what he was, a teacher and a coach. He said 'that would be a great profession for you if you stick with it because you'll be able to touch a lot of people's lives.'"

Coach's ability to touch people's lives certainly held true in the case of Cannella. Coach's teaching and way of dealing with people made him a role model in Cannella's eyes.

"Coach Cannella takes a lot from him," said UMass senior co-captain Buddy Hoffman. "Cannella gets his point across the right way, that you can use it on and off the lacrosse field. I think that's how Dick Garber made an impact on people, on and off the field."

"You can feel his spirit in Coach Cannella," said fellow senior co-captain Dennis Kelly. "[Cannella] feels that if he could be half as good as Coach Garber, that he'd be a success. You just feel it."

Half as good as Garber would still make someone a pretty impressive coach. And when Coach told Cannella that coaching would allow him to touch a lot of people's lives, he wasn't kidding.

In addition to being a mentor on the field, Coach played the role of surrogate father to many of the players as well.

"Coach was the single biggest influence in my life," said former UMass player Norm Smith. "I probably wouldn't have found that at any other school. I probably would have gone through life without one single person staniping something on my soul.

"I developed a real focus on what life is all about. I wanted to have good character and integrity. I didn't care if I won or lost, but I wanted to compete at a high level. That carries over to what I do today," Smith said.

When Cannella first arrived at UMass as a player, he experienced Coach's fatherly tendencies almost immediately.

"When I first came up here to sign-up for housing, there wasn't a room ready for me, so I stayed at his house," Cannella said. "He said 'you're welcome to stay at my house as long as you want.' Numerous players have done that. You were always welcome there. He was like a surrogate father. He was someone we looked up to, somebody we all felt comfortable with.

"I had dinner with the family and he made you feel part of his family," Cannella said.

Many years later, when Coach's son, Ted Garber, left UMass after the 1994 season, Smith was part of a search committee to choose his successor. While there were several high profile coaches that applied for the job, Cannella, then a UMass assistant not even 30-years-old, caught the eyes of the committee.

"Originally we interviewed Greg as just a courtesy," Smith said. "After we interviewed, everyone was just impressed with the official meetings we had with Greg.

"He spent a lot of time talking about commitment and doing your best, not on winning, winning, winning. That carries over to all areas of your life. I really thought that Greg best emulated the ideals that I feel are important in sports, sportsmanship and having fun," Smith said.

For Cannella, to walk the same sidelines and coach on the same field as his former mentor was overwhelming.

"It was unbelievable. I went to see

Softball drops pair to Princeton Tigers

After winning the Atlantic 10 title in the rain, a sunny New England spring afternoon produced similarly different results, as the Massachusetts softball team dropped a pair of crucial games to Princeton 1-0 and 4-2 at Totman Field.

The Minutewomen (35-13-1), ranked first in the Northeast region, played hard but strong pitching and impeccable defense helped the second-ranked Tigers (42-6-1) hang on for the narrow wins. The results will likely give Princeton home field advantage in the NCAA regionals May 15-17.

It was the first time a UMass team had been swept at Totman Field since losing a pair of one-run games to Connecticut on April 22, 1993. All Minutewomen except for senior Amy Powell, who was honored before her final regular season home game, were in high school at the time.

The opening game of the doubleheader saw Danielle Henderson offer a text-book example of the phrase "tough-luck loser," as she picked up a loss despite a stellar performance. The 1-0 pitcher's duel featured a total of just seven hits, with few serious scoring threats.

Henderson went the distance allowing just one unearned run and four hits, but saw her school record 20-game consecutive winning streak snapped.

Maureen Davies was equally brilliant on the Tiger mound, allowing three hits and striking out seven.

UMass had perhaps its best rally in the bottom of the third with Stephanie Marcina and Tracy Oster aboard with two outs, but Kim Gutridge was robbed of a hit by a diving Tara Chrisie at short.

Princeton pushed across the first game's lone run in the top of the sixth as Christie beat out an infield single and advanced to third on a throwing error. Christie nearly scored on the play, but rightfielder Mandy Gulas cut off the ball before it rolled too far away. Christie would still score though as Mandy Pfeffer delivered a sacrifice fly.

After mustering three hits in the first game against a stingy defense, UMass coach Elaine Sortino played some hunches and juggled her batting order like a Fanuel Hall sidewalk performer before the second game.

Baseball drills Wildcats, will honor seniors today

By Casey Kane
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts baseball team will honor its seniors today when Harvard visits Earl E. Lorden Field at 3 p.m.

It will be a rematch of the first round game of the baseball Beanpot Tournament, a game UMass won 13-2 at Fenway Park. The Minutemen scored in all but two innings in that game, hitting off of five Harvard (22-15, 14-6 in the Ivy) pitchers.

At New Hampshire yesterday, the Minutemen cruised to a win over the Wildcats, 18-1. Ryan Jette had his first career grand slam in a 13-run sixth inning to power UMass at Brackett Diamond.

Massachusetts (32-9, 15-5 in the Atlantic 10) is riding the longest winning streak in Division I collegiate baseball this year, coming out victorious in 18 straight contests, dating back to the series against Rhode Island April 14.

The Minutemen are led in batting by sophomore second baseman Muchie Dagliere. Dagliere is ranked first in the A-10 in that category with a .434 batting average. He has hit for team-high totals in hits (62) and triples (4).

Junior centerfielder Nate Murphy, who hit Harvard pitcher Andrew Huling up for a three-run homer at Fenway, is another threat at the plate for the Minutemen. Murphy is batting .364 and has recorded 51 hits, including team-highs in doubles (12), triples (4 with Dagliere) and home runs (7).

The Minutemen who will be playing in their final home game today are:

Ryan Jette — The captain has been a solid force for the Minutemen, as one of only two players to start and play in every game this season. Batting in the lead-off spot, Jette has collected 58 hits for a team-high 46 runs. His .360 batting average includes nine doubles, three triples and two home runs.

He has stolen 24 bases in 34 attempts this year, giving him the UMass record for stolen bases in a career. He also holds the single-season stolen bases record (32). He is currently second on the A-10 list for stolen bases with a 0.65 steal average. On all-time UMass lists, Jette leads the career list for batting average (.381) and is currently tied for second on the hit by pitches list (17).

Justin Kelly — Although captain Justin Kelly has had a fine year at first base, perhaps the thing that has gotten him the most attention this year is the number of times he has been hit by pitches. Opposing hurlers have beaned Kelly 15 times this year alone, easily giving him the top spot in that category with 23 total.

The only other player (along with Jette) to start and play every game this season, Kelly has hit .302 with 26 runs and 28 RBI on 42 hits. He's tallied seven doubles and two homers. On the bag, Kelly has tallied a .991 fielding percentage with only three errors.

David Dart — The captain is the only senior pitcher in the UMass rotation. He has recorded a 3.50 ERA this season, earning him the sixth position on the A-10 list for pitching. The southpaw has posted a 4-1 record, striking out 29 and walking 23. He has given up 18 runs, 15 earned, on 37 hits this year. His 833 career winning percentage ranks him third on the UMass all-time list for that category.

Andy Kiah — The starting catcher and captain has been consistent behind the plate for UMass. He has a .994 fielding percentage and only one error this year. Kiah has a .349 batting average that includes seven doubles and a home run. He has hit for 13 runs and 20 RBI on 29 hits.

Hobson says cocaine charges are a mistake

By Bill Dermody
Associated Press

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — Former Boston Red Sox manager Butch Hobson was going to take the cocaine mailed to him to police, but they did not give him enough time, a lawyer said yesterday.

"He was as surprised as anyone to find he had been sent cocaine," said lawyer Susan Carlin, partner of Hobson's lawyer Stephen Famiglietti.

"He was trying to figure out what to do with it, then there's a knock on the door and it's the police," Carlin said.

Hobson, 44, was arrested Saturday in a Pawtucket hotel on a charge of cocaine possession. The charge carries a maximum three years in prison.

Police were led to Hobson when they intercepted an overnight letter mailed from the Birmingham, Ala., area to The Comfort Inn, where Hobson was staying with the Philadelphia Phillies' Triple A team he now coaches, the Scranton-Wilkes-Barre Red Barons. The International League team was in town for a two-game weekend series against the Pawtucket Red Sox, which Hobson managed in 1991 before being called up to coach the BoSox between 1992-94.

Following his arrest Saturday afternoon, Hobson was booked at the Pawtucket police station, released on personal recognizance, and headed to McCoy Stadium for a 6 p.m. game.

He stayed at the hotel overnight, managed the Sunday afternoon game and left on the team bus back to Pennsylvania. He has since taken a leave of absence from the team and returned to his off-season home in Fairhope, Ala.

Arriving on a flight to Mobile, Ala., Hobson declined to comment on the charges when met by reporters.

"Hang in there with me," he told reporters before going home with his family.

The overnight letter was mailed to Hobson by an acquaintance whom Hobson had loaned several hundred dollars, Carlin said. Hobson was called to the front desk to accept the letter from an agent for the Drug Enforcement Agency dressed as a carrier.

Ten minutes later police knocked on his door with a search warrant and found the cocaine in Hobson's shaving kit.

Carlin said Hobson opened the envelope to find a magazine inside with a small packet of cocaine taped in between the pages. The two-gram packet, known as an eight-ball, is worth about $120 on the street.

"They were not investigating Butch at all and I think they were surprised it was him because the name on the letter was different," Carlin said.

The letter was addressed to Clell Hobson, his real name. When asked why Hobson had placed the cocaine in his shaving kit, Carlin said he was preparing to leave the room and did

Protest over waste continues in Germany

GORLEBEN, Germany — Riot police battled back more than 3,000 protesters and cleared burning roadblocks Wednesday for a truck bringing nuclear waste to a storage site.

More than 30 people were injured as police used truncheons, tear gas and water cannon to keep demonstrators at bay. Many protesters hurled rocks and bottles with slingshots and set wood and hay ablaze on the road. One fired a starter pistol at a police helicopter.

The transport provided a focal point for German foes of the government's nuclear power program. Juergen Trittin, a member of Parliament from Germany's Greens party, charged the police action was part of "the brutal methods of the nuclear state."

Slowed by the clashes, the flatbed truck took six hours for the 11-mile final leg of the transport from France. The nuclear waste container was unloaded from a train at dawn to be trucked to the storage site at Gorleben in northeastern Germany.

About 15,000 police officers protected the shipment on its two-day trip through Germany from a reprocessing plant in La Hague, France, including 3,000 on the road from the Dannenberg train station to Gorleben.

Retail pharmacies may get discounts

CHICAGO — Retail pharmacies could get discounts on prescription medicines just like HMOs under a revised settlement of a price-fixing lawsuit that received a judge's preliminary approval on Wednesday.

While it is uncertain how the deal would affect consumers, one possible outcome is a system in which pharmacies mimic HMOs, banding together to provide discount drug benefits programs, some industry experts predicted.

Here's where the new frontier is," said David Melnick, an attorney who represented pharmacies in the price-fixing lawsuit against drug manufacturers.

Melnick predicted that pharmacies will offer benefits programs to insurance companies and major employers that insure themselves and want the convenience of a maximum number of retail outlets.

That could qualify the druggists for discounts from the pharmaceutical manufacturers, as agreed to in the lawsuit settlement.

Melnick helped broker the new deal with the drug manufacturers when U.S. District Judge Charles Kocoras rejected a $408.9 million settlement last month because it didn't address discounting practices.

The new deal would pay the druggists $351.3 million, the decrease due in part to the refusal of Ciby-Geigy Corp. and Abbott Laboratories to go along with 11 other defendants in the new deal.

ALANA students storm CAO

By Lisa Chiu and Michael Elliott
Collegian Staff

African American, Latin American, Asian American and Native American students embraced, in a show of unity amongst the ALANA community, at the end of an approximately 13 hour non-violent student takeover of the Campus Activities Office came to a close in the early hours of this morning.

ALANA students were protesting the Student Government Association's (SGA) final year 1997 student activities budget, approved last week, by the undergraduate student senate.

Specifically, the ALANA coalition took exception to the senate's allocations for AHORA, the Black Mass Communications Project (BMCP), New WORLD Theatre, and the ALANA reserve account.

"The bottom line is that we don't feel like we have been respected. Yesterday, we attempted to talk with the Ways and Means committee to work it out, and we were told that we didn't matter," said David Nuñez. "That left us with few options."

Nuñez was making reference to a meeting held yesterday with SGA, in which the ALANA coalition brought forth concerns they had with the budget, citing decreases from last year's allocations for several ALANA RSOs. Additionally, ALANA students said that the entire budget process had worked against them from the beginning.

According to a statement released by the group prior to the takeover, "We struggle with the SGA every year to get funding that will provide cultural and educational programs and events that enriches the lives of students. It's not just about funding, its about respect and survival."

The statement included a list of three demands

Rally against festival disrupted by students

By Daniel Sullivan
Collegian Staff

About 25 students disrupted a rally in front of the Student Union, held yesterday by the Silent Majority and the Young Americans for Freedom in opposition to today's Queer Festival.

Speaker Phil Milson, President of the University of Massachusetts Republican Club, told the crowd of over 100 onlookers that homosexuality was morally wrong.

"Whether or not you believe it, homosexuality is wrong," Milson said. "It is a disease that is spreading like wildfire."

People attending the rally said they supported the speakers' First Amendment right to talk, but disagreed with the message.

"Free speech is never a threat," said Terri Nelson, the organizer of Queer Fest. "Everyone has the right to speak. Hopefully they will come to our rally and learn. If they are not, they are missing the whole college experience."

Milson stated that over 80 percent of Americans think that sexual relations between members of the same sex is morally wrong. The reason for this opinion is due to biological reasons, he said.

"AIDS is predominantly a gay disease," Milson said. "It is now infiltrating the heterosexual world, and if that doesn't outrage you, then wake up!"

A few students yelled at Milson during his speech. Some students disagreed with the facts given during the rally.

"I think this is ridiculous," said Dana Smith, a junior political science student. "Maybe if they get the facts straight, then they should talk."

Paul Ferro, another speaker at the rally, was pleased with the turnout of about 100 people. Most students learned of the event only after seeing the commotion.

"We didn't do much advertisements because of the thought police who tend to tear flyers down," Ferro said. "We are here to support traditional American values."

Lesbian, Bisexual and Gay Political Chair Ashavon Doyon attended the rally in support of free speech. He was watching the event for informational reasons.

"We may not like what they are saying, but they have a right to say it," Doyon said. "We try not to protest because we don't want one of our rallies protested."

Milson charged that homosexuality should not be acceptable because of its "deviancy." He urged people to avoid today's rally.

"You will witness, whether you want to or not, a celebration of this sickeningly outrageous lifestyle," Milson said. "They will claim to pride themselves on being deviants."

The turnout was attributed to voyeurism, according to Student Government Association Senator Sean Loughran. The speakers were contradicting themselves because they were using their freedom of speech, but refused to allow people to choose their sexuality, he said.

"They are evil," Loughran said. "The majority of students are laughing, not listening."

The decline of American values is attributed to homosexuality, according to Ferro. He seized the microphone to tell people of the alleged decline in morality.

"We see a lowering of societal standards or decency," Ferro said. "Allowing any form of social deviancy to be accepted as just another alternative lifestyle."

SGA votes on revised budget

ALANA students satisfied with reallocation of funding

By Michael Elliott
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association (SGA) Senate passed the final parts of the student activities FY '97 budget at their meeting Wednesday night, bringing a end to a tense stand-off with ALANA students, who were simultaneously occupying the Campus Activities Office in the Student Union Building.

Representatives of the ALANA community and SGA officials had been meeting throughout the day to discuss how the final $49,000 of the Student Activities Trust Fund (SATF) should be allocated.

Sen. Jeff Coker, chair of the Ways and Means committee, maintained that the recommendations forwarded by committee should be passed without amendments.

"Not all of us can have our own way," Coker said, emphasizing that he felt the committee had treated the concerns of the ALANA community fairly.

Many, however, did not agree. Dan Lizana, president of the Black Student Association, and David Nuñez, a former SGA President, said that the committee did not reflect any serious concern for ALANA issues in their budget proposal. Both were active in organization of the take-over of CAO.

ALANA students had asked that AHORA, a Registered Student Organization (RSO) for Latino students, be funding at $10,000, as opposed to the $8,000 which was recommended. Additionally, a request was made to raise the ALANA reserve account to $10,000. These funds will be used to finance ALANA RSO events next year. Lastly, the group asked the SGA to consider the constitutional gap which does not clarify the difference between a RSO and student agency. The classification has significant funding implications.

"It's urgent for AHORA and for the ALANA reserve to get increases to help out ALANA students," Speaker Dan Castellano said, who had been negotiating with students in CAO since the early afternoon.

SGA President Maurice Caston urged the Senate to revise the budget to meet the demands of the ALANA students.

"CAO is the heart of the student activities operation. If the heart stops, the rest of the students will feel it. The ALANA students have been feeling it for a long time," Caston said. "They are up there because of us. We have to listen to them."

Some senators, however, said that to accommodate the CAO take over demands, would establish a dangerous precedent.

"By taking over an office, you can get more money — that's the precedent which has been set," Sen. Bill Ramsey said, who resigned his Senate seat following the meeting.

Despite such protests, the SGA voted to amend the budget to accommodate the increases for ALANA

Alleged war criminal case continues

By Ed Golden
Associated Press

BOSTON — Federal prosecutors Wednesday presented documents they said would prove that the former police chief in Vilnius, Lithuania participated in the killing of Jews during World War II and should be stripped of his U.S. citizenship.

But the attorney for Aleksandras Lileikis told a U.S. District Court judge that the government was relying on a few documents that only had his client's signature, and failed to prove that he did nothing more than sign orders.

Lileikis, 88, was not in court as U.S. District Judge Richard Stearns heard arguments on a summary judgement that would revoke the Norwood man's U.S. citizenship and allow him to be deported. Stearns took the case under advisement.

As the accused supervisor of the Lithuanian secret police, Lileikis is suspected of signing over control of many Jews to the Nazis knowing that they would ultimately be executed, usually by gunfire in killing pits located in the Panerai woods near Vilnius.

William H. Kenety, of the Justice Department's Office of Special Investigations, presented records showing how Lileikis had signed the death orders for a number of Jews, including Gitta Kaplan, and her 6-year-old daughter, Fruma, on Dec. 22, 1941.

Their cards, complete with a mark showing that the two had been "treated in accordance with orders," were among those recovered from the Lithuanian Central State Archives.

"Handwriting experts have verified that Lileikis had signed the death warrants," Kenety said.

But Lileikis' attorney, John Carroll, told Stearns the government had failed to prove that his client had, in fact, participated in the extermination of Jews. He argued that Lileikis was not powerful enough to carry out duties performed by German authorities in a complicated administrative system.

"What was the state of mind of Aleksandras Lileikis when he signed the orders of transfer? Was he deciding it, or was he only following German command orders?" Carroll asked.

When he submitted to questions by the U.S. attorney's office, Lileikis continually invoked his Fifth Amendment rights against self-incrimination. But Stearns has since ruled that amounted to an admission of guilt.

In urging the judge to reject the current government claims against his client, Carroll also pointed out that Lileikis had outlined his war record when he applied for admission into the United States after the war.

He said that the government had ample time to find any information it needed between 1949, when Lileikis first applied for U.S. entrance, until 1955, when he was finally allowed in under a special act approved in 1953.

"The government knew what it was getting," Carroll said. "Today, they are asking you to accept that these people (in the 1950s) are crazy."

New S. African constitution applauded

By Alexandra Zavis
Associated Press

CAPE TOWN, South Africa — Cheering delegates leaped to their feet to dance and sing Wednesday, as South Africa took another step from apartheid to democracy by adopting a constitution that guarantees equal rights for blacks and whites.

But the euphoria of the document's authors was tarnished by boycotts and abstentions by Zulu and Afrikaner nationalists, and threatened court challenges by the country's last apartheid rulers.

The white-led National Party also hinted it might pull out of Nelson Mandela's unity government, a prospect that caused the rand currency to drop 12 cents against the U.S. dollar.

After two years of acrimonious debate, the Constitutional Assembly that drafted the 150-page document voted 421-2 with 10 abstentions Wednesday to pass it. At the vote, delegates celebrated in the parliament chamber where apartheid laws once were passed.

The document replaces an interim constitution negotiated by most of South Africa's political parties that took effect with the April 1994 multirace election that brought Mandela's African National Congress party to power.

ANC leaders called Wednesday's constitution a birth certificate for democracy in South Africa.

"It is a firm assertion made by ourselves that South Africa belongs to all who live in it, black and white," said Deputy President Thabo Mbeki.

However, Zulu nationalists boycotted Wednesday's historic vote and Afrikaner nationalists abstained. More extremist whites rejected the document, and the National Party and others threatened court challenges to some provisions.

Such developments dampened what was otherwise a day of victory for Mandela's ANC party two years after winning the nation's first all-race election.

"Never and never again shall the laws of our land rend our people apart or legalize their oppression and repression," Mandela said in a celebratory speech. "I would like everybody to think in terms of their country as a whole, black and white."

The constitution will take effect gradually over the next three years, then come into force fully with the next national elections in 1999. It still must be certified by the Constitutional Court, which operates like the U.S. Supreme Court in interpreting the constitution.

The document calls for a majority-rule government, with a party that wins more than half the seats in Parliament having the power to choose a president, who would form the Cabinet. The interim constitution required Mandela to give Cabinet jobs to parties that received at least 10 percent of the vote in the 1994 election.

A bill of rights guarantees the right to adequate housing, food, water, education and health care — all of which were denied the black majority during the apartheid era. It also bans discrimination on the basis of race, gender, sexual orientation, age, pregnancy or marital status.

Despite the overwhelming support, parties that joined the ANC in backing the new constitution expressed reservations that it gave too much power to the governing party.

Deputy President F. W. de Klerk, the National Party leader and last apartheid president, called the lack of guaranteed powers for minority parties a major problem.

"We have placed the positives and the negatives on the scale and we have decided the positives outweigh the negatives and that is why ... we are voting in favor of this constitution," de Klerk said.

relating to budgetary and constitutional issues. First, the group asked for a $5,000 increase to the ALANA reserves, bringing the account's total to $10,000. These funds will be allocated by the ALANA senate caucus committee for programming events next year.

Secondly, the group demanded that all ALANA RSOs whom were not allocated the same amount as last year be level funded.

"All groups should be level funded, they [SGA] have a different definition of level funding, it is not what was recommended [last year] but what was given, this is an insult to our intelligence," Juan Mejia said.

At last years budget meeting a coalition of students, which included those from both the ALANA and greek communities, successfully passed a 10,000 cut from the University Productions and Concerts (UPC) budget, to the benefit of their respected organizations.

The composition of this senate was later ruled unconstitutional by the student judiciary due to its over- representation of Greek Area senators. Therefore it was the judgement of this year's Ways and Means committee that level funding will be calculated without including the increases and decreases made on the senate floor.

For example, the FY '96 budget for AHORA was $10,000. However, the initial recommendation from the Ways and Means committee was only $8,000. The additional $2,000 was acquired from the UPC cut. It was the opinion of this year's committee that this cut was not legitimate, and that $8,000 would be the figure used to determine level funding.

"We worked entirely within the process, nothing that happened last year was completely legal," Nuñez said, who felt that the reallocation of moneys made on the senate floor each year was a democratic and fair process, and not in violation of any senate bylaws.

The final demand from the coalition was the creation of clear guidelines for how the Ways and Means committee defines RSOs and agencies. They also demanded a set criteria for each in which money is allocated.

"We don't want interpretations, we want guidelines and policies," said Dan Lizana, president of the Black Student Union, referring to the vagueness of the current definitions.

"All or Nothing," was the group's motto. Members of the student takeover expressed anger over failed tries by individuals from the ALANA community to "work within the system."

"We're not leaving until we get what we want," said Nuñez.

At approximately 12:40 this morning, the undergraduate student senate, after lengthy deliberations passed a set of motions which fulfilled all of the demands requested by the coalition.

Upon hearing the results of the senate meeting, the students inside the Campus Activities office shouted and cheered expressing relief and joy at the outcome. Many left for home, thus ending a peaceful non-violent takeover, with approximately 200 participants.

Cleveland school system to end 20 years of court-ordered busing

By Lisa Cornwell
Associated Press

CLEVELAND — A federal judge lifted part of a desegregation order Wednesday, ending nearly two decades of court-ordered busing in Cleveland's school system.

U.S. Senior Circuit Judge Robert H. Krupansky found that Ohio's biggest school district had followed a plan that was supposed to achieve racial balance, largely through cross-town busing.

The district's compliance, he wrote, "stands as an unequivocal manifestation of their good-faith efforts to desegregate the Cleveland school district."

James Hardiman, the lawyer for the group of black students and their parents who sued the district in 1973, said he had not seen the ruling yet.

"If what I have heard is true and it ends the court-ordered desegregation, then we will be appealing the ruling," Hardiman said. "This isn't unexpected, but it is disappointing if the court has sanctioned segregation."

Rick Ellis, spokesman for the 72,000-student school district, said the ruling will give the district more flexibility in assigning students to schools, beginning with the upcoming school year.

He said the district still intends to maintain racial balance. He said he also expects busing to continue because students probably will choose schools away from their homes.

"Clearly more parents will have choice, and that's what more parents wanted — a choice on where to send their children," Ellis said. "To that extent, busing will continue."

Ellis said the district must still comply with other parts of the court ruling, including orders to achieve financial stability and improve student performance. In 1995, the court placed the district under state control because the schools were struggling financially.

groups.

The additional funding required that the money set aside in the budget for a new WMUA transmitter, be reduced from $30,000 to $26,500.

WMUA General Manager, Brad Davidson, however, was in support of the cut, despite the fact that he said the transmitter is close to falling into complete disrepair.

Without a replacement, which can cost in excess of $60,000, WMUA will be effectively shut down.

"Anyone who says that peaceful sit-ins set a dangerous precedent are ridiculous and know nothing about oppressed people and the Civil Rights Movement," Davidson said. "A transmitter can only turn it on, but ALANA [students] keep it going. I feel that it is very important to fund these groups."

The $4,500, however, was later restored in a motion introduced by Sen. Larry Plano. These additional funds will be drawn from the SGA long-term reserve account.

"It is our responsibility to help WMUA in whatever way we can," Plano said.

Additionally, Plano introduced legislation to amend the SGA Constitution which would establish criteria for RSO and student agent classification.

Members of AHORA were especially pleased with the account of the budget vote.

"Next year will be our 25th year. This funding was essential," AHORA President Juan Mejia said.

The passage of the revised budget ended the stand-off one building over in the CAO office. Students on both sides of the issues expressed relief at the outcome.

Nevertheless, Lizana said that in the future, he hopes ALANA students will not feel as if civil disobedience is the only practical method of making their voices heard.

"We had to go and protest," Lizana said. "The process never works with us."

In other matters, the Senate elected Brian Tirrell and Nathan Peyton to the office of Speaker and Associate Speaker, respectively.

Castellano, Student Trustee Dan Rivera and Student Coordinator of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy Michael Hass, all delivered their farewell addresses to the senate.

Clinton prepared for possible gasoline tax rollback

By H. Josef Hebert
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Clinton is ready to go along with a gasoline tax rollback, but Democratic and Republican lawmakers still can't agree on how to make it happen. Some economists doubt the savings will be passed along to motorists anyway.

However, with soaring pump prices generating election-year heat, a key House committee today was ready to vote on temporarily repealing a 4.3 cent gasoline surcharge that was imposed three years ago as part of a Clinton deficit-reduction package.

In the Senate, the issue continued to be bogged down in squabbling over whether the tax should be linked to a proposal increasing the federal minimum wage.

On Wednesday, Clinton said he would agree to the temporary tax repeal, but would sign the bill only if he also got from Congress separate legislation increasing the $4.25 minimum wage. And he said both bills must be without added, unrelated provisions — which he called "poison pills" — that would force a presidential veto.

"I am offering a way to break the logjam," Clinton declared at a White House news conference.

The 4.3 cent surcharge was enacted in 1993 without a single GOP vote. Under the GOP rollback proposal, the tax would be lifted through the end of the year. A permanent cut in the tax would be taken up later.

Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., who had brought the gasoline tax issue into the spotlight when he called for a rollback two weeks ago, said he might offer separate bills. But Senate Democrats said they still wanted to have the opportunity to offer amendments, so the Senate stalemate showed no sign of being resolved immediately.

Meanwhile, some economists told lawmakers that the tax savings might never make it to the nation's gas pumps and have little real impact on prices as long as gasoline supplies remain tight because of summer driving demand.

Gasoline prices have soared by 20 cents or more a gallon since February and eclipsed $2 a gallon in some areas such as California.

"I don't think you'll see it," Philip Verleger, an oil industry analyst for Charles River Associates, told a House Commerce subcommittee Wednesday when asked whether a tax cut would mean a price reduction.

Verleger said market forces, especially summer demand and tight supplies, will dictate whether refiners and retailers pass on the savings. "It's not going to get reflected in the retail price, certainly not until after Labor Day," he predicted.

Some final words before I go...

Erin Barnes

Louisa May Alcott once said that "Far away there in the sunshine are my highest aspirations. I may not reach them, but I can look up and see their beauty, believe in them, and try to follow where they lead." I know someone who has a dream, and may rightly achieve a sense of accomplishment before too long. Unfortunately, this same person has lost sight of the beauty inherent in the present. He believes that life is ugly until it hands him a slice of pie on a silver platter. In particular, graduation means nothing unless you have something waiting for you the next day. To him, the event is stupid and insignificant — a four-year waste of time.

I couldn't disagree more. It's unfortunate when people don't realize the true gift that education has to offer. Graduation is not only a milestone, but also a stepping-stone to our future endeavors and accomplishments. It marks the close of four years of struggle and sacrifice, of changing relationships and differing values. For me, it meant the decision to move two thousand miles away from home, and incur financial debts beyond belief — all for the sake of the happiness I feel now. Despite the personal changes that occurred as a result of my decision to attend UMass, reflecting on all of it now, I wouldn't have changed a thing.

As I see it, I am one of the lucky ones who was afforded the opportunity to attend college. When I got frustrated with my work load or busy schedule, I thought about the people who would have loved to have been in my position. Through my experiences at the University, I have been enriched by the courses I have taken, the discussions that have been fostered, and most importantly, by the people whose lives have touched me in ways I will never forget — too many, in fact to list in one small column.

With graduation around the corner, I look back at my four years as a special and fortunate time of my life. During this period, I have seen acquaintances come and go, and I have witnessed first-hand the evolution of timeless friendships that shall always be remembered. While I have lost touch with some people, I have become closer to others. My parents remind me to hold on to these relationships. " for they are the friends you will have the rest of your life." As peers and companions, we have comforted each other through times of lost hope, broken hearts and broken promises. We have laughed and cried together, shared our deepest thoughts and fears, and never forgotten to dream. It is through these "ups and downs" that I have realized who my true friends are, as well as which relationships I will sustain into the future. I am confident that the friendships I have now will survive the test of time, not only past graduation day, but throughout all of the positive and negative challenges that life has to offer.

We hear time and time again that college represents a microcosm of the "real world." Given the immense opportunities available to us at UMass, as well as the number of diverse groups we are encouraged to embrace, we should, in the end, be happy with the types of people we have become. Unfortunately, no matter how "adult" our environment, some people will still insist upon behaving as children. In college, as in the "real world," there exist both kinds of individuals — those who are dishonest and deceitful, and those who work hard and show support and consideration. Such will be the case from grade school to grad school until we elect to bring out the good in one another. We are given an opportunity to do just that with the advent of graduation. As alumni, we should apply the insight, knowledge and interpersonal skills we have acquired through our college experiences to the challenges that lie ahead. Though we may have found certain aspects of University life to be silly or tedious, it would be a shame to forget all of the lessons we have learned. Moreover, we should realize that life is the best classroom, and our education shall continue to flourish as long as we allow it to do so.

Eleanor Roosevelt said that "The future belongs to those who believe in the beauty of their dreams." My life has definitely come full circle these past four years, and I couldn't be happier as graduation approaches. The memories I hold of UMass will assist me in my endeavors, and I hope to carry my ideas and values into the world and change it in a positive way. In looking back, I am thankful for the B.D.I.C. department, my academic advisor, and my diverse and penetrating courses. Most of all, I am thankful for and feel blessed by the coworkers, peers, faculty and friends I have met who assisted me in making my dream a reality. You will all be missed after graduation day, but you will certainly not be forgotten.

Pleased to meet you, Senator

Henry J. Brier

"Senator Simon, I have always admired your bowties," I said as we firmly gripped each other's right hand.

The scene was the Washington Hilton, in northwest Washington, D.C., a little more than a week ago. When approached, the Democrat from Illinois stopped walking, smiled and gave an ear as I introduced myself.

But he only stopped briefly.

This is a game that I have never before played, and I had to say something. I knew he would like, in order to hold his interest, so we could chat. Rubbing shoulders with politicians is not what I have done in the past.

During the days before this encounter, my time was spent gallivanting around the nation's capital. There is so much to see there, and in less than a week's time, it is not possible to see it all.

My first stop off the Metro, Washington's mode of public transportation, was McPherson Square, a site from which President Bill Clinton's home and office is a two-minute walk.

Seeing the White House with my own eyes and without the help of television or newspaper was not as monumental as I expected. Many other tourists stood and held on to the cast iron fence with both hands, gazing at the executive mansion.

What was almost as memorable, as a matter of fact, was the young men wearing Rollerblades and playing street hockey, right on the road next to the presidential mansion lawn.

Due south of Clinton's house, the Washington Monument is only a five-minute walk away. And then, due west is the long Reflecting Pool — walking to the Lincoln Memorial from there takes ten minutes.

This is where the Vietnam War protest in Forrest Gump was filmed.

Northeast of the Lincoln Memorial, no more than two minutes away, is the Vietnam Veterans' Memorial.

From the perspective I walked by and observed the memorial, the first name etched into the black marble is John H. Anderson, Jr.

After that, the soldiers' names increase to the point where there are literally thousands of names listed on the marble. Many people place a piece of paper over a name of a loved one, and with a charcoal pencil they color over the paper.

The emotion that this memorial evokes is complemented by the gathered veterans wearing uniforms, who add to the sullen atmosphere.

As stated, there are thousands of names listed. Seeing them all is impossible, and also overwhelming, which adds to the memorial's effect.

One name that did stick out, which is hardly a coincidence, was that of Henryk T. Sulatycki. He is not a relative, but the name caught my eye.

The last name listed on the black marble is Jessie C. Aiba.

In this city, there is so much to see, so the more pronounced and historically significant sites were visited.

From here, the United States Capitol Building is a 30 minute walk down Constitution Avenue, which is full of other governmental buildings, all of which look similar.

At the Capitol, one is free to walk on the grounds and climb the steps leading up to the building.

South of the Capitol, less than a minute away are both the Library of Congress and, right next to it, the United States Supreme Court. Unfortunately, the court was not open, as it would have been nice to walk in and look around.

Outside the court and etched into the building near the roof reads: "EQUAL JUSTICE UNDER LAW."

Someone, please tell the man living in Brentwood, Calif. what it says on this nation's highest courthouse.

At this point, all of the white domes and columns and fountains began to look the same, perhaps because of overload.

When shown on television, there is usually one building, not all of them together, like I experienced them.

That is why I asserted myself and walked up to United States Senator Paul Simon.

I had always seen him on television, and I honestly do enjoy his selection of neckwear, so I let him know.

But, my mistake was telling him that I was from the University of Massachusetts. Had I said that I lived in Chicago or that I studied at Northwestern University in Evanston, Ill., then perhaps he would have appreciated my compliment more, and spoken with me for a bit longer than 10 seconds.

Otherwise, he obviously could not have cared less about one of his many zealots, which to me was more entertaining than bothersome.

"Well," the politician enthusiastically said as he anxiously wrangled his hand free and began to walk away. "You're a good man!"

Some free advice

Andrew Bryce

Attention to all those returning to the University of Massachusetts in the fall of 1996 — Please cut this out and distribute to members of the freshman class.

This is an open letter to the Class of 2000. Since I have column space for the second to last time in my college career, I want to use it to help you freshmen. No advisor or tutor will be able to give you the free helpful advice I am about to give. It may sound foreign to you and you may scoff at it now. But read it. Keep it with you. Tack it on the wall. Put it in your desk. Refer to it. You'll be able to learn from the mistakes which I made in my four years.

Believe me, I've made a ton.

To the freshman class —

My four years at this fine institution are coming to a close in a few weeks. I learned so very much, whether I was sitting in class, typing in front of a computer, or swaying at a bar trying to talk to girls while in a cross-eyed, drunken haze. Regardless, wherever we go in this college town, we are right in the middle of a learning environment. It is here where we have the chance to develop our thought process.

Classes, extra-curricular activites and rounds of shots are all part of the experience. You'll make mistakes, but hopefully with my advice, you won't make as many as I did. Here's ten tips.

1. Take five classes a semester. Believe me, it's not that hard. And besides, if you screw up in one class, it's tough to get back into the flow. Next thing you know you'll be taking six classes in a semester. And try not to put off writing 17 papers for the last three weeks of the semester.

It was hell.

2. When you see those blood-sucking, commission-seeking credit card vultures in the campus center or on the Campus Pond grass, take the free stuff they give you and sign for the credit card. But get the machete ready, and when the card comes in the mail, cut it into little pieces. Right now, I seem like a popular guy since I get so many calls each day.

From credit card companies.

3. Don't bring your car. I know, when I didn't have a car here, I wanted one. But, I don't know if you have noticed, there are 23,000 people who attend UMass and about 13 parking spaces. If you want a cheap parking lot sticker, expect your calves to develop Arnold Schwarzenegger-style as you hike back to civilization. If you want a sticker for a parking lot somewhere near campus, don't cut those credit cards just yet because you just might max them out to buy this damn sticker.

And the parking garage? I'm up already at $4.90 with my '81 Olds.

Today alone.

4. Have fun boozing while it's cheap. I know, it sucks to have someone buying beer for you. Yes, it sucks that you're not 21. Yeah, it's the worst when you have to get someone who's 21 to carry the booze into your building. And yes, you're curious to see what uptown is like.

Trust me, though. Drinking with your friends at the dorm or at a house is the most fun time you'll have. It's cheap and it's a good excuse to drink Busch Light. For the case of beer you buy and get drunk on, I get two beers at a bar uptown for the same price.

And no buzz.

5. Don't work at a liquor store. My buddy does. He gets cocked at work. He wins a ton of money on scratch tickets.

Actually, that doesn't sound too bad.

6. Take advantage of Antonio's. To see my father come visit me is to realize he doesn't love me as much as two spinach slices. To see intoxicated people mow on slices after last call on weekends is to realize that Antonio's is a must when you got the munchies.

Once you go, you're hooked.

7. When you go food shopping, do not pay any attention to Scan Saver deals. I look into my cupboards nowadays and see nothing but 11 cans of string beans, which I bought some five months ago. Bring a list and keep your eyes on it.

8. Make sure you save change for laundry. I did, but not enough. But when all my other cash ran out, I invaded my pickle jar. Now, I have a pile of pennies and heaps of dirty clothes.

9. Realize that the Dining Commons is not that bad. Alright, some days, they serve shmeg. But there are enough things to choose from. And besides, you may never eat a true chicken puck again.

Almost brings a tear to my eye.

10. Remember three letters. When the letters G, P, and A get together, they form an important number which rates how well you did in school. The grade you get may not seem to harmful when you get it in this, your freshman year. The points may not be adding up to high just yet, since it's early. But that average somewhere down the road will be impossible to pull up to where you want to be. So get it done now. I mean, 2.5 is a cool number, but not for an overall GPA.

Well, so I heard.

So, take my advice for what it's worth. And also remember this — live it up. College is addictive. You'll love this place if you seize the opportunities and make the most out of it. And don't get too overwhelmed with the size. UMass is as big as you make it.

Now, if you'll excuse me, I have to go beg for a job.

Sincerely, Andrew Bryce

Letters to the Editor

Funds are being misdirected

To the editor:

I feel compelled to comment on two topics and welcome a response. On Monday, May 6, I witnessed the felling of the last tree in yellow lot #12. It was bulldozed in the process of paving the lot. I would like to note here that there is no legitimate reason to have killed that tree. I would also like to point out the following: The University is crying for lack of funds. Why then are we spending money on paving a lot that is perfectly functional as it is? Wouldn't those funds be better spent on repairing the dilapidated classrooms? If you disagree that the classrooms are dilapidated perhaps you should try finding a seat in Thompson 104 that is NOT broken, or Bartlett 65, or in Morrill etc. or try getting into a popular Gen. Ed. In order of priority surely these classrooms and the availability of a place in a class are more important than giving someone's brother-in-law the contract to plaster the campus with yet more asphalt! Of course red tape may be preventing the University from diverting funds to where they are actually needed, or it might be too awkward to return a kick-back from a contractor. If this is the case; at least request that the parking lot include trees in its plan. We all would appreciate being able to park in the shade of a tree on a hot day.

The second topic I would like to address is the role of campus police. Instead of hunting students down with radar guns, how about patrolling lots to protect our cars against vandalism and theft? The radar display of force last Friday morning was threatening and not a very positive use of funds. Students need protection from violent crime, not to be forcibly solicited for ticket revenue.

Summer Preview

Looking at the hot, steamy months in movies, fashion, music & more!

Floaty sundresses, hiphuggers highlight summertime chic

Tara MK Connelly

As the super sultry months of summer loom before us, tempting glimpses of 60 and 70-degree weather infuse itself among the last vestiges of spring showers and May flowers.

So what is the buzz in fashion? Style. Style. Style. It's cool comfort in classic chic with a touch of personal flair. Summer calls to mind, sand, straps and most importantly — sandals.

Shoes

Second only to a good fitting bathing suit (and most women are still searching for one), sandals have definite sex appeal. Stacked heels are a must on any style. Whether dark brown fishermens or slip-on mules, stacked heels give a person something to stand on and make great clunking noises for those wanting to make an entrance or sound like an elephant when coming down a staircase — your choice.

Sunglasses

Another warm weather must is sunglasses. They are a true reflection of one's personality. Think Jackie O or any athlete in Oakley. The key word in sunglasses (beside UVB and UVA protection) is wrap-around. Donna Karan, the queen of cool, has a delicious pair of oversized wrap-around in icy slate blue and Gucci has a daring collection in jet black and faux tortoise.

Pants

Although most people tend to bare their legs come summer winds, pants can still be a practical thing to purchase. Hip huggers that flair slightly at the ankle are a definite rage. Like most pants the front is flat (no pleats or darts please) and create a smooth line that elongate the leg. These pants come in a plethora of styles and materials (ones with lycra give a more smoother look). Wear them with a tee-shirt or a silk shirt, they are a sure wardrobe staple.

Also making a splash are wide leg pants in soft cotton and silk. They have the comfort of pajamas and the sleek look of the rich and leisurely. J. Crew has a fabulous pair in baby blue/gray and lavender.

Shirts

Tiny tees are still in, but so are sleeveless polos and finely knit vests. Everything hugs the upper body so be sure to keep that in mind when making a purchase. Bare mid-rifts accented with fine gold chains slung low around the hips or high to draw attention to the navel are also en vogue. Of course not everyone can wear them — you have to have a fairly long torso. But cropped shirts are optional and ones that cover creatively can be just as alluring.

Skirts

Like in spring, anything goes with skirts. Remember when everyone was wearing skorts? Those clever creations that were a hybrid of a skirt and shorts? Well keep them packed away, along with those hideous jellie shoes and butterfly collars! From knee to mid-thigh, skirts are more conservatively shaped with emphasis on old fashion demure lines that hint at sensuality rather than throw it in your face.

So all you people wiggling into short lycra tube skirts — stop, you're embarrassing yourself. However, if you have a tube skirt that's long, kudos to your ability to turn tack into taste. Need a designer? Think Calvin Klein or Versace.

Dresses

Flowery and floaty, sun dresses are one of the things men like most about summer. With thin spaghetti straps and swirling skirts, sundresses are just about the easiest thing to throw on in the morning for the office with heels, a picnic with sneakers or date with strappy sandals.

Of course there is the popular knit dresses that are polo shirt-inspired or wrap around dresses that hug a body and accent the waist. Bodices can have a plunging v-neck for the daring, a demure sweetheart shape for the shy and a square cut for the conservative. The emphasis in colors is still on pastels and madras plaids that Anna Sui uses for a preppy flair.

Demi does a striptease, Hunchback takes Notre Dame

Mike Burke

Here's the enigma: the horrendous weather we have been experiencing since December, forcing us to remain indoors with nothing to do except head to the theater to view an equally horrendous movie, is finally over. Now that the sky is blue, the breeze is warm and the sun is shining, some of the most appalling movies will be released, putting sun- loving cinephiles in a tough position. What to do? Well, here's the buzz on some of the biggest flicks that may actually tempt you to trade in your chaise lounge for a theater seat, and some that will make you run screaming for the beach.

Mission Impossible — How long have we been waiting for this one? It feels like eons. Tom Cruise is back, in his buff, brown-haired, Top Gun form, and looking better than ever. We will try to forget his nightmarish outing in Interview with the Vampire, as we gleefully run off to see Mission Impossible with the masses.

This TV-adapted suspense/action film, helmed by Carlito's Way director Brian De Palma, should be this summer's answer to the Batman phenomenon. Premiering the week of Memorial Day, it will initiate moviegoers into the mindless romp of action flicks due to come. Hopefully, it will leave us with a satisfied glow on our faces.

The Cable Guy — Two of the most annoying people in the world become one — the cable repair guy and Jim Carrey. If that idea doesn't make you flinch too much, just think of poor Matthew Broderick being the object of Carrey's torture, as he waits for his cable to be fixed. Interesting comic avenue; let's just hope the film won't deserve a new title: The Cable Movie.

Striptease — From Puritan to pole-dancer, the highest paid actress in Hollywood takes it all off this summer. Do we really need another stripper movie, you may ask? Well, even though The Scarlet Letter may not have demonstrated it, it's safe to say Demi Moore is a far better actress than Elizabeth Berkley — so there will be brains behind the boobs, this time.

Hopefully, there will be a plot, too. Moore is supposedly fighting for cash, so she starts stripping to get custody of her young daughter. Go figure. With crusty Burt Reynolds saddled in the supporting role, have a few hesitations.

Twister — Set to blow into theaters this weekend, Twister trailers have left audiences in dizzy anticipation for several months. Decent thespians Helen Hunt and Bill Paxton play a couple of crazy, tornado chasing scientists. We know Speed director Jan DeBont can inject some adrenaline, and the Jurassic Park special effects are frighteningly realistic, so even if the storyline sucks wind, it should still be an interesting trip.

Independence Day — How ominous it is to see a dark cloud hovering over Washington D.C. and the White House blown to bits? And on our nation's birthday, too! Teasing trailers seem to have already given Independence Day a bigger bark than its bite, and 1983's The Day After still seems eerier. Bill Pullman as President? Now that's a

From Dave Matthews to Kiss, summer concerts sizzle!

Summer is here and the musical sheds are lining up a full line-up of the best and worst acts of the past four decades from Kiss to Cheap Trick to REO Speedwagon to Hootie & the Blowfish.

The summer's lowest point falls on July 6 at the "Can't Stop Rock'n 1996" tour featuring the Hall of Shame acts REO Speedwagon, Foreigner and Peter Frampton.

Ultra-rock legends Kiss have scheduled three New England dates: July 28 at the Hartford Civic Center, July 30 at the Providence Civic Center and July 31 at the Boston Fleet Center. Full make-up is expected. Tickets are not on sale yet.

Although the rising ticket prices may scare away many potential show-goers, Great Woods has a packed summer ahead filled with all the arena-rock stars of the last four decades. Overall the line-up features a near identical list of last year's with the addition of a few has beens and few up- and-coming acts.

The only exceptional show of the lot is the multi-band "Smokin' Grooves" show with Cypress Hill, the Fugees, Tribe Called Quest, Spearhead, Ziggy Marley and the Tony Rich Project. Taking place on August 5, the six-band showcase may be the best tour in hip-hop history.

Three days later begins the much hyped Hootie & the Blowfish two night stand in Mansfield. On the heels of their new album, Fairweather Johnson, Hootie is on the road again, in their endless tour.

Hootie's closest peers, the Dave Matthews Band, with special guest Ben Harper take the stage on June 7.

Multi-band shows are the in-thing this summer with several featuring multiple headliners. Two Boston radio stations, WBCN and KISS 108, are sponsoring huge all-day events. For the 17th year, KISS 108 brings a slew of top 40 acts including Melissa Etheridge, Seal, Bryan Adams, Gloria Estefan, Joan Osborne, Lenny Kravitz, Lisa Loeb, Sophie B. Hawkins, Color Me Badd, Ziggy Marley and Harry Connick Jr to Great Woods. Tickets are pricey, escalating up to $150.

WBCN's second River Rave has a more alternative edge with Gin Blossoms, Presidents of the United States, Lenny Kravitz, Sonic Youth, Everclear, Cracker, Pulp, Stabbing Westward, Lush and more. Imagining the Gin Blossoms playing with Sonic Youth is quite scary.

In the aftermath of Jerry Garcia's death, the Furthur Festival will be a haven for Deadheads with Ratdog (featuring Bob Weir), Rob Wasserman, Matthew Kell, Johnnie Johnson, Mickey Hart's Mystery Box, Bruce Hornsby, Electric Hot Tuna and Los Lobos. The show is July 10.

A similar jamming festival rides into town as the Horde Festival '96 hits Great Woods on August 15. Blues Traveler headlines the show, Lenny Kravitz, Rusted Root, King Crimson and Son Volt are also performing.

Country music is well represented as well. Travis Tritt teams up with Marty Stuart, Diamond Rio and Patty

Quotes of Note

"I used to cut my friends' hair in college, especially when we had mid-terms and finals."
—Sharon Stone

"Yesterday a Florida court ruled that exotic dancers must cover one third of their buttocks. Now, if only they could pass the same law for the cable guy, we'd be in great shape."
—Conan O'Brien on "Late Night"

"I find a lot of what [Rush Limbaugh] says makes sense. Some of it's kind of elitist crap, though. As an entertainer, I consider him in the same realm as the American Wrestling Federation: a big, fat guy making people laugh."
—Dennis Miller

People and Pop Culture in the News

This material isn't anything useful, but it makes for some great ice breakers at various social functions. Try telling Great-aunt Bea at the family cook out:

Guess what? The divorce isn't final between Lisa Marie Presley and Michael Jackson. But rumor has it that Presley made a four-song demo tape and is shopping around for record labels. Oh goody.

Wanna know something else? James Woods and Nicollette Sheridan are might be a possible item. If you care about this news you might even go see her new film, Spy Hard.

Cyberbabe, Teri Hatcher will team up with husband, Jon Tenney in an up and coming episode of "Lois & Clark: The New Adventures of Superman." He gets to play a villain. The two are also children of physicists, which is how they met. Call it molecular attraction (groan, please).

Here's a big surprise: Stone Temple Pilots frontman Scott Weiland is back in rehab. He got turned in by his family and won't be able to open up for the Kiss Reunion tour — damn!

Another example of tough love comes from brat Macaulay Culkin who slapped his dad with a harassment report after his father allegedly slapped him. Whatever happened to pouting and not speaking at dinner? You know, if you rent The Good Son and My Girl, you can watch the brat bite it twice. Applause optional.

Whitney Houston isn't the only one waiting to exhale. Husband Bobby Brown has just been arrested for speeding and drunk driving. He was released on $1,260. Houston has made no comment, but she can't be happy.

Still awake Aunty Bea?

Actor Sean Penn finally married long time companion Robin Wright. The two have a girl, Dylan and a boy, Hopper. Hate to be him once kindergarten starts.

Gwyneth Paltrow was seen at a Pallbearer press conference sporting a diamond ring. When asked if it was from honey, Brad Pitt, she just said it was a gift. Sure.

Dweezil and Ahmet Zappa have a new album out. It's called Music for Pets and already has a video on MTV. It's a stupid infomercial type deal featuring VJ Kennedy and Cindy Crawford. Is life without Richard that bad, Cindy? Couldn't you have learned to share him with the Dali Lamma?

Tommy Boy and Black Sheep star, Chris Farley is doing another movie. In this one, Beverly Hills Ninja, he plays a martial artists turned private dick. He is currently trains for 90 minutes every other day to get in shape for the role. He can almost do full splits and can do cartwheels. Oh, and he hasn't lost any weight either. Go figure.

Material for this column has been compiled from various news and wire services by Tara MK Connelly.

Editors' Cuts

Album The Raincoats

This Tuesday the Raincoats release Looking in the Shadows, their first full length since 1984 when the legendary group disbanded. The Raincoats, who received an onslaught of underground media attention when Kurt Cobain mentioned the band in the linear notes to Incesticide, are considered by many to be one of the premier female-led punk bands. DGC, with persuasion by Cobain, reissued the Raincoats' classic self-titled debut in 1993, followed by the re-release of Odyshape and Moving. In 1994 original members Ana da Silva and Gina Birch played two shows and a Peel Session with Anne Wood on violin and Steve Shelley (Sonic Youth) on drums.

Silva recently described the band's importance: "Punk, together with feminist ideas, made us women feel the world could also be ours, that we also have something to say, and that it should be said and thus maybe make a difference."

Media Play may not stay open until midnight for this new release but it could be one of the best albums of the year.

Television Mission:Impossible

The Cold War might be over, but it's alive and well on FX. The cable channel reruns episodes "Mission: Impossible" every night at 6 p.m. The action flick from the late 60's features fearless and cunning undercover agents toppling dictators of communist regimes, snaring drug lords and disarming potentially devastating weapons.

The IMF team is lead by Peter Graves. The original cast included Greg Morris, Peter Lupo and Barbara Bain. The master of disguises was played by Martin Landau who recently won a best supporting actor award for his role as Bela Lugosi in Ed Wood.

Graves returned to star in a second "Mission: Impossible" in the 80's, featuring more sophisticated technology and a hipper and younger team members. The movie version, starring the ultimate man Tom Cruise, hits the screens in two weeks. With plenty of high-flying action and explosions, Mission: Impossible has the potential to enjoy the success of its television predecessors.

Health Work-Outs

Looking for a fun and painless way to lose those extra pounds gained this past winter? Bazaar magazine has a suggestion or two for those about to embark on that painfully defining ritual of looking for the "perfect" swimsuit.

Louis Garcia is a pro-roper. If you've never heard of a pro-roper, that doesn't matter. What matters is that his video "FreeStyle Roping" is a fun work-out minus the spandex and glitz that characterize so many of the work-out videos out on the market.

Garcia's step-by-step lessons are a powerful calorie burner, equivalent to running and that's before you factor into the advantages of an upper body exercise.

Not only does this video get you into shape, it also builds stamina and helps with agility and hand-eye coordination.

And you can't even use the excuse that you don't have time — the work-out is amazingly efficient and takes about 20 minutes.

Bathing suits

Saving the best for last, bathing suits suck. Yeah, you spend all that time indoors and then the sun begins to warm the Earth saying — hey isn't about time you bare some skin? Thank God for big tee-shirts! Anyway, bathing suits this summer are most definitely of the two piece kind. And they are small two pieces with string. Not many people can (or want) to reveal that much skin so give a cheer to J. Crew and their stunning one piece creations that come in a myriad of styles and colors. From racer back to spaghetti strap, long and short cut, J. Crew aims to please. They might be a little pricey, but they will last.

Fashion News

Have you taken a look at the magazines for May yet? Well, if you hate Nicki Taylor then avoid the magazine stands for a while is on just about every single cover there is her smiling face. Just in case you're wondering, when people go to get their teeth fixed, most clients ask their dentists for her smile. Yea.

Amber Valletta, who thankfully graces Bazaar's cover, is the new face of Elizabeth Arden now that Vendella decamped to Almay. Despite all the hype around Isabella Rosaillini leaving Lancôme, she is still being used to hawk their latest and greatest fragrance, Poême.

Also hawking fragrances is Josie Natori, know for making underwear and nightgowns that put Victoria Secret to shame. Her scent, Natori, is being produced by Avon who is making a concertive effort to catch the eye of a new generation.

Model Tyra Banks has moved on from director John Singleton and is now dating super singer Seal, and Halle Berry is still breaking up with David Justice. And for all of you out there looking for some fun summer reading, check out the Cosmopolitan all men issue.

I feel that this deserves to be ragged out because it's so damn cheesy. They list ways to get men, look at men, screw men and date men. Who needs Playgirl? This has enough centerfold material to make anyone blush — or laugh out loud.

"Samuel is a 33-year-old mountain climbing instructor who loves to message dates with olive oil and them roast them over an open flame" — just kidding. Actually it should read, "Samuel is a loser and ego-maniac because he could get a date in real life, he just enjoys the fan mail his picture will generate."

So slather on the SPF 15, remember to drink lots of water and enjoy the summer because unfortunately it doesn't last forever.

Summer books offer a wide variety

By Seema Gangatirkar
Collegian Staff

Summer is a great time to catch up on all the reading you've missed over the last semester and this summer promises offerings from Steve Perry, Danielle Steel, Judith Krantz and Mary Higgins Clark.

Mary Higgins Clark has earned a reputation as one of the foremost suspense novelists in America today. Her past books include Let Me Call You Sweetheart and All Around Town.

Her latest, Moonlight Becomes You, is set in the proud and elegant town of Newport, Rhode Island. Maggie Holloway is a successful fashion photographer. When she goes with a date to a family reunion, she unexpectedly meets her former stepmother, Nuala Moore.

Thrilled with the reunion, Nuala promptly invites Maggie to come to Newport and meet her friends. Unfortunately, before Maggie can get there, Nuala dies. Before she died though, Nuala changed her will and leaves her charming Victorian home for Maggie. The only stipulation is that Maggie visit Nuala's old friend, Greta Shipley.

But as Greta and Maggie visit Nuala's grave, Maggie realizes that there is something horribly wrong and that Nuala's killing was not at all random. Then Greta is found dead and Maggie begins a search into the past to discover the connection between Nuala and Greta and two other women who were also brutally murdered.

Clark's previous novels have shown that she knows how to write a good suspense story. The best thing about Clark is that she gets better with every novel. As proof of Clark's storytelling ability, Moonlight Becomes You currently tops the best-sellers' list.

Danielle Steele makes her 37th foray into the world of cheesy fiction with Malice. Her previous novels, which include Lightning and Heartbeat, all deal with a contemporary issue. Malice is no different as Steele serves up a

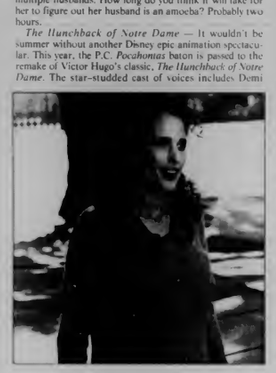
Multiplicity — Michael Keaton gets to do what all overworked, overstressed Americans wish they could do: clone himself. Andie MacDowell stars as the wife with the multiple husbands. How long do you think it will take for her to figure out her husband is an amoeba? Probably two hours.

The Hunchback of Notre Dame — It wouldn't be summer without another Disney epic animation spectacular. This year, the P.C. Pocahontas baton is passed to the remake of Victor Hugo's classic, The Hunchback of Notre Dame. The star-studded cast of voices includes Demi Moore, Kevin Kline and Jason Alexander. A creative concept, but the ugly hunchback may scare small children.



COURTESY STEPHEN VAUGHAN

Andie MacDowell has to deal with multiple Michael Keatons in Multiplicity.

The Rock — Featuring the star-studded line-up of Nicholas Cage, Sean Connery and Ed Harris, The Rock is a mesh of Escape from Alcatraz and Silence of the Lambs.

Cage plays a scientist who turns in his beakers and test tubes for guns and ammo while Connery plays a vicious convict who is recruited for his know-how to try to thwart an attempted escape from Alcatraz. Michael Bad Boys Bay directs.

The Nutty Professor — Eddie Murphy stars in this remake of the Jerry Lewis "classic." This adaptation strays away from the Dr. Jekyl/Mr. Hyde blueprint, instead having Murphy as a extremely obese Professor who finds a formula to make him skinny. The formula is not perfected, though, and Murphy sporactically goes in and out of his chubby state -- a whimsical lark for all.

This big-budget murph-o-rama should put Murphy back into the hearts of millions. But hopefully it won't, so eventually he'll have to shed his non-threatening image and return to the foul-mouthed humor that made him famous in the first place.

Courage Under Fire — "Finally a movie that tells the truth about Desert Storm." What everyone's been waiting for, huh? Over-dramatic director Edward Zwick that made the overrated Glory (sans Denzel Washington's performance) and the over-appreciated Legends of the Fall heads Courage Under Fire which undoubtedly is heading in that same direction.

Once again Zwick teams with Washington, who plays a Desert Storm officer who questions what he's fighting for. Meg Ryan and triumphant symphony music co-star.

The Arrival — A big-budget alien movie with Charlie Sheen... go see Independence Day.

Eraser — "Don't worry, you've been erased." Arnold Schwarzeneggar. What would the summer be without him? And what would he be without a dry, witty quote?

He plays a no holds barred mercenary (really?) who saves the lives of his employers by completing eradicating their past. Vanessa Williams, after satiating her singing and modeling career, takes a stab at acting as Arnie's client, who will inevitably end up in his arms. At least he is whipping ass again.

Last Man Standing — Once again America looks to Japan and its reigning cinematic forefather, Akira Kurasowa, for inspiration. Even Star Wars is based on a Kurasowa movie. Like A Fistful of Dollars and, to a lighter extent, Miller's Crossing before it, his film Yojimbo (The Bodyguard) is being remade for American audiences.

This time out Bruce Willis plays the "stranger with no name" who comes to a feuding town to wreck havoc on both sides. Veteran Walter Hill, maker of everything from 48 Hours to the ultra-hip The Warriors (which was somewhat recreated in Michael Jackson's "Beat It" video) directs. Co- stars include the likes of Christopher Walken who plays, believe it or not, an evil gangster and Bruce Dern as a crooked sheriff.

Stealing Beauty— Since his 1987 multi-Oscar winning The Last Emperor, Bernardo Bertolucci has made two big budget debacles with The Sheltering Sky and Little Buddha.

Well, this time out he cast Aero-babe Liv Tyler as a young American who travels to Italy on a soul-searching pilgrimage. Co-star Jeremy Irons just helps re-establish him as a first-rate international director.

The Frighteners — Peter Jackson, who started his career as New Zealand's campy gorefest king, proved his directorial talents with 1994's phenomenal Heavenly Creatures. Based on the true story of two teenage girls whose star-crossed love for each other leads them to matricide, the film earned Jackson a nomination for Best Original Screenplay.

With his latest film he returns to horror, frighteningly enough with fallen Canadian Michael J. Fox as its star. Produced by Robert Forrest Gump Zemeckis, The Frighteners is guaranteed to offer dark humor splattered with buckets of blood.

John Carpenter's Escape From L.A. — Fifteen years after cult favorite Escape from New York, John Carpenter and Kurt Russell return. The big-budget sequel has a lot to hold up to.

Bon Jovi will set out on a European tour this summer, as they were named "Best Band" by MTV Europe.

Life was so easy during the winter. Everyone kept their windows shut, blocking the outside world from hearing the draining sounds of Hootie. When people are slipping and sliding on the ice, they don't usually have their car windows open singing along to their favorite tunes. But now, May is here, and every Rage Against the Machine and Bob Marley fan insists on blaring their car radio as loud as possible. "No Woman, No Cry" should be subtitled "No Summer, No Song."

Walk down frat row and you are hit by a barrage of whiffle balls and Beastie Boy's songs. If you are lucky, at least one house is blasting Paul's Boutique, but be careful — don't interfere in their whiffle ball game.

Imagine if everyone in the world sat outside their houses on decrepit lawn chairs and old couches stolen from the town dump listening to the new Hootie album, hooting at all the ladies that pass their way? Almost as scary as REO Speedwagon re-entering the top 40.

Take a walk up Butterfield Terrace and — bang! — you have just entered the territory of the endless jam submerged in a cloud of smoke. Most people can read entire books in the same time it takes one of those silly "I wanna be phat like Phish" bands to finish half a song.

My great aunt's partial deafness is a blessing is disguise — she simply turns off her hearing aid when she doesn't want to hear something.

It's scary to think it is only May. Just wait until July and August when every window south of the North Pole is open trying to find that speck of a breeze. You probably won't find the breeze, but you are guaranteed to find lots of bad music you never want to hear again. Let's hope all those Def Leppard and Bon Jovi fans have air conditioning, because hot, humid days are bad enough without hearing "Love Bites" or "Make Love Like a Man" pouring through some loser's stereo. Get a life.

Then there is Jimmy Buffett, a longtime summer fave in New England. Who else could sell out Great Woods four nights in a row year after year? Surely not REO Speedwagon. Mr. Margueritaville is the equilvant of a cheesy summer beach party. Yeah it's fun while you're there, but once it is over, you are kind of ashamed that you played paddle ball for three hours straight. My friends have taken me to Buffett shows that were filled with fun, but I have a tough time bringing myself to listen to "Cheeseburger in Paradise" or "Fins" at home.

Last summer I won free tickets to the Buffett show at Great Woods. If you think you are loser, go to a Buffett show and see all the Parrotheads running around with inflatable sharks on their head. Your self-esteem will rise in seconds.

"You probably won't find the breeze, but you are guaranteed to find lots of bad music you never want to hear again. Let's hope all those Def Leppard and Bon Jovi fans have air conditioning because hot humid days are bad enough without hearing "Love Bites" or "Make Love Like a Man" pouring through some loser's stereo. Get a life."

Driving in the spring with your windows down can be a somewhat exhilarating experience, but if I am driving, I like to hear my stereo — not yours. It is funny, though, when I pull up at a red light listening to oldies or NPR in my larger-than-life 1984 Chevy Caprice, and a cool dude with sunglasses in a Monte Carlo or a Camaro blaring Dave Matthews looks over and laughs. Then the pimp car peels out speeding away, while I am left in the dust trying to catch up to the 35 mile per hour speed limit. My car may not have muscle or style or good fuel efficiency, but it does have a compass and a radio, though most people laugh because it doesn't have a tape player. Personally I think I am spoiled because there is an FM radio — a first for me.

Since I am not even sure if I have speakers in the back seat, I should fill my back seat, which is unbelievably large, with tons of speakers. Then I could make loops around Southwest blaring Ornette Coleman and Tortoise. See how those Bud-drinking Hootie fans like that. The chicks in thongs will just come running! What a fun summer it will be.

heroine unlike previous creations.

Grace Adams is a strikingly beautiful woman who was brutally attacked in a vicious crime. Despite pleas from friends to tell what happened, Grace remains curiously tight-lipped about the horrible secrets that have scarred her life.

The story takes place in a variety of locations, from an Illinois prison to a Chicago modeling agency and finally to New York City.

Grace volunteers at a battered women's shelter, helping women and children get through the trauma she knows so well. She also meets Charles MacKenzie, the man who promises her everything she's ever wanted.

Unfortunately, a vicious tabloid press is out to get Grace and she finds herself not only battling the secrets of the past, but also the malice of one person who is determined to destroy Grace at any costs.

Steel's fiction is the type that is light, fluffy and easy to swallow, but still a good time. Mallory is one of those types of novels, but when it comes to tackling the issues in a romantic novel genre, no one does it better than Steel.

Star Wars fans get the opportunity to read the story about what happened between The Empire Strikes Back and The Return of the Jedi in the newest addition to the popular saga. Steve Perry's Shadows of the Empire fills in the blanks, spinning an exciting adventure filled with intrigue, passion and deceit.

Xizor is the cunning warlord who seeks to displace Darth Vadar. Meanwhile, Leia is heartbroken because the man she loves, Han Solo, has been carbon-freezed by Darth Vadar. She enlists the aid of Luke Skywalker, who is studying to hone his skills with Ben Kenubi.

Luke puts together a team that includes Wedge Antilles and Lando Calrissian, while Leia finds herself in a dangerous passion play with Xizor, trying to do everything possible to get more information about Han.

The Star Wars series has grown enormously over the last few years and this one promises to be as action-packed and exciting as the previous novels.

Judith Krantz made her debut with the sizzling hot novel Scruples. Her latest, Spring Collection, takes place overseas in the romantic city of Paris.

The [illegible] with the news that [illegible] Lombardi, is going to pick three unknown American models to wear in his fashion show and win a contract of $12 million.

Frankie Semenov is the good friend of Justine Loring, a former model and owner of a modeling agency. Frankie is surprised when all three models picked are from Justine's agency. Justine then reveals that Jacques Wecker, the Swiss millionaire backing the show, is actually her father who left her mother high and dry years before.

Like all Krantz novels, this one promises to be filled with romance, intrigue and plenty of ambitions — the perfect novel for the beach.

Other novels worth checking out this summer include John Grisham's Runaway Jury and The Hundred Secret Senses by Amy Tan. Non-fiction possibilities include Christopher Darden's In Contempt and Hitler's Willing Executioners by Daniel Jonah Goldhagen.

~ TELEVISION ~

Tube offers slim pickings in the summer

By Seema Gangatirkar
Collegian Staff

Before you know it, May sweeps will be over and television will sink back into its annual rerun purgatory. You'll notice this, even as networks try to sugar-coat reality in the guise of various Disney specials and teasers in the form of "you can't miss this very special episode of (insert name of show here)."

This is all a very big hint to go outside and enjoy the sunshine doing whatever, but if circumstances do find you in front of the television, don't despair. There are cool things to watch, even if you do have to look really hard for them.

One of the newest cable networks, FX, is just plain cool. Not only does it use a snazzy New York City apartment as a studio, it also features a down-to-earth group of 20-something hosts.

FX differentiates itself from the myriad of cable stations by claiming to "make tv fresh daily." The station's line-up includes a slew of good guys versus bad guys in shows like "Wonder Woman," "Batman," "Mission:Impossible" and "The Fall Guy." Each hour features a different host tossing out interesting factoids about a particular episode.

If you've never watched Home Shopping Network for at least five minutes, you don't know what you're missing. Well, maybe you do, but HSN is entertaining for a bit, provided nothing else is on. The merchandise is hopelessly tacky and polyester and the hosts, who are doomed with sticky sweet voices, are also stricken with a serious case of perma-grin.

The best part comes when the network puts prospective buyers on the air and the conversations that ensue usually include at least six mentions of grandchildren and how helpful the new rhinestone studded pasta-maker is in the kitchen. If you're really lucky, you might be able to catch Vanna White or other pseudo-celebrities hawking their wares.

The thing about game shows is that they look the same no matter what time of the year it is. The cable stations have plenty of offerings. One of the best is "Shop 'Til You Drop" on Lifetime. In this game, contestants dash around a set designed as a mini-mall and perform stunts in order to win trips to tropical paradises.

"Swaps," has to be the most inane game show ever. It's the kind of game show that you wouldn't want anyone to know that you were ever on it. In "Swaps," former couples reunite and answer questions about their relationships that cover everything from artichokes to zippers. At the end of the game, individuals are given the choice of sticking with their ex-significant others or hooking up with one of the others on the show.

There's also lots and lots of made-for-tv movies out there. If "based on actual events" catches your ears and eyes, Lifetime leads the pack for this genre. You can see plenty of washed-up stars from the 70's and 80's making valiant comebacks in movies like "My Son the Murderer" and "Betrayed by Love."

Worse comes to worse, there are always talk shows. Donahue might have hung up his hat, but Ricki Lake is going strong and it's worth tuning in just to hear people with serious expressions admitting "I had an affair with my husband's boyfriend."

Then again, it might just be easier to throw your remote control away for the summer and pick it up when the new season starts in September.

Growing gardens through your TV set

By Lynn Elber
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — So how does your garden grow? If your silver bells are tidily in a row and your tomatoes are to die for, fine. But perhaps, like many of us struggling weed warriors, you need a little guidance.

Before thrusting your hands into that rich, well-mulched back yard soil (and it IS well-mulched, right?), you might want to take a TV break and get acquainted with the bumper crop of shows devoted to gardening.

From PBS perennial "The Victory Garden" to syndicated Martha Stewart to regional programs to cable's Home & Garden Television, or HGTV, there's something for every gardener, whether casual or committed.

The young HGTV isn't on all cable systems, and you have to root around a bit for the syndicated or local shows — they tend to air during the day or on weekends — but you'll hit pay dirt if you find them.

Beginners can learn the basics of soil preparation; the ambitious can discover how to create an exotic water garden. There even are garden show tours for those who simply want to stop and smell the roses.

(OK, stop and view the TV roses; same philosophy.)

Gardening is, after all, very hot: One 1995 study found that 78 million adults have gone back to the land, spending $50 billion annually on gardening and related items — making it a leading leisure-time activity.

By contrast, golf generates $15 billion yearly, according to a May 1995 Forbes magazine article on the burgeoning business of gardening.

It makes sense that gardening shows would flourish on television, says Bruce Asakawa, veteran landscape architect and co-host of "Over the Hedge," a new syndicated California program.

"TV is a visual medium, so we're able to show what we're talking about — diagnosing what's wrong with a problem plant, what an insect looks like, what the damage it causes looks like," Asakawa said.

Regional shows such as "Over the Hedge," which plans to expand to more Western states next year, have the advantage of being able to focus on plants and environmental problems specific to the area.

But "Victory Garden," now in its 21st year, airing at 12:30 p.m. EDT Saturday, is proof that a broader, national approach also works. HGTV expanded the idea: The year-old cable channel created a slate of programs, many original, with appeal regardless of a viewer's ZIP code or climate.

(About 25 percent of the channel's programs are garden-oriented; the rest tackle home improvement, interior design and crafts.)

A sampling of HGTV's garden shows: "A Gardener's Diary," with host Erica Glasener — a match for Martha in blonde chic — on the road in search of unique gardeners and their secrets; "Cityscapes," a how-to primer for urban gardening; and even "The Victory Garden," seen here, as well as on PBS.

There's also "Gardening by the Yard," how-to lessons from the knowledgeable and engaging Paul James. His sweaty enthusiasm (gardening is not for wimps) gives even the palest of green thumbs newfound vigor.

"No matter where you live, no matter what kind of soil you've got, you can improve that soil," James, a master gardener and pep squad for compost, says in one episode.

Be aware, he tells us, that soil is a living organism teeming with weed seeds, microscopic worms, spores and bacteria — "A veritable midtown Manhattan in miniature."

If you don't respect dirt and fertilizer after James' spiel, kick your seed catalogue addiction. Gardening just isn't your thing.

HGTV founder and president Ken Lowe, who has seen his channel steadily grow in audience and advertisers, tries to analyze why more people are finding that gardening is, in fact, the very thing.

Warnervision quits movies; drops suit

NEW YORK (AP) — Less than a week after suing Bo Derek for backing out of a pay-per-view movie in which they wanted her to portray a raging nymphomaniac, a Time Warner subsidiary said Tuesday that it is quitting the movie business.

Warnervision Entertainment has decided to stick to producing exercise and how-to videos, said spokeswoman Barbara Broglianti.

Warnervision had sued Derek last Wednesday in federal court in Manhattan, saying she reneged on a contract for a one-hour pay-per-view movie in which she was supposed to be naked at least 20 percent of the time.

The company dropped the lawsuit two days later after Derek gave the New York Post copies of memos from Warnervision executives asking her to portray a mental patient who engages in "raging uninhibited nymphomania" and lesbian sex.

Broglianti said the company has changed its management at Warnervision, a subsidiary of Time Warner's Atlantic Records Division.

"We are in a complicated transition period, ... An error occurred," she said. "The old regime didn't clear something with the new regime. The suit was filed. As soon as we found out about it, we moved immediately to correct it."

She said she apologized to the actress in a conversation with Derek's lawyer, Stephen Wainwright of Boston.

FTC wants Time Warner, Turner deal reworked

By Jeannine Aversa
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — Raising antitrust concerns, the staff of the Federal Trade Commission is recommending that the $7.5 billion proposed merger of Time Warner Inc. and Turner Broadcasting System Inc. be reworked.

The regulators' staff is concerned that the deal, which would create the world's largest media and entertainment company, would hurt competition by giving the merged company too much control over cable programming, attorneys close to the matter said Tuesday.

The objections are significant, "more than just posturing," said one of the attorneys, who spoke only on condition of anonymity.

Dow Jones News Service reported that the FTC staff was preparing a recommendation that the full commission block the deal. The Washington Post reported that the staff had reached a general consensus to either postpone the transaction or call for substantial changes.

Attorneys close to the proposed merger couldn't not confirm that.

The FTC would not comment on the reports.

The agency's commissioners ultimately have the power to reject or approve the merger announced last September.

Consumer groups, cable television competitors and telephone companies have asked the FTC to look closely at the cable programming issue. Opponents say the new Time Warner-Turner company could block rivals from carrying programs on cable, via satellite and over telephone lines.

The FTC also is concerned about provisions in the deal related to Tele-Communications Inc., the nation's largest cable company, attorneys said.

TCI now owns 21 percent of Turner. But the deal calls for TCI's stake to be reduced to about 9 percent and placed in a trust. Time Warner would get TCI's voting power.

In return, TCI would get numerous concessions, including long-term agreements to carry Turner cable networks at favorable rates and the right to buy Turner's interest in SportsSouth, a regional sports cable network, for $60 million.

Time Warner owns HBO, the most popular pay-TV channel. Turner owns CNN, TBS, TNT and Headline News, all among the 15 most widely distributed cable networks.

Time Warner Chairman Gerald Levin said last week he is confident the merger will go through and be completed by September.

TCI Senior Vice President Bob Thomson said TCI attorneys will have continuing conversations with the FTC in support of the deal.

"We do not believe that significant changes need to be made in the existing agreement," Thomson said. "Having said that, we believe the agreement will ultimately be approved."

Phone calls to Time Warner and Turner were not immediately returned.

Ilene Gotts, an antitrust attorney with the Washington law firm Foley & Lardner, said she wouldn't be surprised if FTC staff recommended blocking the deal.

Gotts said the case presents a number of complex issues involving concentration of ownership of the content the entertainment and programs produced by both companies and the concentration in the delivery of those programs to the homes through cable systems. She said the TCI piece also complicates the matter.

"What this case really raises for the first time is whether we go beyond pure economics" and analyze a proposed merger based on concentration of ownership, she said.

She predicted the FTC will have to confront more cases like this as media and telecommunications companies merge as a result of the telecommunications act reform.

"This is the tip of the iceberg," Gotts said

Fourth quarter blues for NY

By Rick Gano
Associated Press

CHICAGO — After two losses to the Chicago Bulls, frustrations have heightened for the New York Knicks.

Both times the Knicks came close; both times they collapsed in the fourth quarter.

"You can't let them get out and run in the fourth quarter of a close game," Knicks forward Anthony Mason said. "We had them where we wanted them and let it get away."

Call it great defense by the Bulls or call it poor execution by the Knicks, but Chicago has played best in the stretch.

In Game 1, the Knicks were within a point late in the fourth quarter but then couldn't make a field goal in the final five minutes.

Result: Bulls 91-84.

With both teams struggling offensively Tuesday night in Game 2, the Knicks trailed 61-59 with a quarter to go. Again they fell apart. The Bulls went on a 24-6 run and the Knicks missed all four field goal attempts in a 7 1/2 minute stretch that also saw them commit five turnovers.

Result: Bulls 91-80.

"We went in determined to move the ball around and take good shots, but it didn't really kick in until the fourth quarter. Then we finally broke them. We got some easy shots and made them," Bulls guard Steve Kerr said after Tuesday night's victory.

The Knicks have 37 turnovers in the two games, many in crucial situations, something they must address before Game 3 in Madison Square Garden on Saturday.

"They rely on you to turn the basketball over and they push the ball up the court to get their easy baskets. That's what happened in the fourth quarter. They got a lot of comfortable baskets and everything came extremely tough for us," Knicks guard Derek Harper said.

Patrick Ewing scored 44 points in the two games but has done little or nothing in the fourth quarter. He has only three points combined in the final period with only one basket in six attempts. Ewing's anger surfaced Tuesday night when he charged the Bulls bench after getting in a heated exchanged with Chicago assistant coach Jim Cleamons.

"During this time of the year tempers rise, words are said and some people are going to laugh and some people are going to cry," said the Bulls' Ron Harper, whose defense has limited Knicks guard John Starks to 16 points and two field goals.

"I think Patrick cried."

Ewing suggested the Bulls are getting help in the final stretches of games.

"They get away with everything," Ewing said. "Phil (Jackson) is crying to the refs every time down the court. It's in the ears of the officials and the calls start going the other way."

He's also determined the Knicks can get back in the series on their home floor.

"I'm very angry, we should have and could have won, but didn't. We just need to take better care of the ball," he said. "We feel we're capable of beating this team."

The Bulls, however, also can play better. They have not resembled the 72-10 team of the regular season. They've shot 38 percent and 40 percent in the two games, and only Michael Jordan points has been consistent, with 72 total points.

"It has been ugly basketball. But we're 2-0 and they're 0-2," Jordan said. "We anticipate them coming out ready to play Saturday. If we can withstand their early push and do a job of ball control and controlling continuity, we may put some negative thoughts in their mind."

Jazz aren't dwelling on loss

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — As far as the Utah Jazz are concerned, the semifinal playoff series with the San Antonio Spurs begins tonight.

If they dwell too long on their blowout victory over San Antonio in the series opener, the Jazz believe they could find themselves in trouble in Game 2 tonight.

"As far as I'm concerned, we lost that game," Jazz forward Antoine Carr said. "We've got another big game coming [tonight] and we need to be totally pumped up and focused on it."

The Jazz routed the Spurs 95-75 Tuesday as San Antonio lost the homecourt advantage and even drew boos from the Alamodome crowd as the best-of-seven series got under way.

"That one's over," said Utah's John Stockton. "It's out of our minds, out of our thoughts. We have to concentrate on playing our best basketball [tonight]."

Karl Malone scored 23 points and Stockton had 13 points and 10 assists for Utah, which was 1-3 against San Antonio in the regular season.

David Robinson, who led the Spurs with 29 points, said the Jazz outhustled the Spurs, keeping San Antonio from getting into its running game. Utah out rebounded San Antonio 45-36.

"The transition game comes directly from that defense, it comes directly from the rebounding," Robinson said. "So we have to want that ball a little bit more than they do when it comes off that board."

San Antonio coach Bob Hill said even though his team beat the Jazz three times during the regular season, Utah is a forceful team and his players should have acted like they knew it.

"We acted like we were shocked that they could play that well. I don't know how else to say it," Hill said. "Let's take a page from last year's series with Houston and let's learn from it."

The Spurs were ousted last year in the Western Conference finals by the NBA champion Rockets even though San Antonio had won the regular-season series.

Utah's backcourt dominated San Antonio's, as Stockton and Jeff Hornacek were a combined 12-for-22 from the field, compared with 4-for-19 for Vinny Del Negro and Avery Johnson of San Antonio. Del Negro was just 1-for-11 from the field and scored only three points. Johnson had only five assists, about half his regular-season average.

As a team, the Spurs shot just 42 percent.

Utah coach Jerry Sloan said the margin of victory had as much to do with the Spurs' missing shots as it did with the Jazz defense. The Spurs were out of sync, he said, predicting that wouldn't be the case in Game 2.

"They'll make those shots," Sloan said. "It'll be a totally different game."

NBA Fines Olajuwon $5,000

NEW YORK (AP) — Hakeem Olajuwon of the Houston Rockets was fined $5,000 by the NBA yesterday for elbowing Seattle's Detlef Schrempf in the back of the head during their playoff opener. The elbow came during the third quarter of last Saturday night's game, won by the Sonics 108-75.

Seattle won again Monday night, 105-101. The Sonics lead the two-time NBA champs 2-0 in the best of-7 series.

Holyfield in spotlight, Lennox Lewis on the spot

By Ed Schuyler Jr.
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Evander Holyfield might be in the spotlight, but it will be Lennox Lewis who will be on the spot Friday night at Madison Square Garden.

The 33-year-old Holyfield, a former undisputed champion, can keep alive his hopes of another title shot by beating Bobby Czyz in the main event on a card featuring three heavyweight bouts. Lewis, a 30-year-old former WBC champion from Britain, must beat Ray Mercer to get a fight this year against Tyson, who won the WBC title by stopping Frank Bruno of Britain in the third round.In the other fight, Tim Witherspoon, a former WBC-WBA champion, who has revived his career at age 37, will fight Jorge Luis Gonzalez, a native of Cuba.

"How can you look ahead when someone is in front of you," Lewis said in explaining that his only concern is Mercer.

Lewis, however, would have to be one cool customer not to be thinking about a fight against Tyson, which litigation apparently has gained him.

"I'd like to see if we can negotiate," Dino Duva, Lewis' promoter, said Wednesday at a news conference. "I hope so." Don King, Tyson's promoter, wants Tyson to challenge Bruce Seldon for the WBA title on June 15 before fighting Lewis, and he has said that if Tyson has to fight Lewis first, the champion would relinquish the WBC title.

"I'd have to hear that Tyson says he'd give up the title," Duva said. As for Lewis waiting for Tyson to fight Seldon, Duva said, "Anything is possible. We'll listen to all proposals, but right now Lennox wants to fight in July."

Lewis has won three straight fights since he lost the title when he was stopped in the second round by Oliver McCall on Sept. 24, 1994.

"That was the greatest thing to happen to me," Lewis said. "It helped me grow mentally and physically."

"I'm the best shape I've been in," the 35-year-old Mercer said. "When you're not in shape, you beat yourself."

Mercer, who was in shape when he lost a 10-round decision to Holyfield in his last fight on May 20, 1995, was not in condition when he lost a 12-round decision to Larry Holmes in 1992 and a 10-round decision to Jesse Ferguson in 1993. Both of those defeats cost him title shots.

Holyfield followed up the win over Mercer by being stopped in the eighth round by WBO champion Riddick Bowe last Nov. 4 in a fight that gave Bowe a 2-1 edge in their series.

"Each and every fight is important," Holyfield said. "I realize Bobby Czyz is a good fighter, but I look forward to being heavyweight champion of the world again."

"This is the heavyweight championship of the world for me," said the 34-year-old Czyz, a former IBF light heavyweight and WBA cruiserweight champion.

"I feel like I'm 20," said Witherspoon, WBC champion in 1984 and WBA champion in 1986, who has gotten himself back into the heavyweight picture by winning seven straight fights.

"Every great machine has a bad night," said the 31-year-old Gonzalez who was figuratively dismantled by Bowe in six rounds last June 17. He has won his only fight since.

The three fights will be televised by HBO beginning at 9 p.m. EDT.

Two Alabama football players lose eligibility

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — Two Alabama football players have lost their eligibility until they clear up tire loans guaranteed by a Crimson Tide fan, school officials confirmed yesterday.

The players, who school officials would not identify, still have outstanding balances of about $1,000 and $190 with Bojo's Mag Wheels and Accessories, the school and the NCAA said.

Both players participated in spring drills but will not be able to play this fall unless the loans are resolved, said Culpepper Clark, an aide to university president Roger Sayers.

Clark said "four or five" other Crimson Tide players also were declared ineligible by the school late last year because of their dealings with Bojo's.

The NCAA restored the eligibility of the other players as soon as the school asked in late November, Clark said, but enforcement officials are still looking into the actions of assistant athletic director Gerald Jack.

The Alabama football program already is on probation for three years because of unrelated violations. Athletic director Glen Tuckett said the university would not have to reappear before the Infractions Committee.

"We're fine. They're bringing it to a conclusion," he said. The Associated Press reported last August that Boyd Sutherland, owner of Bojo's, claimed he had sold thousands of dollars worth of merchandise to current and former Alabama football and basketball players on credit without being paid.

The university and the Southeastern Conference reopened probes into Sutherland's claims and their findings were forwarded to the NCAA.

Sutherland, a self-described "diehard Alabama fan" but never a student at the university, routinely guaranteed payments for players with finance companies so they would be approved for loans. Sutherland said he guaranteed loans for only "two or three" other customers during seven years in business.

The AP reviewed documents showing overdue debts ranging from $140 for a football player to $1,164 for a basketball star, both of whom have completed their eligibility at Alabama.

The NCAA announced the outcome of the case in its monthly newsletter. While the summary did not name the school, The Decatur Daily made the connection in a story yesterday and officials at Alabama confirmed that it involved Sutherland's dealings with players.

An NCAA summary of the case said the store owner allowed athletes to make financial arrangements for the purchase of wheels and tires based on their status with the team. The owner then promised to pay off their notes with financing companies if they became delinquent.

The NCAA said it already had restored the eligibility of an unspecified number of players.

"Eligibility (will be) restored for (players) with outstanding balances after they complete payments for their merchandise or obtain legitimate and permissible loans that are not guaranteed by merchant's business," said the summary.

Sutherland told AP he had repeatedly contacted Jack asking that the school make players repay their loans.

The NCAA summary said the assistant athletic director "violated institutional self-reporting procedures by failing to forward information he received to (the) institution's director of compliance, conference office or NCAA enforcement staff for review and consideration."

Sutherland could not be reached by telephone for comment.

Time needed to review Simpson's conduct

MORGANTOWN, W.Va. (AP) — West Virginia University's president says more time is needed to review the conduct of basketball player Greg Simpson before deciding on any further disciplinary action. Simpson, a reserve guard, faces a two-day jail sentence and a $200 fine on charges stemming from a hit-and-run accident. Coach Gale Catlett has suspended him from the team.

"Coach Catlett has asked for a few days, and I have granted that," David Hardesty said. "Image is an issue here, and I want to move swiftly, but students have some rights."

Simpson, 20, of Lima, Ohio, last Thursday was accused of driving away from an accident that he caused by trying to pass a string of cars last week. He turned himself in later the same day, police said.

He pleaded no contest to leaving the scene of an accident, driving with a suspended driver's license and crossing the center line.

"I don't condone such conduct," Hardesty said. "I don't think anyone here does."

However, "Often times things of this nature are understated or overstated," Hardesty said. "We want to make sure of what we have."

The accident was the latest in a string of violations for Simpson dating back to his days at Ohio State, where he was the Big Ten freshman of the year before transferring to WVU last season. In December he paid a $350 fine for driving without a valid license after being stopped in Cambridge, Ohio.

New GM wants improvement

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Brad Greenberg knows what he wants out of the Philadelphia 76ers next season. And he knows where's he's at now.

"This team has a long ways to go," said Greenberg, the former Portland Trail Blazers vice president of player personnel who returns to the NBA after taking a year off. He is the 76ers' new general manager and vice president of basketball operations. The 76ers were 18-64 last season, a better record than only the expansion Vancouver Grizzlies. And it wasn't an aberration: Philadelphia has lost successively more games in each of the last six seasons, a league record.

Some of the blame lies with former general manager and vice president of basketball operations John Lucas, who, as of now, retains his job as the team's coach.

"One of the first things I'm going to do is set up a time to talk with John Lucas," Greenberg said.

And some of the blames lies with former owner Harold Katz, who sold the team for a reported $125 million March 20 to a partnership owned by Comcast Corp., Philadelphia Flyers owner Ed Snider and new team president Pat Croce.

Regardless of who made the mess, Croce hired Greenberg to try to clean it up.

Croce lauded Greenberg's "intensity, his aggressive attitude and his passion, almost to the extent that I have, to bring a winner here to Philadelphia."

Greenberg, who has ties to Philadelphia dating back to his six-year tenure as an assistant coach at St. Joseph's, said he will rebuild with one overriding guideline: get high character players. "It's very difficult right now to build deep teams with a lot of talent, it's so spread out," he said. "So if you are committed to having a team deep with character, you are going to win your share of games."

Exactly where Derrick Coleman fits into that picture is not clear. Coleman, obtained from the New Jersey Nets last November in the trade for Shawn Bradley, is known for his churlish behavior and questionable work ethic.

Greenberg said Coleman, who played only 11 games with the 76ers last season because of a severely sprained ankle caused in part by his poor conditioning, has shown he can play at a high level in the NBA.

"He's been an All-Star. He's a guy who is a 20-point, 10 rebound (per game) guy, capable of doing some very special things on the floor," he said. "He's a guy who can handle the ball, he can pass the ball, he can rebound, he can shoot, he can block shots. He's got an awful lot of talent."

Greenberg's desire for solid citizens might also mean the talented but troubled Vernon Maxwell might not be back, but Greenberg declined to comment on any of the players except Jerry Stackhouse and Clarence Weatherspoon.

Stackhouse, the third overall draft choice last year, "is a tremendous competitor. He was leading rookie scorer in the league and that tells you something about his potential."

Greenberg called Weatherspoon, the undersized but overachieving forward, a good all-around player who is "one of the elite players in the league."

Greenberg declined to talk about what the 76ers will be looking for in the upcoming NBA draft, where they are expected to have a high choice, or in the free agent market.

His room to move is limited: the 76ers have only $6 million to work with under the NBA salary cap.

Cone out at least a month, possibly entire season

By Tom Withers
Associated Press

NEW YORK — David Cone, the New York Yankees pitcher hospitalized with an aneurysm in his right shoulder, is likely to be sidelined at least a month, and possibly the season.

Cone, one of baseball's most consistent and durable pitchers, remained in Columbia-Presbyterian Medical Center on Wednesday for more tests on the small aneurysm found a day earlier.

The Yankees have not confirmed if the 33-year-old right-hander will have surgery despite reports saying he will be operated on immediately. The club said it must first know the tests results before saying if Cone will pitch again this year.

"I don't think they're expecting him to be back in the next month or so," manager Joe Torre said before Wednesday night's game against Detroit. "I think that's safe to say.

"As far as him pitching again (this year) I know they haven't made any promises as to when to look for him. To me, that's the last of our concerns."

The aneurysm, located in the front of the right shoulder and described as "correctable" by the Yankees, is believed to have caused numbness in the middle three fingers of Cone's pitching hand most of the season.

An aneurysm, a dilation of a blood vessel, is most often found in the heart and brain, where it poses the greatest danger. The Yankees placed Cone on the 15-day disabled list, retroactive to last Friday, and brought up pitcher Paul Gibson from Triple-A Columbus to fill the roster spot. This is the first time since joining the Yankees last year that Cone has been on the disabled list.

Cone, 4-1 with an AL-leading 2.03 ERA, had been scheduled to pitch Tuesday night. But he missed a start for just the second time in his career and remained at the hospital overnight.

"We are getting second, third maybe fourth opinions on yesterday's finding," Yankees spokesman Rick Cerrone said. Cone has experienced problems in his pitching hand since opening day and was admitted to the hospital on April 26 after complaining of numbness.

He was allowed to start last Thursday despite discoloration and numbness in his index finger. He limited the Chicago White Sox to five hits and struck out eight.

"Knowing what drives him, no I wasn't surprised he went out there and did that," Torre said. "The last start David Cone had was the best one he's had since the first day of spring training."

Cone had pitched five ineffective innings on both April 17 and in his next start April 22. Four days later, he went to Columbia-Presbyterian for tests, including an angiogram, and missed a start for the first time in nine years.

The Yankees entered last night's game against Detroit having won four straight games. New York is in first place in the AL East despite a pitching staff which has been altered by one problem after another this season. This one, however, could have major implications.

When asked how his team might recover from the possible loss of Cone for the season, Torre said: "You don't. You do the best you can. We think we're still pretty good. Not as good as we'd be with him."

Scott Kamieniecki is filling Cone's spot in the rotation. Cone, a workhorse who has pitched more than 200 innings in a season six times in his career, isn't the first pitcher to experience numbness problems. Hall of Fame pitchers Whitey Ford and Sandy Koufax both battled through circulation problems.

Butler says he might be back

DULUTH, Ga. (AP) — One day after saying he has cancer, Brett Butler refused to rule out returning to the Los Angeles Dodgers this season.

"I don't know. Let's wait," he said yesterday. "Is there a chance that I could play this year? Talking to all the doctors and everything, I don't know if there is a chance that I can come back. If it is, it would probably be late in the season. Then again, we're not going to close any door right now."

The 38-year-old outfielder, who has cancer of the tonsils, told Los Angeles television station KNBC he is "overwhelmed" by the response from friends and fans.

"I'm not giving up on this thing," he said. "We're going to beat this thing. One of these days I'm going to be back out there tipping my hat and hopefully everything will be all right."

Dr. Robert Gadlage said yesterday that Butler's right tonsil was three or four times its normal size when he removed it last week. "When I looked in the back of his throat, I consciously tried not to look shocked," Gadlage said yesterday. "Later on I asked (Butler's wife) Eveline, 'When I looked at the back of his throat, could you tell that it looked different?' She said she saw me kind of jump back a little bit.

Later, she told him the family "assumed there was going to be something that was not what you expected."

Gadlage said he told Butler in the recovery room he'd found a tumor and Butler's first question was: Is it malignant?

"He was shocked. His family was shocked," Gadlage said. Butler's voice was raspy during the television interview. "My throat is sore from them taking out a plum-sized tonsil, which in fact it should have been the size of probably an acorn, and that's why my speech right now, it's the worst pain you can have in your throat," he told KNBC. "It's going to be this way for about 10 days and then hopefully, things will settle down a little bit."

Doctors say the tumor may have been caused by secondhand exposure to cigarette smoke.

"The biggest risk (for this kind of cancer) is some exposure to nicotine," Gadlage said.

Gadlage downplayed the significance of Butler's use of chewing tobacco in his early days as a player. Butler's parents smoked, so Butler was exposed to secondhand smoke consistently as a child.

"We can see someone who smokes two packs a day, three packs a day for 50 years who never gets this. Then there's somebody with minimal exposure like Brett," Gadlage said.

"The last time I dipped was 15 years ago, so to say that was the reason why I got this I think is reaching for something that isn't there," Butler told the TV station.

Gadlage said Dr. William Grist, director of the Head and Neck Cancer Surgery Department at Emory University in Atlanta, believes there still is some cancer in Butler's neck. An abnormal lymph node will be removed May 21 and two weeks later, Butler will start six weeks of radiation treatments.

"In Dr. Grist's opinion, there is still some cancer around that tonsil, and we have to assume that's what's causing the one lymph node he still has to stay enlarged," Gadlage said.

Gadlage said Grist "didn't say anything about (Butler's) career being over. He did say it wouldn't be wise for him to try to go back this year."

He said the national recovery rate for this cancer is close to 70 percent, "but you've got to add at least a few percentage points" for Butler because he's in good physical condition. Butler's only previous operation was for nasal surgery in 1986.

Red Sox–Brewers postponed

MILWAUKEE (AP) — The inclement weather that has dogged Wisconsin this spring has been bittersweet for the Milwaukee Brewers. Attendance has taken a hit — take out the opening day crowd of 42,090 and the average for the other 12 dates is only 11,061. Yet the wet spring also has quelled lingering doubts about the need for a retractable roof for the proposed $250 million Miller Park that would replace County Stadium, center fielder Pat Listach said.

"This is the reason we need a dome right here," Listach said after last night's game with the Boston Red Sox was rained out and rescheduled for Aug. 9 as part of a doubleheader.

Two of the Brewers' last three home games have been postponed. Their April 29 game against Seattle was snowed out.

Manager Phil Garner said the proposed retractable roof "is not so much about creating creature comfort as it is about ensuring that a game is going to be played."

"For this franchise to be successful, you have to be able to have people make plans to travel from the outlying areas, to be able to come in and expect to see a game," said Garner, who had two visitors in his office who had made a futile four-hour drive from La Crosse, Wis.

"They left their work today, drove down, no ballgame," Garner said. "You got a dome, then you're assured that people can make plans."

The Brewers are hoping to break ground on the project near County Stadium sometime this summer.

A March 18 groundbreaking was delayed when the stadium board that levies a tax for the public's $160 million share told the team it either had to prove it had adequate financing for its share of the project, agree to a downtown stadium or lose the approximately $50 million roof.

The Brewers shored up their $90 million financing proposal and the board is reviewing that plan and trying to secure investors for bonds.

Garner said Scott Karl, scheduled to pitch last night, would start instead on Saturday. That pushes struggling knuckleballer Steve Sparks back to Monday.

The Brewers will start Ricky Bones against the Red Sox today and Ben McDonald against the Baltimore Orioles on Friday.

"Rather than move everybody and get four or five guys out of whack, I wanted to leave Ricky and Ben as close to their regular days as possible," Garner said.

Red Sox manager Kevin Kennedy said Aaron Sele, scheduled to pitch last night, would pitch today.

The bad weather ruined plans for Kevin Mitchell (hamstring) to complete a personal doubleheader. He and Jose Canseco (hip flexor) completed a two-game minor league rehabilitation assignment yesterday.

Both played an afternoon game at Pawtucket, R.I., before flying to Milwaukee. Mitchell was eligible to return from the DL last night. Canseco is eligible to return today.

Boston also designated left-handed pitcher Brad Pennington for assignment and recalled right-hander Brent Knackert from Class AA Trenton, where he was 10-for-10 in save opportunities.

The Brewers activated designated hitter-first baseman Dave Nilsson (foot fracture) and sent infielder Tim Unroe to Class AAA New Orleans yesterday.

Padres 5, Pirates 4

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Ken Caminiti needed a cortisone shot to deaden the pain in a troublesome left shoulder, but it was his bat that hurt the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Caminiti hit two-run homers in his first two at-bats and the San Diego Padres held on to beat the Pirates 5-4 yesterday in the first game of a doubleheader.

The Padres, whose four-game lead in the NL West entering the day's play was the largest in any division, are 10-4 on the road. They started 4-9 away from home last season.

"Sometimes he can't even raise his left arm, it hurts so bad," Padres manager Bruce Bochy said of Caminiti. "But after the rainout (Tuesday), he said he felt 100 percent better."

Caminiti's two-homer game was the seventh of his career and his first since Sept. 19. He followed Marc Newfield's two-out walk with a shot over the left-field wall in the first, then added an even longer drive in the third with Steve Finley on third. Caminiti has five homers.

"We thought the shoulder might affect him more swinging right-handed than left-handed, so that shows you how much we know," Pirates manager Jim Leyland said. "I've always liked him. He plays the game the way it's supposed to be played. He never cheats anybody out of a day's work."

Caminiti did take a possible victory away from Pittsburgh rookie Darrell May (0-1), who allowed only two other hits over five innings in his first major league start.

May got into trouble in a three-run third by walking Rickey Henderson with one out. Finley singled before both runners advanced on stolen bases a pitch apart, and Henderson scored as catcher Jason Kendall threw wildly on Finley's steal. Caminiti followed with his second homer.

"A couple of pitches obviously were the ballgame," Leyland said. "(The walks) were kind of shock because he's a control pitcher and he threw nothing but strikes to the first couple of hitters. He probably had a little case of the jitters."

Padres starter Bob Tewksbury was appreciative not only of the homers, but of Caminiti's steady defense at third.

"He's playing with pain but he still make plays," Tewksbury said. "To play the way he's playing with how he feels is a tremendous compliment to his desire and ability."

Kendall got the Pirates back into the game with his first career homer, a two-run drive that chased Tewksbury (4-1) and made it 5-4 in the seventh.

Tewksbury, making his first start against Pittsburgh since June 17, 1994, also permitted Charlie Hayes' RBI double in the second and Al Martin's sacrifice fly in the sixth.

Bryce Florie pitched out of a two-on, two-out jam in the eighth, and Trevor Hoffman worked the ninth for his sixth save. The Padres are 6-1 in Pittsburgh over the last two seasons.

May allowed five runs on four hits, struck out three and walked three in his third career major league appearance. The left-hander is expected to return to Triple-A Calgary so Zane Smith can start Sunday against the Giants.

Only about 250 fans were in the stands at the start of the game. "They didn't have any trouble finding the fan of the game," said Leyland, referring to a nightly Pirates promotion.

Notes: Tewksbury has surrendered 14 runs on 15 hits over 13 innings in his last two starts... Chris Gwynn has a higher career batting average (.410) against Pittsburgh than brother Tony (.322)... The Padres activated infielder Chris Shipley and put infielder Archi Cianfrocco on the disabled list with an injured right hip... May made two appearances last September for Atlanta... The Pirates are 0-14 when trailing after eight innings... Kendall has thrown out seven of 34 runners attempting to steal... About 250 fans were in the stands at the start of the start of the first game.

Braves 5, Rockies 1

ATLANTA (AP) — Jeff Blauser, batting only .169, hit a two-run homer in the seventh and a two-run double in the eighth to give the Atlanta Braves a 5-1 victory over the Colorado Rockies last night and a three-game sweep.

Tom Glavine (3-3) allowed four hits in eight innings and didn't allow an earned run as the Braves continued their domination of the Rockies. Atlanta has a 36-7 record against Colorado, including the first round of last year's playoffs.

Blauser, coming off two straight dismal seasons, was off to another poor start this year, both at the plate and at shortstop. His throwing error in the seventh allowed Colorado to score an unearned run that tied the game 1-1.

In the bottom of the inning, Blauser was greeted with jeers by the home crowd when he came to bat with a runner on second and two outs. The booing stopped when Blauser hit a hanging curve from starter Armando Reynoso (2-3) over the left-field wall for a 3-1 lead.

The following inning, Blauser sealed the victory after the Rockies intentionally walked the hitter ahead of him, Javy Lopez. Blauser doubled down the left-field line against Bruce Ruffin to score Lopez and Fred McGriff.

man Ryan Thistle walked, Ryan Jette singled to the gap in right center to load the bases. Shortstop Brad Gorrie followed with a single scoring Samela. Second baseman Muchie Dagliere walked to score Thistle.

Harvard replaced Brush with freshman righty James Kalyvas. After Kelly grounded out to first, Jette tagged up to score, with UMass down 7-3. Centerfielder Nate Murphy was good for a single to shallow center that scored Gorrie and Dagliere for the final two runs. Down only by two runs, it looked like UMass was going to come back.

Freshman Bill Cooke stepped in for Robinson on the mound in the top of the sixth. Carey singled to center leading off the inning. Cooke struck out Albers, but Carey would advance to second stealing on a wild pitch. A Levy single would score Carey. With Levy on first, Doble blasted a homerun over the leftfield wall for two more runs putting Harvard up 10-5.

The Minutemen countered, scoring five more runs on one hit in the sixth to knot the game at 10. Samela led off with a bunt single. Catcher Andy Kiah was hit by a pitch putting runners on first and second, prompting the home plate ump to dish out a warning to Kalyvas. Thistle threw down a sac bunt to score Samela, but arrived at first safely on an overthrow from third to first. The Crimson infield fouled up again as an overthrow from first to second advanced Thistle to second base while scoring Kiah, putting UMass down 10-7.

Kalyvas beaned Jette prompting the home plate ump, frustrated with the day's pitching, to toss the Harvard hurler from the game. A protest by Crimson coach Joe Walsh from the dugout gave the pair a chance to share some quality time on the team bus for the remainder of the game.

Sophomore Mike Marcucci (1-0, 1.00 ERA) replaced Kalyvas on the mound and walked Gorrie. Dagliere filed out to center as Thistle tagged up to score and place Jette on third. With Kelly at the plate, Gorrie stole second. Kelly popped out to center field, but tagging up, Jette scored as Gorrie took third. Marcucci then walked Murphy putting runners at first and third. With Clark at the plate, Murphy got picked off at second but not before Gorrie came home with the tying run.

In the seventh, the Crimson would score their 11th and game-winning run. Cooke walked Aaron Kessler and as David Forst doubled down the left field line, Kessler scored.

Reliever Steve Levy (1-0, 1.35 ERA) stopped in to close out the game and keep the Harvard bats at bay, but UMass couldn't get back on the board.

"We want to focus on the A-10 Tournament," Stone said. "It would have been nice to win today and keep the streak going, but the pressure of the streak is not with us any more so maybe that's good."

CBS, Wright go their separate ways

By Ron Sirak
Associated Press

WILMINGTON, Del. — The storm that surrounded CBS a year ago after commentator Ben Wright made remarks about lesbianism on the LPGA Tour and crude comments about women's bodies has passed at last.

And the network wants to keep it that way.

No mention of the incident that cost Wright his job — though not his salary, since he is drawing full pay for four years — will be made on this weekend's coverage of the McDonald's LPGA Championship.

"To discuss it further on the telecast is to do a further disservice to the game," CBS Sports president David Kenin said Wednesday at the DuPont Country Club. "We've said we're sorry. We've apologized."

A year ago, the Wilmington News-Journal published a story by reporter Valerie Helmbreck quoting Wright as saying that lesbianism on the LPGA Tour hurt corporate sponsorship and that women were hampered in their golf swings by their "boobs."

Wright denied making the remarks and CBS issued a strong statement backing Wright, including on-air remarks by golf anchor Jim Nantz.

"We grilled him," Kenin said about Wright. "We talked to everybody we knew that was in the trailer" where the interview occurred.

The storm passed until a Sports Illustrated story in December supported Helmbreck's original article and Wright was taken off golf in January, just weeks after he was given a four-year contract extension.

Wright spent April in the Betty Ford Center undergoing alcohol rehabilitation.

"We feel terrible about any harm that has been done to anybody," Kenin said. "I wish I could get a rewind and go back and reverse the thing."

CBS executive producer for golf Frank Chirkinian indicated earlier this week that Wright might have a future with the network but Kenin said, "Frank speaks from the heart and emotionally. Frank's position is not the position of the company."

While Kenin refused to completely rule out a further association with Wright, saying "Who can predict the future," he did say "there are no plans at this time to do anything with Ben Wright on TV or with CBS."

"I don't want Ben to read that there has been a death sentence on him," Kenin said. "I want him to focus on his life and on his drinking and eating."

Kenin, who has spoken with Wright since his release from rehab, said the 63-year-old Wright "has a new lease on life, it seems like."

One thing that does seem certain is that Wright will never be involved with an LPGA event.

"I can't see a point where Ben Wright would be associated with an LPGA telecast," LPGA commissioner Jim Ritts said Wednesday. "I have communicated that to David. What's best for the LPGA is that the focus be on our athletes and our events and not on the correspondents."

That seems to be the position of CBS, also, especially since the correspondent involved is one of theirs.

"I spoke to the players last week (at the Titleholders) and apologized," Kenin said, "I apologized to the LPGA from the start."

But there will be no apologies this weekend.

Cincinnati red–face over Schott's remarks

CINCINNATI (AP) — Newspapers in Marge Schott's home state chastised the Cincinnati Reds owner Wednesday for her laudatory remarks about Adolf Hitler and urged her to sell the team or give up control.

"Acting commissioner Bud Selig's spineless response Tuesday was that he would 'continue to monitor the situation,' but the situation merits more drastic measures," columnist Tim Sullivan wrote in The Cincinnati Enquirer. "If Schott will not step aside willingly, it is time she was shoved."

Added columnist Joe Posnanski in The Cincinnati Post: "She speaks mindlessly, without concern, without consideration. Marge Schott, who so loves children, should visit Yad Vashem, a place in Jerusalem, where there is a room lit with candles, and a voice, 24 hours a day, speaks off the names of the children butchered in the Holocaust."

Schott apologized Tuesday, two days after ESPN broadcast an interview in which she said Hitler "was good at the beginning, but he just went too far."

It was a replay of similar remarks she made in a 1992 newspaper interview, the year before baseball suspended and fined her for using racial and ethnic slurs.

Newspapers around the state published editorial cartoons lampooning Schott, the Cincinnati auto dealer who bought control of the Reds in 1984.

One showed a child offering a pen and a baseball to a cartoon Schott, as if asking for an autograph. "Could I get your swastika?" he asks.

Another shows a muzzled Schott sitting in a Reds box next to her dog, Schottzie 02. And still another shows Schott reading "Mein Kampf." Hitler's autobiography, upside down.

Your Daily Horoscope

ARIES (March 21 – April 19) — Refuse to waste time on petty arguments wit someone who is thoughtless. Unexpected events could change your priorities. Avoid acting willful or arbitrary wit subordinates.

TAURUS (April 20 – May 20) — Projects designed to conserve resources or generate income merit prompt attention. Rejoice when you hear that a friend has received an inheritance or promotion. Voicing envy or doubt would harm your relationship.

GEMINI (May 21 – June 20) — Living with children is always challenging. Avoid taking out work or financial frustrations on those you love. A speculative financial venture may prove disappointing. Avoid signing papers in haste.

CANCER (June 21 – July 22) — Morning is the best time for business negotiations. Accept an interesting proposition; travel in search of work. Developing your linguistic or communication skills will help you win new support from VIPs. Soft-pedal any criticism.

LEO (July 23 – Aug. 22) — Listen with an open mind to suggestions for improving your job performance. They may prove useful. Ask favors and also grant them. Romance heats up! Keep things under control. Impulsive promises are best avoided.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 – Sept. 22) — The competition is keen, but you do just fine! Avoid someone who takes advantage of your good nature. Double-check travel arrangements. You need to listen to both sides before making a judgement call.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 – Oct. 22) — Ask for favors in the right way and people will accommodate you. Emphasize consistency in completing projects. Loved ones are going through a tense period.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 – Nov. 21) — Give no quarter or intrigue to dissent. If you are true to your ideals, you will not fail others. The object of your affections may be pondering a future with you.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 – Dec. 21) — Resist the temptation to compromise on questions of principle. Regardless of peer pressure, uphold your high personal standards. Your thoughtfulness wins you a new friend.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 – Jan. 19) — Do not allow someone's sharp tongue to make your own take on razor-like qualities. Remember, anger can be turned away by a silken answer. Discussion groups can provide valuable creative ideas.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 – Feb. 18) — If you have a grievance, talk it over sensibly — not heatedly. Anger words will only widen the breach. Limit spending on non-essentials. Entertaining a small group in your home will greatly brighten your evening.

PISCES (Feb. 19 – March 20) — You are lucky in love! Dramatic events are on the horizon. You need to be careful in both word and deed. Avoid sensationalism. Your self-respect is intertwined with your regard for tradition.

Greetings, people! We're the creators of NeoLife, the biggest force you've ever enjoying every time it actually runs.
How do you know they're enjoying it more than they could disappear?
We're interrupting the usual jokes for a bit to explain a bit about our company setup. NeoLife is actually a comic book that we wrote that's over 100 pages long. We have to output it so it can actually make some sort of sense.
And to cover up the blood ... they got us into boring contract negotiations - a BORING scene!
So anyhow, decent chat to interest, we'll spend some time explaining this setup. We'll return to the story going in a few days.
There was blood all over the place. It was kinda sick.

Minutewomen host Marist in NCAA Play–in series

By Leigh Torbin
Collegian Staff

The last games are over for the Massachusetts softball team, as the real season is upon it.

The Minutewomen will host upstart Marist College at 3 p.m. this afternoon at Totman Field, opening a best-of-three NCAA Play-in series. The winner advances to the NCAA Regionals on May 17–19 at sites to be announced on Sunday.

Marist (28–12) enters its first-ever NCAA softball competition as the surprise winners of the Northeast Conference. The Red Foxes swept past Long Island University, and host-ed Robert Morris and Rider in their conference tourney this-past week, riding the coat-tails of star pitcher Michele Hudson.

Hudson is amongst the national leaders with the 0.86 ERA that accompanies her 18-6 record. The junior has a nearly six-to-one strikeout-to-walk ratio of 6-1/9, fanning 198 on the season while issuing just 32 free passes. She was named the Most Valuable Player of the NEC Tournament, winning all the games and allowing one earned run.

Hudson has three no-hitters to her credit this season and posted a 42-2 inning consecutive shutout streak earlier this [illegible].

After watching Princeton's Maureen Davies' fluttering off-speed offering fall with amazement on Tuesday, another pitcher who can win a game by herself is not what the doctor ordered for the Minutewomen.

Thankfully, UMass can counter with freshman phenom Danielle Henderson who has been hotter than a sponta-neously combusting GMC truck lately.

Henderson is coming off of a 20-game consecutive win streak, the longest in NCAA history, that dated back to a [illegible] 4-3 loss to No. 22 Missouri on March 2. The Mid-Continent Player of the Year and Pitcher of the Year Henderson has seen her ERA dip to just 0.98, placing it under a run for the first time this season.

On Tuesday the freshman matched Davies, a College World Series veteran who boasts a 24–3 mark in 1996, pitch for pitch, picking up a tough-luck loss on an unearned run that had advanced on a two-base throwing error.

Leading UMass at the plate of late has been Sam Cardenas, one of the few Minutewomen to have a solid day at the plate on Tuesday against strong Tiger pitching.

Cardenas has upped her batting average to .341 by hitting in 25 of her last 27 contests, including 10 and 14-game hit streaks. A member of the All-Tournament team, Cardenas broke the school record for RBIs in a season on Tuesday by driving in her 43rd run of the 1996 campaign.

The junior drove in the game winning run in both of UMass' A-10 tourney wins and leads the team with eight, primarily due to her team-high 20 extra-base hits and school record 27 walks this year.

At the plate for the Red Foxes, shortstop Beth Murphy has been on a tear. Murphy hit at a .600 clip during Marist's conference tournament. The senior tri-captain drove in the game-winner against Robert Morris with a triple, and the game-winner against Rider in the championship game with a double.

The Red Foxes have recently seen the return of cleanup hitter Laurie Sleight's booming bat. A .358 hitter on the year, Sleight missed some games recently with back spasms but returned for the NEC Tournament.

Likewise, UMass slugger Chris Martens and pitcher Liz Wagner have also been affected by back pains of late. Martens played against Rhode Island in the A-10 tourna-ment, her first action since April 15, but sat out the Princeton non-bill. Wagner's back led to sub-par outings against URI and Princeton, and hopefully will be alright so that Henderson does not have to carry the entire pitching onus through the duration of the season.

Minutemen edged by Crimson in final home game

By Chris Stamm
Collegian Staff

The team took to the field at ease.

Coming off an 18–1 win over New Hampshire on Tuesday, the Massachusetts baseball team was ready for a repeat performance against Harvard. ... a team it destroyed 15–2 just recently. With the excitement of [illegible] day and the fact that the Minutemen (35–10 overall, 15–5 in the Atlantic 10) boasted the nation's longest winning streak (16 straight) at the time, it was particularly [illegible] to see him.

Harvard thought otherwise as the Crimson exploded in the first inning, scoring seven runs off senior left-hander David Dart (3–05 ERA) in his first appearance for Earl E. Lorden Field.

Dart kicked off the inning by walking second baseman designated hitter Hal Crimi. With Crimi on first, second baseman Pete Albers doubled to left. Centerfielder Matt Levy ripped a dou-ble, scoring Crimi and Albers giving Harvard a quick 2–0 lead. Catcher Dennis Dobbs popped up to centerfield as Levy rounded up and took third. Dart walked the next batter before Mike Hochendel grounded out to second as Levy scored.

Bert Yankoski blasted one between third and third. UMass first baseman Justin Kelly dove for an amazing stop, but Dart couldn't cover the bag in time, allowing Yankoski to get on base. Dart gave up three more singles, scoring in a run each, giving the Crimson a handy 6–0 lead as they bat-ted around. After hitting a batter and walking the next to score the seventh run, UMass coach Mike Stone took a trip to the mound and replaced Dart with sophomore Jeff Pulert, who made the final out.

"He had a tough day out there," Stone said of the senior Dart. "He struggled against St. Joe's last time because he's up in the strike zone a lot. You can't pitch like that and get away with it. He didn't today. He's got to get the ball down and follow through."

UMass couldn't counter in the bottom half of the inning as the Minutemen went three up and three down against freshman rights Garrett Vail. Being Senior Day, it was ironically freshman Brian Samela who earned the first UMass hit with a double to center field, but the squad couldn't get him around.

In the fourth, freshman Adam Robinson stepped to the mound for Pulert, but, like the other Minutemen, struggled with the Crimson. After hit-ting a batter, Robinson was warned by the ump to get the ball under control.

The UMass offense erupted in the fifth. Bart Brush (5–0, 1.00 ERA) replaced Vail on the mound and opened the inning by hitting Brian Samela with a pitch. After third base-

Senior's accomplishments not lost in loss

By Casey Kane
Collegian Staff

Before the Massachusetts baseball team took to Earl E. Lorden Field yesterday to face Harvard, the Minutemen took time to honor their four seniors.

Ryan Jette, Justin Kelly, Andy Kiah and David Dart all stood on the third base line after each had received a short introduction, facing the team they led and cap-tained.

And even though the Minutemen (33–10, 15–5 Atlantic 10) eventually dropped the game to the Crimson (23–14, 14–6 Ivy) 11–10, the accomplish-ments of the seniors were not lost on anyone. They were in fact magnified, as the four showed how important they are to the team.

Over the course of the season, Jette has been one of the most consistent Minutemen, both in the field and at the plate. While yesterday's game was by no means a standard Jette offensive output, he did score twice in the UMass effort.

As the lead-off batter for UMass, he has produced a .371 batting average and a .515 slugging percentage. As one of only two players to start every game this season, he has recorded 49 runs on 62 hits for 21 RBI. He has hit for nine doubles, three triples and three home runs, including his first career grand slam.

"He has been a tremendous catalyst for us offensive-ly," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "It's hard to replace a guy like him."

For his career, he holds top honors in the career bat-ting average category with .381. He's also now tied for second on the all-time hit-by-pitches list with 18, 11 coming this year.

On the basepaths, Jette has earned the top spot on the UMass all-time stolen bases list. With his 28 steals in 37 attempts this year, he has totaled 80 career steals, giving him eight more than former steal king Matt Sheran.

Justin Kelly, a two-year starter at first base who bats clean-up for UMass, has also had a strong year at the plate. His .317 average and .408 slugging percentage include 45 hits for 28 runs and 32 RBI. He has collect-ed seven doubles and two homers this year, while only striking out 16 times.

As the only other player to start every game this sea-son, Kelly has earned the distinction of being a favorite target of opposing pitchers. He has been hit by 15 pitches this year alone, giving him the single-season and career records in that category.

"Justin Kelly, the last two years, has been a real solid first baseman," Stone said. "And a real good, solid hit-ter for us too."

Andy Kiah has been a silent partner for the Minutemen this year. After red-shirting a year and play-ing the role of back-up, Kiah has stepped into his role as the starting catcher this year, playing with consisten-cy and without fanfare.

He has recorded a .353 batting average that includes 13 runs and 21 RBI on 30 hits. Not a power hitter, Kiah has only collected seven doubles; but he circled the bases after hitting the ball out of the park for the first time in his career this year. Kiah has also only struck out 10 times this season.

"Andy Kiah didn't play, he sat for four years. He red–shirted one year," Stone said. "He is having a great year. He's done a great job catching and receiving, and working with the pitchers. He's done a great job."

Yesterday's starting pitcher, David Dart, has record-ed a 14–3 record in his time at UMass. He has posted a 4–1 record this year with a 3.05 ERA. In 44 innings pitched, the southpaw has struck out 29 and walked 23, and allowed 18 runs, 15 earned, on 37 hits.

"They said a lot of great things about [Dart] when they introduced him at the beginning of the game," Stone said. "Regardless of what today looked like, he's done a great job for us over the four years here."

Yesterday, the UMass score truly reflected a team effort. Six different players, including the seniors, scored the team's 10 runs.

And as the team prepares to compete for a second straight title at this weekend's Atlantic 10 Tournament, it will be the seniors who will be leading the team... again.

ALANA students react to CAO takeover

By Lisa Chiu
and Michael Elliott
Collegian Staff

A day has passed since the Campus Activities Office (CAO) in the Student Union Building was vacated early yesterday morning. The first student takeover in two years ended just as it had begun, peacefully and with evident enthusiasm.

The events of yesterday by ALANA students have most definitely struck a chord with both the Student Government Association (SGA) and the administration. Freshmen sat alongside seniors, African Americans sat along side Latinos, women sat along side men.

News Analysis

ALANA students expressed dissat-isfaction with the treatment in which their Registered Student Organizations (RSOs) received in the student activities budget process administered by the SGA. Further, students raised a more significant concern for the treatment of ALANA students on-campus in general.

The demands by the coalition of students of color were threefold, all of which centered around exact dol-lar amounts and the manner in which funds are allotted.

According to Sonny Rivas, a par-ticipant in the takeover and a SGA Senator, there was a total of $49,000 yet to be allocated from the Student Activities Trust Fund (SATF).

"This money has not been allocated to anyone, it's floating around with no purpose," said Rivas.

The previous evening, the SGA Ways and Means committee made their recommendations as to how money should be distributed amongst RSOs.

ALANA students rejected the pro-posal, which was to go up for a vote before the Senate the evening of the take-over, based on the fact that both AHORA, a organization for Latino students, and the ALANA reserve, were not funded at their requested levels.

The reserves were created so that the ALANA caucus within the senate could allocate funds to various RSOs and students, based on criteria estab-lished by the caucus itself.

Therefore, the group inside CAO brought forth a list of three demands for SGA First, a $5,000 increase to the ALANA reserves was requested, bringing it to a total of $10,000. Currently, many ALANA organiza-tions petition the senate finance com-mittee for funds.

ALANA students requested the increase in reserves to create more avenues in order to obtain adequate funding for their programs and events.

Uganda holds presidential election

KAMPALA, Uganda — For the first time since gaining independence 34 years ago, Ugandans voted for a president Thursday. The incumbent who shot his way to power a decade ago was expected to win.

Voters waited in long, snaking lines to cast their ballots in an elec-tion that moves the East African nation a step toward fuller democra-cy and away from a murderous past.

With 1 percent of the vote counted, President Yowen Museveni had 77.9 percent, Paul Ssemogerere 19.8 percent, and Muhammad Mayanja 2.3 percent, said Interim Electoral Commission Chairman Stephen Akabwoy.

A reliable indication of the winner was expected by dawn. Initially, the commission had not expected to release results until Saturday.

Nearly 8.5 million people in the nation of 18 million were eligible to vote.

Violence disrupted counting in rebel-infested northern Uganda, according to an international elec-toral consultant who did not want to be named.

Museveni, who ended two decades of terror under dictators Idi Amin and Milton Obote in a violent coup in 1986, was expected to easily fend off veteran politician Ssemogerere and university professor Mayanja.

Bulger addresses Faculty Senate on excellence of UMass

By Jonathan Liberty
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts President William M. Bulger addressed the Faculty Senate yester-day.

"I have been on the job for four months and it is a great job and a great University," said Bulger. "We just need to let people know the excellence of the University."

Bulger joked, "I'm accustomed to senates, but I like to be in charge of them."

Bulger continued addressing the importance and purpose of educa-tion. "Education is a lifelong under-taking; each of us is involved in the education of ourselves." He added a definition stating that the purpose of education was to acquire the ability to make an informed judgement.

Questions from the senators fol-lowed.

Bulger was asked how the University could raise admissions standards. "We need to inch towards that goal; we need to keep this University open for many people but we also need to make it a place of excellence," said Bulger. He said that he recognizes the need for higher standards, but he also said that University needs to do it carefully.

Bulger added, "Don't make the revolving door go too fast because somebody will fall out."

The president was then asked how he feels the raising admissions stan-dards will affect Asian, Latino, African, and Native American (ALANA) students' access to the University.

"We have been unable to stand up to the pressure of this issue so far, but we need to improve this school," Bulger said. "We have to insist on having a University where our top priority is excellence.

"The University of Massachusetts deserves to be something great, noth-ing should stand in the way of that," Bulger added.

Student Government Association (SGA) senator Ashavan Doyan said that he hoped Bulger would come to the SGA next semester to address the questions of the students. Doyan asked Bulger of his definition of mul-ticulturalism and diversity.

"It seems that areas that have been neglected in our tradition should be included," Bulger responded. "I like the idea of finding a common ground with just about everyone, there is room for all."

Senator Edward Connors asked.

UMass had 2,500 tickets for Final Four

BOSTON (AP) — The University of Massachusetts had 2,500 tickets for college basketball's Final Four games last month, while scalpers said they were offered as much as $10,000 for a single $70 ticket.

The Boston Globe today said the University's tickets went to congress-men, legislators, other politicians, business leaders, lobbyists, University contributors, alumni, sports figures and people in the media.

Most of them went to men, said the newspaper, which got a list of recipients from the university.

Many recipients paid for the tickets they got, but records indicate that at least 500 were given free.

The University got the tickets after its team made it to the Final Four for the first time in the school's history. The team lost to Kentucky in the semifinals.

The Globe said 816 tickets went to students who took part in a lottery to get them, and 731 went to season ticket-holders based on points they acquired for such things as how much they contributed to the University.

The University's new president, former state Senate president, William M. Bulger, got 146 tickets to distribute.

Four of Bulger's tickets went to Lt. Gov. Paul Cellucci, who paid for them to take his two daughters and a state trooper to the games.

Annex warns of textbook scam

By Melanie B. Arruda
Collegian Staff

A book buy–back scam, in which used books were bought door to door in residence halls, was reported in December. Now that buy–back season is approaching again, Textbook Annex employees warn that scammers buy books at a lower price than the Annex, than sell them for profit at official textbook buybacks.

"If students sell their book to someone else then it will probably cost them," said Scott Cashman, manag-er of the Textbook Annex.

Cashman said he believes someone managed to get a wholesaler's buyers guide and is buying books door to door in the residence halls. "I have no idea where they would get it," he said.

"There are only three authorized textbook buyback locations," Cashman said.

Textbook buyback starts May 15 at the Annex and in Campus Center Room 162. The textbook buyback at Hampden starts May 22.

According to Jennifer Lee, used textbook coordina-tor for the Textbook Annex, the scammers say what they are offering for the books is higher than the offer students would receive from the Textbook Annex. They then take the books to an authorized textbook buyback and try to get 50 percent for them. "The stu-dents lose out," Lee said.

The scam eliminates the student's chance of getting 50 percent for their books, Cashman said.

At the textbook buyback, there are two price cate-gories. Students get 50 percent of the current publish-er's list price if the Annex knows the book will be used in the fall, Cashman said.

If we aren't sure that it will be used next semester then it goes to the wholesaler data base and you will receive 15 to 40 percent, he said.

"It depends on the national demand for the book. If a new edition comes out then the old edition has no value," Cashman said.

"I was pretty surprised to hear about this scam," Cashman said. "It seems like a pretty hard way to make money."

The number of stolen books skyrockets at this time of year, according to Cashman. People bring the stolen books to an authorized textbook buyback to get money for them.

"Don't leave your room unlocked, don't leave books unattended," Cashman said. "Write your name in a hidden place in the book, and report stolen books to the police and Textbook Annex."

If you mark the book in some way then the Textbook Annex is able to track your book if it comes back to them as stolen, Cashman said.

Child porn company busted by authorities

By Randolph E. Schmid
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — When postal inspectors came across what appeared to be a major child pornog-raphy operation, they decided it was too good a chance to pass up. Instead of just shutting it down, they changed the name and went into business.

The results of their two-year undercover operation were announced Thursday: 45 arrests in a nationwide sting, as many as 70 more to come.

"Simply shutting down Overseas Male (the pornography distributor) wasn't enough because those who cre-ated the demand for child pornogra-phy were still out there," Chief Postal Inspector Kenneth J. Hunter said.

Hunter said the investigators con-centrated on people who sought videos involving boys aged seven to 11 — offering the material for sale and bringing charges if the individu-als accepted delivery of the videos.

"We are not talking about adult videos someone can rent at some cor-ner video store," Hunter said.

The videos offered by Overseas Male were "in actuality videotaped evidence of a crime taking place. They show images of children having sex with each other or with adults — children as young as seven, eight or nine years old being sexually abused in unthinkable ways."

In more than 20 cases, Hunter said, investigators uncovered evidence of child abuse in addition to the charges of possessing pornography.

In one case, Ray Leslie Opfer of Reno, Nev., has been sentenced to life in prison for the molestation of two brothers — ages nine and 12 — after inspectors discovered a collec-tion of sexually explicit videos of neighborhood children in his home, Postal Inspector Ray Smith reported.

In another case, authorities said Robert H. Ellison, 65, of Chicago, pleaded for the prompt return of his videos because he feared that he would molest children if he could not relieve his urges through pornogra-phy. He was ordered held without bond as a threat to the community.

"Pedophiles aren't always strangers in your community," Hunter said. "They are men of every social stratum and occupation: teachers, professors, computer programmers, even some-times members of the clergy."

He said his office began receiving complaints in 1993 from people who had been sent advertising for sexually explicit videos by Overseas Male, a San Diego company.

One of the operators of that busi-ness, James Leroy Kemmish, was arrested in 1994 by customs agents as he returned from Mexico. Agents found $16,000 in cash and child pornography when they searched his baggage. He has been convicted of distributing child pornography and sentenced to five years in prison.

Hunter said the agency decided to use its mailing lists to try and track down buyers of the porn. It sent out some 2,000 solicitations under the name Island Male, inviting people to send back a card if they were inter-ested. They also had the option to ask to be removed from the mailing list by simply throwing the solicitation away, Hunter noted.

Those who asked for more infor-mation were sent letters discussing "steamy" videos involving boys and men of various age groups. Those who showed an interest in ages seven to 11 were targeted.

Smith explained that when these people placed an order, it was deliv-ered by a postal inspector. If they accepted delivery, a search warrant was obtained and their home or busi-ness searched for evidence of posses-sion of child pornography.

Those regarded as threats to the community or likely to flee were arrested immediately, while cases were still being developed against many others, he explained.

"We hope it makes a difference," Hunter said. "But we're not naive enough to think it will cause making child pornography or trafficking in it to end."

He said his office makes as many as 200 arrests a year "in this vile trade."

In all, the postal service conducted 130 searches in 36 states during its undercover operation, called Operation Special Delivery. He said the videos sold for $50 to $290, depending on the age of the children involved. A review of the company's financial records showed it grossed $10,000 a week during one six-month period.

While the postal service moved ahead with its probe, some U.S. attor-neys appear to have rejected helping the investigators obtain warrants.

Sen. Charles Grassley R-Iowa, wrote to Attorney General Janet Reno, asking for an explanation of how U.S. Attorney Janet Napolitano in Phoenix, Ariz., handled the case.

"In particular, the information I have received indicates that Ms. Napolitano refused to authorize seek-ing a search warrant for the home of an individual who had ordered graph-ic child pornography," Grassley wrote. "The documents I have exam-ined indicate this refusal was based on the personal philosophy of Ms. Napolitano, and not on legal flaws."

ABC's "Evening News" reported as many as four U.S. attorneys declined seek warrants. Grassley's letter refers to "other similar cases," but the other prosecutors were not identified.

Hunter said another man believed to have been involved with the com-pany, Troy A. Frank, was found dead in Mexico last year. Hunter said Frank was believed to have commit-ted suicide after postal inspectors contacted him and asked him to sur-render.

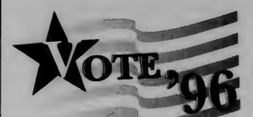
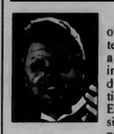
Countdown to the '96 Presidential Primaries



WASHINGTON (AP) — And then there were two.
Breaking clear in a contest once crowded and tangled, Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole has secured the Republican presidential nomination and won the right to engage President Clinton in the fall.
Neither man at this point has a comprehensive platform. But what they do have, after Clinton's three years in the White House and Dole's 27 years in the Senate, are records. And since January they've answered questions on a variety of subjects put to them by The Associated Press.
Here are their answers, plus summaries of their words and actions on a variety of issues. Positions may change, and Ross Perot may yet jump in again to mix everything up.
But as of now, this is where they stand and what they've said.

EDUCATION— SCHOOL VOUCHERS: Do you favor providing parents with vouchers to send their children to any participating public, private or religious school?



"I support increased options and quality of education through such projects as charter schools, public school choice and national standards. I also support efforts to increase parents' participation in their children's education, such as parenting education, parental resource centers and through Education Secretary Riley's parental responsibility campaign. I do not support using public funds to pay for private schools."

Bill Clinton

"Yes."

Bob Dole

■ ALANA

Jeff Coker, the chair of the Ways and Means committee, said that the committee did not support the $5,000 increase to the ALANA reserves. "The figure was random," he said.

Coker said the committee, in addition, recommended that any additional money not allocated to RSOs and agencies should be funneled into the SGA Finance Committee reserve account and not the ALANA fund.

The second demand was to level fund all ALANA RSOs in relation to last year budget. Controversy erupted between ALANA students and the SGA over the disparity between which the coalition and the Ways and Mean Committee defined level funding.

For AHORA, the Ways and Means committee recommended a budget of $8,000 for fiscal year 1997 — which, by their definition, was level funding. The coalition in CAO, however, saw that figure at $10,000 — $2,000 higher than the allocation by Ways and Means.

The debate stems from last year's budget meeting, in which a faction of senators, included representatives from the ALANA and Greek communities, successfully passed a $10,000 cut in the University Productions and Concerts' budget.

That summer, the composition of that senate was found unconstitutional by the Student Judiciary, as it included a disproportionate amount of members from the Greek community.

The sense within SGA is that the cut enacted on the senate floor last year was unjust and unfair. Many senators blame the cancellation of Spring Concert on these actions.

Coker and the Ways and Means Committee decided to interpret level funding not at what was enacted last year, but what was initially recommended by the committee.

This was a primary source of conflict between the SGA and the coalition until the resolution was passed.

The final demand stipulated by the ALANA students was the establishment of constitutional guidelines and criteria to carefully outline the difference between a RSO and a agency.

According to Lizana, if RSOs such as the Black Mass Communication Project and the Black Student Union could achieve agency funding levels while maintaining RSO sovereignty, ALANA students would greatly benefit. However, the SGA constitution did not, at that point, articulate how such a move could be accomplished, and if it was legal in the first place.

The demands were met line by line at the SGA senate meeting that night, in what proved to be both a tense and long session. The ALANA coalition left the Campus Activities Office satisfied and victorious at the outcome.

The ramifications have proven to be far greater than just a set amount of money. Takeover participant Dan Lizana said, "It's about respect."

The feelings on campus in the aftermath of the takeover have been mixed. Inside the Campus Activities Office, a protester said that for the first time this was a fight not between the students and the administration, but between students and the student governing body.

During the takeover, both Chancellor David K. Scott and Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Tom Robinson appeared in the Campus Activities Office. Both attempted to listen, but were unclear of their role. Scott left the office after approximately five minutes, while Robinson remained to assist in negotiations.

"I want to do anything I can to help students. Certainly, this is a unique situation I am in as a mediator," said Robinson.

Robinson said, "The lack of respect [for ALANA students] represents a level of campus climate, we have so many levels of disrespect it is not something that can be fixed right away... we need to sit down and talk it out. One of the most pressing problems is one of human resources."

However, Robinson offered no concrete steps which the administration might take to resolve these issues.

Student Christine Soh said, "The administration is so happy that it is not a direct issue between the administration and the ALANA students. They're glad that this time, it's SGA who's criticized and not Whitmore, but they are just as guilty as the SGA, if not more."

While occupying Campus Activities, Dan Lizana said, "We will have more respect on campus after this is over, people will look at us, and based on what we did here today, give us respect."

Judging by student reactions, the takeover has had great ramifications on the general student body.

Student Michael Chan said, "In the beginning I was against the takeover because I wasn't able to meet with my RSO advisor. But today, as I was postering for Asian night at Haigis Mall, I heard two white women taking about the takeover. They were pretty much anti-takeover, and one of them said, 'Besides, white people are the majority here.'

"I stopped in my footsteps and thought about the flyer that was handed out at the takeover, which talked about respect and I realized that this is about respect, it's about getting respect," he said.

■ Bulger

"How can we help improve the public image of this University?"

"We need to stick with the task at hand," Bulger said. "We need to strive to make this place the best."

Bulger also addressed the statistic that only 12 percent of UMass students ranked within the top 10 percent of their high schools.

"People here know how great the school is and alumni know it too, the problem is that many people within the commonwealth do not know enough about this school," Bulger said.

The president thanked the senate for their hospitality and said that he appreciated everyone's questions.

Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Tom Robinson addressed the senate about the Campus Activities Office takeover by ALANA students.

"Although the financial issues were resolved and apologies were made amongst the SGA and ALANA students, that does not solve the issue," Robinson said. "We need to build a community which makes ALANA students feel that they are actually valued here."

Secretary of the Faculty Senate John Bracey presented a motion of appreciation for Softball Coach Elaine Sortino who recently announced her retirement after 17 years. The motion passed unanimously.

Bracey also addressed the fact that a student was taken out of class by the campus police. "We need to safeguard our students, the campus police should be our last resort. It seems that common sense would have been to wait for the student to leave class."

The trouble with hairy

About a month ago, my colleague Frank and I were taking advantage of several blue light specials at the local K–Mart. In aisle four, I made a crucial decision — it was time to stop prolonging the inevitable. It was time to shave my head bald.

After a bit of coaxing from Frank, I bought an 18 piece set of hair clippers. The package boldly claimed "Pays for itself after two haircuts!"

At the rate my hair grows, I will have paid for my clippers sometime around the 2004 New Hampshire Primary, if ever. It's been four weeks since that fateful K–Mart shopping spree, and my hair has not visibly grown.

Frank is not a barber — he's a history major – but I allowed him to do the honors anyhow. I figured with the amount of hair I had going into the whole thing, there wasn't too much room for him to make many mistakes. He cut my hair in his kitchen, as Frank and I are always concerned with the upkeep of the sanitary conditions of our food preparation areas.

The sad part of the whole thing is that when we were done there really wasn't a hell of a lot of hair on the floor. With one swoop of a broom, the cleanup was done and I was bald.

People tend to act funny around bald people... they tend to think that cracking a bald joke is on lines with spewing out an ethnic slur. Of all the people I know, I am certain that I am the one who cares the least about my receding hair line.

"I'm going bald." I'll say matter-of-factly, as if I were a little kid stating weekend plans to go to an amusement park.

My astonished listener will cover his or her mouth with their hand and say, "I'm so sorry."

Let's end the vanity... male pattern baldness is not a nasty affliction like AIDS or Mad Cow Disease. The treatment for my ailment involves throwing a baseball cap on my head each morning. Not chemotherapy or months of hospitalization. As a society, we place far too much emphasis on looking good, while not enough of our time is spent on being good.

Recently I received a large package in the mail from the "Hair Club For Men." Evidently, one of my friends thought it would be funny to call the 800 number and order the information packet in my name. After reading about the wonderful cures Sy Sperling could give me, I pitched the packet in the trash.

Now they call me. A lot.

"Hi Dave, this is Chris from the Hair Club For Men. Recently you requested information on our products and I was wondering if you've come to a decision about reversing your hair loss?"

"Oh, hi Chris. This is Dave. I was wondering if you've come to a decision about reversing the downward spiral your career is taking given that your job involves harassing me three times a week?"

There are cures, or so they say. Rogaine is available over the counter. Toupees come in many styles and colors. My personal favorite method is the "grow your hair long on one side and comb it over" trick. People who practice this technique are basically proclaiming, "I was so self-conscious about my thinning hair that I decided to draw even more attention to myself by making myself look like a complete dickhead."

Then there was the GLH Hair Care Formula, which most of you will remember as a product featured in a late night infomercial. Basically, GLH provided hair spray for your head, as well as hours of amusement for me.

When it first came out, I'd get a head full of cheap gin and spend countless hours calling the hapless operators at GLH.

"Yes, I was wondering if your product worked on pubic hair."

The GLH operators didn't like me too much after awhile.

The main point I am trying to make today — and this is important — is this: I have spent all week stressing out about what I'd write about today, and now, with deadline looming over me like my chrome dome, I am pulling this column out of my ass.

What we've really learned as freshman

Liana Melinnis

I've decided to compile a list of all the things I've learned during my first year at UMass. At first the list seemed relatively short. I've learned to pay bills, eat horrible food (and actually enjoy it every so often), roll a joint, go weeks without doing laundry, drink cheap beer, and stay up till all hours of the night cramming for an exam. But now that I've really thought about it, I've realized that I'm telling myself and UMass short. My first year as a college student has been everything I ever dreamed it would be. I know that if I were anywhere else my experiences would be completely different. I left home in September a scared, slightly naive, girl, fresh out of high school, and not knowing what to expect... at all. I suspect many of you were the same way.

We all remember the days leading up to September third, savoring each second we had left with our best friends, the promises that were made, the much too long good-bye's. We all remember pulling out of the driveway, driving past old spots, familiar places, saying good-bye to them, as if to never return. We all remember the drive that seemed to last forever, no matter where you were coming from. We arrived with some of the same expectations, and many of the same fears. We went through move-in day, with thousands of other freshman, all in the same situation. We stood in lines, hours long, for elevators, sweating in the summer sun, yelling at our little brothers, parents and bosfriends/girlfriends who were only trying to help. We bade farewell to our parents, and they bade farewell to their baby, their oldest, their second born, somehow knowing we'd have changed when they saw us again. We bade farewell to the lives we once knew, and prepared to embark on the long, tiresome, but incredibly rewarding journey known as college.

As the days turned into weeks and the weeks turned into months we began to get comfortable with this life, and started to really enjoy it. We established our friends, figured out the PVTA bus system, and ventured onto the 26th floor of the library. We ran up $200 phone bills and ordered D.P. Dough just about every night. Through all of this, much more was happening then we were aware of. We grew stronger, more independent, figured out who we really were, and who we could really count on. We got over heartbreaks we never thought we'd recover from, hung out with people we never spoke to in high school, and tried many things for the first time. After the nostalgia died down, we began to fit in, we began to get used to life as a UMass student.

Of course, we acquired a tremendous amount of knowledge from psychology 100 and college writing 112, two popular courses among freshman. We wrote 10, 20 page papers and got hit hard with the realization that college is a hell of a lot harder than any high school course ever was. We became addicted to coffee and Coca–Cola, and lived for Friday nights, when Jose Cuervo became our best friend and savior. We worked hard, we slacked off, we said "I'll kick ass next time," some of us did, others of us didn't.

We watched our basketball team go to the Final Four, we saw Phish, Alanis Morrisette and Natalie Merchant at the Mullins Center. We succeeded, we failed, we had good times, and some pretty bad ones as well, we ran out of money, we worked in the D.C. We realized what we want to do with the rest of our lives, and we concluded that we couldn't be anymore confused in that department. We got A's, we got F's, we got drunk, we got stoned, and then we finally got it together.

Freshman year in college has been, without a doubt, one of the most exciting times in our lives, a time where we have found ourselves. It's taken a lot of adjustments, and I'll admit, it hasn't been a bed of roses, at times it has been a bed of nails. And there are still some things that are hard to get used to, like wearing flip flops everywhere you go, carrying an I.D. card everywhere you go, and seeing new faces everywhere you go. So after we've adjusted to our new lives at UMass, we must prepare for another huge adjustment, the return back to our old lives at home.

I recently watched my sister graduate from UNC–Charlotte and all I could think about was how lucky she was that her hard work had paid off, and that it was finally over. But another part of me felt sorry for her; her college years are over, her time in between teenagehood and adulthood are gone. She has her memories, but we have our future, and that's probably one of the best thoughts to keep a hold on to. As the future of this country, the Class of 1999, we deserve to give ourselves some credit. We made it through our first year of college, and whether you have a 2.0 or a 4.0, congratulations, you made it, and for right now, that's all that really matters.

Michael Jackson's resurrection

Martin F. Jones

When they reached the place called The Skull, there they crucified him and the two criminals, one on his right, the other on his left. Jesus said, 'Father forgive them; they do not know what they are doing.'

— Luke 23: 33-34

Welcome back oh ye faithful readers of the world's greatest college newspaper! Today I've got a real treat in store for you.

Yes, I've got the inside insight on the biggest scandal in entertainment history, the Michael Jackson child–abuse allegations. My bombshell? You wouldn't believe it if you saw it happen with your own eyes.

Michael Jackson was framed with the help of one of his own siblings!

And what, you might ask is the basis for my theory? Simple; extensive research into some of the behind the scenes activity of the Jackson clan.

Two books- Michael Jackson, the Magic and the Madness, and Michael Jackson Unauthorized, form the basis for my finding, in addition to numerous news clippings and magazine articles. However, due to nature of my claims, I do feel obligated to issue the following disclaimer, so as not to appear libelous in any way.

This column represents the opinion of Martin F. Jones, nothing more nothing less. By all means, feel free to accept it as fact or fiction at your own discretion.

Now, let us begin, shall we?

You see, Michael Jackson was set up to take a big fall by none other than his own brother–in–law, Jack Gordon. Gordon, the now estranged husband of sister LaToya, has been working quietly behind the scenes to destroy Michael's career and promote his wife in her brother's place. LaToya, acting as co-conspirator, would ultimately help to betray Michael just as Judas betrayed Christ, as she and Gordon quietly forged the nails which ultimately would be used to crucify the King of Pop.

Remember that it was shortly after LaToya's marriage to Gordon that she began to exhibit a series of bizarre and damaging career moves which proved extremely embarrassing to brother Michael.

First, there was the Playboy centerfold which spoofed Michael with a live boa constrictor slithering between LaToya's shapely legs. (Michael has a pet boa constrictor called "Muscles.")

Then there was the bombshell publication Growing up in the Jackson Family, in which LaToya claimed that both she and Michael were molested as children by their father Joseph. It was here that the issue of child molestation was first used in reference to the pop superstar.

During the height of the scandal, LaToya was at it again, publicly claiming at a Tel Aviv press conference that Michael was, in fact, guilty of the alleged child abuse, and that she had seen evidence of the kids' parents being paid off with million–dollar checks signed by Michael.

And all the while, Gordon, the sneaky slithering slimebag that he is, clearly manipulated poor LaToya in hopes of promoting her in Michael's absence. LaToya, the least talented member of the musical family was probably always jealous of her famous brother. Gordon very likely fed that envy and did all the right things to put her into the public spotlight, for better or for worse. It is also well documented that Gordon, with a number of shady connections in the underworld, did physically abuse LaToya, hurling a chair at her and injuring her face in the process. Clearly, when it came to doing the most serious damage to her brother's reputation, LaToya was probably forcefully coerced into helping to sabotage her brother's career.

Now, there is no concrete evidence that links LaToya and Jack to the scandal, but given the nature of LaToya's relationship with her brother (they were very close growing up) it is just a matter of time before LaToya kicks Jack to the curb and comes clean about why she proclaimed her brother's guilt during the biggest scandal in entertainment history.

Michael guards his personal life so well that it would probably require someone whom he trusts to gain important information about his travels, whereabouts, and personal acquaintances. Someone like his own sister LaToya.

As she is his sister, she would be able to skillfully coordinate an effective strategy towards the destruction of brother Michael's career. She grew up with Michael, changed his diapers as a baby, and could predict his state of mind and next move at every turn.

Armed with such valuable information, Gordon could then make a sizable financial return by selling it to key people whom he would discover to have some personal connection with Michael, (such as the young accuser's father), and to then extort millions from the wealthy entertainer on threats of a fabricated scandal over his son, (who happened to be entwined in a custody battle between him and his ex–wife.) If the extortion plot didn't work, the next logical move would be to make the accusations public, notify the authorities, and launch a multi–million dollar lawsuit against the ephemeral pop singer. With LaToya secretly offering assurances that Michael would be willing to settle out of court for a significant amount of cash, the stage would be set for a combination of easy money for all involved, and the chance at heightened stardom for LaToya following the end of Michael's reign as the King of Pop. The greatest beneficiary in the end would be Gordon himself, as he currently assumes the dual roles of both husband and manager to LaToya.

Now, three years later, King Michael is still hanging on to his throne, albeit with some tarnish remaining. No criminal charges were filed, and a strip search with photographs taken failed to connect Michael to the alleged crime. His brief marriage to Lisa Marie Presley was a significant boost to his reputation, although he continues to frolic publicly with young children. Nonetheless, the scandal did do significant damage, but there are some noteworthy developments in progress.

Number one, Michael's support from within the entertainment community has been unaffected by the scandal, as he pooled together an all–star cast of producers and guest artists for his new album HIStory, Past, Present, and Future Book I. His latest music video, "They Don't Care About Us", is being directed by none other than the highly acclaimed celebrity filmmaker Spike Lee. Add to that his having cleared an extensive background check by his new billionaire Arab business partner, Saudi Prince Wahleed, who will co–sponsor Michael's upcoming World HIStory Tour. Finally, his recent, sheer phenomenal performance at the World Music Awards in Monaco gave the world another reminder of why he is still the undisputed King of Pop.

LaToya, on the other hand, is still festering in obscurity, the plot, if it did take place, having failed to achieve its ultimate goal. Sure, they all probably got paid, but what good is money to a Jackson who has no talent, and desperately wants to be a star? Now having come to her senses and realizing that she was being used to bring down her brother's career, the only thing left to do is to either try again (yes, another scandal attempt), or 'fess up. Either way, the real truth about the scandal will come out eventually for the whole world to see.

And then what?

Expect a huge reaction of sympathy from a public who has just spent the past three years in silent suspicion and skepticism over the reputation of the megastar. Yes, a Michael Jackson renaissance will be in full effect as Michael's voice and likeness will once again dominate the radio and television airwaves. Everyone who believed in Michael's guilt will be compelled to go out and buy his new album, just for having misjudged him so harshly. Add to that Michael bringing his world tour to the United States for the first time in over seven years, as Michaelmania reigns supreme once again.

And what of Michael's weird appearance? His skin is pure white and constantly caked with pounds of makeup. No doubt, the vitiligo may actually become cured, (if he does actually have it) or Michael may actually confess to not being forthright about whether or not he lightened his skin on purpose. Either way, with the departure of his 10–year ghostly pallid complexion, Michael Jackson will magically become transformed, in the eyes of the viewing public, into a totally new person, with the pale–faced, crotch–grabbing, "pervert" banished forever into oblivion. Yes, the real Michael Jackson finally returns home in all of his bronze glory and it is just totally magnificent!

The moral of the story is clear. Michael Jackson is a genius, pure and simple. He is too smart, too savvy, and too resourceful to be done in, even if it's by his own sister. Over the years, he has continued to remake and resurrect himself over and over again. This time around, the results will be sheer mind–boggling. Just wait and see. The King of Pop will be back, and better than ever before.

Classic punk role model to play at Pearl St.

By Mike Burke
Collegian Staff

Forget that Osborne chick, the real Joan is coming to Northampton. The Joan that rocks — the Joan that wears leather and plays loud electric guitar. The Joan that has been a major name in rock for almost twenty years. Joan Jett. A mainstay in the rock scene since the 1970s, Jett has recently come back into the spotlight with her swaggering brand of anthemic, punk–laced rock.

Two years ago Joan Jett collaborated with Bikini Kill on a three song, seven–inch EP featuring the near classic "Rebel Girl." The Kill Rock Stars release re–established Jett as one of the premier female punk rockers and a leading influence on the riot grrrl scene.

Jett has also re–emerged as a favorite on mainstream radio with her cover of "Love is All Around," the theme from the "Mary Tyler Moore Show." Originally she recorded the song as a promotion for the ESPN women's college basketball show but the song caught on.

Jett commented on the song, "Obviously being such a big sports fan and an advocate of women doing what they want, I wanted to help. Plus, I thought it was an opportunity to have fun."

Joan Jett's latest release, Pure and Simple (Warner Bros/ Blackheart) featured her backing band, the Blackhearts (Thommy Price, Tony Bruno and Kenny Aaronson). Reviews were mixed, but the album re–established Jett as a force in the recording industry. Kathleen Hanna of Bikini Kill performed on three tracks as well. Members of L7 and Babes and Toyland also participated on the recording. A number of concerts performed with Bikini Kill, and others, helped to solidify her comeback.

During the 1970s Jett led the all–girl Runaways through a series of classic punk albums that spawned his like "I Love Rock & Roll" and "Crimson and Clover." One of the first all female punk bands, the Runaways were a major influence on a whole generation of women who had never been exposed to major female roll models in rock.

Joan Jett will appear at Pearl Street Friday night. Tickets are $15.

Grafton's latest serves up a cross–country adventure

By Seema Gangadrikar
Collegian Staff

SUE GRAFTON
"L" is for Lawless
Henry Holt & Co.

Kinsey Millhone attracts trouble in a big way. In her latest adventure, "L" is for Lawless, the feisty private investigator takes an unintended jaunt across the country with a couple of felons and ends up with a bump on her head for her troubles and an empty bank balance.

Sue Grafton has been spinning out a whole series of Kinsey Millhone mysteries, starting with "A" is for Alibi. This latest misadventure is typical Kinsey: the detective tries to do a favor for a friend and finds herself, literally, in comedy that leaves her with a pounding headache.

The story begins when Kinsey's landlord, Henry, mentions a small problem that his friend Bucky is having. Thinking that the problem will take only a couple hours, Kinsey agrees to help out Bucky and his wife.

The small problem turns out to be a huge problem when Kinsey spots someone robbing Bucky's house. Within minutes, Kinsey's on the case, following the mysterious stranger to the airport. Eventually she ends up flying halfway across the country and landing in the company of Laura and Ray, a dysfunctional father and daughter pair with problems of their own.

Kinsey learns that Laura and Ray are on a quest for a treasure that Bucky's grandfather hid. Laura and Ray have no idea where the treasure is hidden and to complicate matters, Laura's abusive boyfriend, Gilbert, is on their trail.

"L" is for Lawless is more of a comedy than anything else, filled with mixed–up motives. It's the first in Grafton's series that doesn't actually feature a crime. It starts out slower than other Kinsey Millhone mysteries and doesn't capture the attention quite as well as previous efforts, but this particular addition reflects Kinsey's emerging personality well.

As usual, Grafton is earnest in her portrayal of the flawed heroine and other supporting characters. Unfortunately, this book isn't as solid as the previous books and it almost feels as if Grafton's running out of ideas. B

Japanese animation film fest features good, bad

By Bradley Skaught
Collegian Staff

JAPANESE ANIMATION FESTIVAL
Student Union Ballroom
May 8

On Wednesday night, as part of a week long celebration of Japanese culture, Night on the Galactic Train and Roujin Z, two Japanese animation films, were given a free showing in the Student Union Ballroom. Shown back to back, the two films displayed both the worst and the best that Japanese animation has to offer.

The first film, Night on the Galactic Train, was a heavy–handed, difficult film. Weighed down with long, slow passages, the film spent far too much time lingering on still, emotionless faces and inanimate objects (making irrelevant the entire concept of animation).

Many fundamental elements of the film were equally baffling. Why were the characters multi–colored cats with Italian names? Why were they living in the 1800's? The issues are never dealt with, and the film's overuse of obscure symbolism (milk, stars, milky way — get it? Neither did I) made the film impossible to follow, and the audience disinterested. By the time any action actually took place (a giant steam engine appears in the sky), it was 45 minutes into the film and the audience's unanimous decision to skip it and move to the next film had come in.

Good idea, too, because Roujin Z clearly displayed the intelligence, energy and artistic relevance that Japanese animation is capable of.

Kutsushiro Otomo, creator of the Japanese classic Akira, filled Roujin Z with all the essential elements of humor, action and style all wrapped up in a complex story of a secret military experiment disguised as a Ministry of Public Health elderly assistance program gone haywire. Sound confusing? It would be if Otomo hadn't so carefully paced and developed Roujin Z, injecting its fluid, energetic script with emotional depth and a firmly planted moral foundation. The nursing assistant heroine, her friends and their computer hacking elderly patients all provide the film with its human focus — giving heart to the themes of man vs. machine, and of compassion in the face of technological advance (especially to the elderly).

If the film failed anywhere it was in its less than original animation. Japanese animation has become increasingly predictable and sterile visually, far cries from the ground– breaking and stunning animation of works like Akira. Likewise, misogynistic jokes and sight gags, also far too prevalent in Japanese animation, detract from the otherwise solid and intelligent screenplay.

Watching these two films back to back is a good way to observe both the artistic accomplishments, and shortcomings, in Japanese animation — a wildly popular medium capable of honest artistic accomplishment and intelligent entertainment.

SGA blasts housing cancellation fee

By Michael Elliott
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association took issue with the University's high cancellation fee for entering contracts that would allow a new housing vacancy to occur in a residence hall.

The $ [illegible] fee is charged to students who, [illegible] a housing contract after they return to campus [illegible] Thursday.

The fee was implemented to discourage students [illegible] leaving their rooms or [illegible] assisting the Office Assistant for Admissions Kristin Boe-McDonald.

However, McDonald said that the policy [illegible] be immense inconvenience to students living [illegible]

"It's [illegible] unfair to students [illegible] after [illegible] days," McDonald said. "It doesn't make sense [illegible] month."

McDonald pointed out that the Commuter Services and Housing Policies Office requires that the students begin [illegible] Fall Semester [illegible] after July 15.

The University [illegible] unfairness [illegible] mandating students that they must [illegible] knowledge of their housing [illegible] before they recommend that students begin [illegible] seeking [illegible] assisting Mr. McDonald.

"We are [illegible] unhappy with the [illegible] between the two dates," McDonald said.

Further, McDonald said the SGA was frustrated by the fact that Housing Services made no effort [illegible] students as to why the fee was required in the first place which McDonald indicated [illegible]

In the May 3rd dinner letter [illegible] Residential Life Contract for the academic year [illegible]" which was recently mailed to all students living [illegible] homes made of the cancellation fee.

"Student have no way of knowing what the cancellation fee is," McDonald said. "They haven't sent anything out."

"People are just signing something blindly here," added McDonald.

The Office of Housing Services could not be reached for comment yesterday. However, in a letter dated May 6 from Interim Housing Services Director Michael Gilbert to McDonald, the administration does not acknowledge the five day discrepancy. Gilbert, however did say that a appeal process to waive the fee will be established for students who have specific concerns or difficulties with the housing search process.

"Acceptable grounds for appeal may be made for late financial aid notifications, change in marital status, health and/or dietary needs, exemption from the on-campus housing requirement, or a significant change in personal circumstances and plans," Gilbert said.

McDonald, in addition, said he was concerned with where Housing Services would direct the funds collected from the cancellation fee.

"They stressed that they are not out to make money on this," McDonald said. "But, we are concerned that this will turn into a slush fund."

McDonald, Gilbert and Gerald Quarles, the assistant director for residential support, have been negotiating for over a month on the cancellation fee.

McDonald said that he feels student concerns have been ignored.

Initially, SGA advocated for a two-tier cancellation fee plan. This proposal provided students with a expanded appeals process and three additional weeks to make their final housing decisions.

The SGA was successful in negotiating the fee level down to $500. The Administration initially demanded that the fee to be set at ten percent of the total cost for housing, which would amount to more than $200.

HARAMBEE

(The pulling together point, or the point at which all things come together)
Monday, May 13 @ 7:00 pm
19th Floor Coolidge

Through a celebration of the African diaspora cultures, HARAMBEE, an intentional community, has a mission of aiding its members in academic success. The community will be composed of approximately 33 students of African heritage. One third will be first year students. The address will be the 22nd Floor of Coolidge. Basic expectations of all members include:

- One course from the African diaspora each semester
- Enrollment in a Leadership Development Colloquium
- Attend a monthly Community Meeting
- Affiliation with a community Academic Focus Group
- Participation in the Harambee Mentorship Program

If you miss this Open House you may sign up for this living option by:
1. Going to the Housing Assignments Office in Room 227 Whitmore to complete a housing preference form. Be sure to indicate your interest in Harambee on the form, AND
2. Going to the Southwest/North Area Office in Thoreau to sign the Harambee Living Agreement. You must do this to secure your space in the Harambee Community.

For more information contact Gerald Fonville at 545-1628 or the Southwest/North Area Office at 545-0392.

Boston, San Fran smashed in beer towns

MILWAUKEE (AP) — The first inning was a disaster for the Boston Red Sox and the next eight were worse.

Milwaukee knocked out Boston starter Aaron Sele with six runs in the first inning Thursday and used 17 hits and 10 walks to pound the Red Sox 17-2.

"The tone was set in the first inning and it basically just got worse," Red Sox manager Kevin Kennedy said. "Nobody really came in and shut the door. That basically took us right out of the game."

Sele (1-3), limited to six games last season with arm problems, lasted just two-thirds of an inning, the shortest outing of his career. He allowed six earned runs on five hits with two walks and one strikeout.

Jose Valentin, Mike Matheny and Turner Ward each had three RBIs for the Brewers while leadoff hitter Fernando Vina scored four times. The 17 runs are a Brewers' season high and the most since a club-record 22 on Aug. 22, 1992 against Toronto.

"I prefer to think of it as good offense. It wasn't altogether bad defense," Brewers manager Phil Garner said. "We were patient at the plate today and we struck the ball well."

Ricky Bones (2-5) allowed two runs on six hits in seven innings. He struck out three and walked two. Kevin Wickander pitched the eighth and Mike Fetters pitched the ninth.

The difference today was on a 1-1 count. I was able to throw a strike so I was ahead in the count," Bones said. "And, lately my sinker wasn't working for me. Today the ball was dropping down. The last two games it was flat in the strike zone."

Vina singled to open the first inning. After Kevin Seitzer struck out, Valentin singled and Greg Vaughn walked to load the bases. John Jaha singled home Vina and Valentin to make it 2-0. Dave Nilsson walked to reload the bases and Matt Mieske followed with a sacrifice fly, scoring Vaughn.

Pat Listach singled home Jaha to make it 4-0 and Matheny followed with a two-run single. Jamie Moyer relieved Sele and retired Vina on an infield pop out to end the inning.

"They blooped some hits in there and then I walked a couple of guys and that makes for a long inning," Sele said. "As a starting pitcher, your job is to keep it close. You throw up a six-spot in the first inning, then they have a big hole to dig out of." Boston scored a run in the fourth on Reggie Jefferson's double and Wil Cordero's two-out RBI-single.

Milwaukee answered with three runs in the bottom of the fourth to make it 9-1.

The Brewers added an unearned run in the fifth inning on Valentin's sacrifice fly after center fielder Alex Cole misplayed Seitzer's fly ball for a two-base error.

Mo Vaughn opened the sixth inning with his 10th home run to make it 10-2. Turner Ward's two-run pinch homer highlighted Milwaukee's four-run sixth.

"By that time, all I needed to do was throw strikes," Bones said. "Just keep the game rolling along and don't get into a big inning. If you're going to give up a long ball, just make sure nobody is on base."

Cardinals 16, Giants 8

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Willie McGee had the St. Louis Cardinals reaching for the record books yesterday.

"I don't know anything about those kinds of records. I'm just taking everything one game at a time," McGee said hitting a grand slam and driving in five runs during an 11-run eighth inning that gave the Cardinals a 16-8 win over the San Francisco Giants. It was the biggest inning for the Cardinals since an 11-run eighth against the New York Mets on July 18, 1964. The team record of 12 was set in the third inning against Philadelphia on Sept. 15, 1926.

St. Louis won for just the fourth time in 16 games, scoring its most runs since a 16-6 rout of Florida on Aug. 5, 1993.

It was the second straight day St. Louis had a grand slam, following Ron Gant's in a seven-run seventh on Wednesday night. It was the second of McGee's career.

"I don't think about things like that. I just do what I'm capable of doing, no matter what the situation is," McGee said. "I'm just trying put the bat on the ball."

If McGee was downplaying his heroics, Cardinals manager Tony La Russa was not shy about doling out praise.

"He's a treasure, I just don't want to wear him out," La Russa said. "He's playing more this year than we thought he would, we're just glad to have him."

Jeff Parrett (2-1) pitched 1 2-3 innings for the win and Mark Dewey (1-2) was the loser.

Barry Bonds hit his league-leading 15th homer for the Giants. Luis Alicea drove in four runs for the Cardinals, who out-hit San Francisco 16-6.

Giants starter Osvaldo Fernandez left after four innings with back spasms. He allowed five runs and eight hits. Cardinals starter Donovan Osborne gave up all eight runs — only one earned — and five hits in 6 1-3 innings.

San Francisco led 8-5 when John Mabry led off the eighth with a single off Rich DeLucia. Tom Pagnozzi walked and McGee hit a pinch-RBI single. Royce Clayton's single off Dewey loaded the bases, and Alicea's two-run single tied the score.

Ozzie Smith sacrificed, putting runners on second and third, and Mark Sweeney's two-run double gave St. Louis a 10-8 lead. Ray Lankford was walked intentionally, Brian Jordan singled to load the bases and Mabry hit an RBI single off Doug Creek.

diamond. The six-foot-two sophomore from Crestwood, Ill. boasts a .305 batting average with 51 hits, 52 RBI and 14 homeruns. In addition to his impressive presence behind the plate, Dallio is a threat once he's reached the basepath with 10 stolen bases on 11 attempts.

Also leading the way for the Musketeer bats is freshman Rodd Hampson who leads the team in batting with a .340 average.

Streak or no streak, the Minutemen are at the top of their game. Sophomore second baseman Muchie Dagliere leads UMass in batting with a .433 average on 65 hits, 43 RBI, in addition to 11 stolen bases.

In addition to Dagliere, Massachusetts boasts seven batters each hitting above .300. Junior shortstop Brad Gorrie owns a .378 average going into the post-season on 48 hits and 27 RBI. Senior leftfielder Ryan Jette is third on the batting list with a .368 with 63 hits and 21 RBI. Gorrie and Jette have combined for 57 stolen bases, with 29 and 28 respectively. In fact, Gorrie and Jette rank No. 1 and No. 2 in the A-10 in stolen bases with averages of .68 and .63 respectively.

The Minutemen's slugger-in-residence is junior centerfielder Nate Murphy, who leads the team in home runs with seven on a .358 average.

The winner of the Massachusetts/Xavier set plays the winner of the day's other game. The No. 2 team in the East, Temple faces the No. 1 team in the West, Virginia Tech. First pitch for UMass is set for 4 p.m.

pitchers we've seen this year," Marist coach Jonnah O'Donnell said. "After the first game I had a good feeling going into the second game because my kids were putting the ball in play, but she just over-powered us [in the second game]."

"She's just going to get better too," Stevens said. "We're still just at the tip of the iceberg with her. She was very dependable today. Whatever I called she was right in that general area. When she got behind in the count she got right back and didn't dig herself in deep and start to rattle. I didn't ever feel like she was not in control of the game at any point. She was calm and confident and the one time she did get into trouble, she knew that there was a billion ways out of it.

"She's getting rock solid."

Perhaps the most frightening sight of things to come for UMass opponents came late in the mercy-rule slaughter of the Red Foxes, when Henderson made the long-awaited debut of her knuckle-ball.

The antithesis of her blazing Randy Johnson-styled fastball, the fluttering off-speed pitch baffled Marist batters beyond belief.

"It finally worked," an excited Henderson said. "I've been trying and I haven't been able to throw it, so Mona couldn't call it [in a game]. Finally I just relaxed and threw it."

"We've been trying to work that in and she's started to do a good job with that," Stevens said. "She's been off and on with that, but we decided it was a good time to start throwing it in [during a game]. She's got potential for that pitch. It's going to be huge and a very big pitch for her."

Good hitting, an old adage says, is all timing, and good pitching is breaking up that timing. For this reason many teams feared playing the Texas Rangers a few years ago, wary of facing knuckleball legend Charile Hough one night, and the flame-throwing Nolan Ryan the next.

Just the thought that Henderson's opponents now have to make this adjustment within an at-bat could throw some beyond the verge of insanity.

Simply watching it from the press box is frightening enough.

Clark picked up another point for the squad for sixth in the open fences.

Another team member, co-captain Karen Hancock, was awarded the Academic Achievement Award, presented to riders who have three years intercollegiate showing experience and a cumulative grade point average over 3.5.

Hancock attributed the team's success to the dedication of coaches, Wendy Ciccia and Julie Watson.

"They successfully managed 23 team members with limited funds to bring us to the Nationals for the third straight year," Hancock said.

Denny McLain indicted

By Amy Yuhn
Associated Press

DETROIT — Denny McLain, who won 31 games for the Detroit Tigers in 1968, bought a condominium in Puerto Rico and covered expenses for his private plane with funds stolen from a meat company pension plan, a federal indictment released yesterday alleges.

McLain and two business partners are accused of transferring more than $12 million of pension plan money from Peet Packing Co. in Chesaning to Michigan National Bank, then converting $3 million of that for personal and Peet Packing use.

McLain, 52, of Brighton, already has served 2 1/2 years in prison on a racketeering, extortion and drug charges. In this latest matter, he was charged on five counts of conspiracy, theft of pension plan money, mail fraud and money laundering.

The money laundering charge carries a possible penalty of 20 years in prison and fine of $500,000 or twice the value of the property involved, whichever is greater. The other counts are punishable by five years and $250,000 fines.

Also charged were Roger Smigiel, 44, of Rochester Hills; and Jeffrey Egan, 35, of Bloomfield Hills.

The three are expected to appear in court Monday, U.S. Attorney's Office spokeswoman Sandy Palazzolo said.

McLain has said the transfers were made by the partners without knowledge they might be breaking rules.

"There was no intention to do anything wrong," he said earlier. "We took nothing from anybody."

McLain's lawyer, David DuMouchel, said his client doesn't dispute many of the events outlined in the indictment.

"Now that we see specifically what the allegations are, Denny can have the opportunity to explain what did and didn't happen," DuMouchel said.

The indictment said the stolen funds also went to pay for the operating expenses and pilot's salary for McLain's private plane, a country club membership for Smigiel and to cover the payroll of employees of other companies owned by the two.

When asked how these purchases could be explained, DuMouchel said, "They'll be explained."

Mark Steckloff, an attorney for the pension fund, said he expects to file a civil lawsuit against McLain and others this month seeking to recover money looted from the fund.

The fund, now administered by a board of trustees, is making payments to about 500 former Peet Packing employees who qualify for pension payments. But future funding could be affected if the lost money isn't recovered.

McLain and Smigiel appointed themselves trustees of the Peet Packing retirement income plan two weeks after buying the company in January 1994. Egan formed two "shell corporations" in the meantime, U.S. Attorney Saul Green said.

McLain's position as trustee was illegal because he is an ex-convict, Green said.

He was released from federal prison in 1987. He had been sentenced to 23 years but an appeals court ruled he didn't get a fair trial.

In South Carolina, McLain was ordered in December to pay $75,000 to former business partners for a radio station deal gone sour. McLain pitched for the Tigers from 1963-70. In 1968, he led the Tigers to a World Series title and won the Cy Young Award.

Grambling linebacker shot; former teammate arrested

GRAMBLING, La. (AP) — Grambling linebacker Valmond "JB." Brown, who was named to the All-Southwestern Conference and All-Louisiana second teams as a sophomore, was shot to death by a former teammate early yesterday.

Police arrested Tilicius "Troy" Irvin, 20, and charged him with second degree murder in the 12:10 a.m. shooting at the Darrow Community Center in Brown's hometown of Gonzales. Irvin is being held in the Ascension Parish jail on $100,000 bond.

Brown, 20, shot once in the head and once in the chest, was pronounced dead on arrival at Riverview Medical Center in Gonzales.

Brown and Irvin had been teammates at East Ascension High School four years ago.

"The initial confrontation occurred between two groups of partygoers, with Irvin and Brown taking part," said Ascension Parish deputy chief Jeff Wiley. "The groups got into a fight, which was broken up. Then a minute or two later, shots were fired in the parking lot and Brown was hit."

Brown is survived by a wife, Lynn, and two children: Kentrell, 5, and Dominique, 3 months.

News of Brown's death sent the Grambling athletic department into mourning.

"It was a great shock to learn of this tragedy," Grambling coach Eddie Robinson said. "He was the soul of our defense last year and kept us in games many times.

"It's hard to think about losing a young player this early in life. Our sympathies go out to his family and relatives."

An impact player at strong safety and outside linebacker, Brown led the Tigers with 87 tackles and five sacks last season. He also forced six fumbles and returned one fumble for a touchdown. Brown ranked second on the team with 89 tackles in 1994.

Brown was small by outside linebacker standards at 6-foot, 205 pounds, but his No. 26 was recognizable making big plays in nearly every Grambling game.

In addition to his All-SWAC and All-Louisiana honors, Brown also was voted Grambling's Most Outstanding Player and Most Outstanding Linebacker in 1995.

Butler and Cone out indefinitely

ATLANTA (AP) — Sidelined with cancer, Los Angeles Dodgers center fielder Brett Butler is not giving up.

"We're going to beat this thing. One of these days I'm going to be back out there tipping my hat, and hopefully everything will be all right," Butler said Wednesday, five days after a surgeon removed a plum-sized tumor that grew in his right tonsil.

The 38-year-old Butler, who once played for the Atlanta Braves and makes his home in suburban Duluth, did not rule out a return to the playing field this season.

"I don't know. Let's wait," he told television station KNBC of Los Angeles, which sent a reporter to Atlanta to interview him.

"Is there a chance that I could play this year? Talking to all the doctors and everything, I don't know if there is a chance that I can come back. If it is, it would probably be late in the season. Then again, we're not going to close any door right now," he said.

Butler said he was "overwhelmed" by the response from friends and fans.

Dr. Robert Gadlage, who was treating Butler for tonsillitis for the past two months, said he tried to conceal his shock when he looked into his throat minutes before a scheduled routine tonsillectomy.

It took a 90-minute operation Friday to remove the tumor. A routine tonsillectomy takes 15 minutes. Lab tests confirmed the cancer Tuesday. Butler will have surgery May 21 to remove an abnormal lymph gland, then six weeks of radiation.

Gadlage said Grist "didn't say anything about (Butler's) career being over. He did say it wouldn't be wise for him to try to go back this year."

He said the national recovery rate for this type of cancer is close to 70 percent, "but you've got to add at least a few percentage points" for Butler because he's in such good physical condition.

Gadlage told a news conference in Duluth that Butler came to him on his way to spring training, complaining of a sore throat and swollen neck.

He treated Butler with antibiotics and steroids and the warning, "If you're not better I want to hear from you."

Gadlage checked Butler again a month later in the Dodgers clubhouse at Vero Beach, Fla., after a game against the Braves. "It really didn't look a whole lot different," he said. "He said it didn't feel better, it didn't feel worse to him, it was about the same. We had tried him on several rounds of antibiotics and he was not improving."

Butler was placed on the disabled list May 2. The surgery was done at Eastside Medical Center in Snellville, another Atlanta suburb.

The tumor may have been caused by secondhand exposure to cigarette smoke, the surgeon said.

"The biggest risk (for this type of cancer) is some exposure to nicotine," Gadlage said.

Gadlage and Butler downplayed the significance of the ballplayer's use of chewing tobacco early in his career. They said both of Butler's parents smoked, so he was exposed to secondhand smoke consistently as a child.

Butler told KNBC-TV of Los Angeles that both his mother and father were "big smokers."

"We've heard that there's secondary smoke that can cause that," Butler told KNBC.

"The last time I dipped was 15 years ago, so to say that was the reason why I got this I think is reaching for something that isn't there," Butler said. "It isn't from me dipping tobacco 15 years ago that caused this."

Butler said his throat is expected to remain sore for about 10 days, "and then, hopefully, things will settle down a little bit."

NEW YORK (AP) — David Cone will have surgery Friday to repair an aneurysm in his right shoulder, and the team physician of the New York Yankees expects him to pitch again.

Cone, one of baseball's most consistent and durable pitchers, will be operated on at Columbia-Presbyterian Medical Center, where he has been since Tuesday when the small aneurysm was discovered. Team physician Dr. Stuart Hershon, who will participate in the surgery, said he anticipated "good results."

"Based on a lot of factors, its location... the optimism is well-founded," Hershon said.

Asked if he thought Cone could pitch again, Hershon said, "We expect him to, yes."

The Yankees announced the latest developments in a two-sentence statement shortly before last night's game with the Detroit Tigers.

Hershon, an orthopedic surgeon, will be joined by another orthopedist and two vascular surgeons. The procedure will be headed by the vascular team.

An aneurysm, a dilation of a blood vessel, is most often found in the heart and brain, where it poses the greatest danger. Hershon wouldn't elaborate on the operation or say whether Cone will be sidelined for the season.

"We haven't even done the surgery yet," Hershon said several times. "... First things first: We want him to come through surgery and then we'll worry about pitching."

Hershon said Cone had received successful treatment to "increase and improve" the circulation in his right hand. Numbness in Cone's hand and fingers forced the 33-year-old right-hander to be hospitalized twice this season.

"It has worked, I'm happy to say," Hershon said.

Hershon said Cone's "spirits were good," and the last 72 hours had consisted of consultations before doctors decided to operate. Based on procedures performed on two pitchers with similar numbness, Cone could be out for the year. Steve Soderstrom, currently pitching for Triple-A Phoenix, and Kevin Rogers, pitching in Pittsburgh's extended spring training, both had season-ending operations in 1994.

Before the surgery was announced, manager Joe Torre expressed relief that the cause of the numbness had been determined. "If we didn't discover it by June, then things could be much worse," Torre said.

Cone, 4-1 with an AL-leading 2.03 ERA, had been scheduled to pitch Tuesday night. But he missed a start for just the second time in his career after doctors found the aneurysm in the front part of the shoulder.

in the second, extending her streak of Red Foxes retired to 18 and 27-of-28 in both games. Defensive replacement Rachel Ammons came up in the top of third, and as fate would have it, dropped a popped-up bunt over Cardenas's head for an infield single. Marist's first base hit of the game.

The Red Foxes followed Ammons lead and quickly loaded the bases, but Gutridge made a nice back-handed stab at a well-hit ground ball to end the inning and thwart Marist's first and only real scoring threat.

The Minutewomen answered Marist's threat with a great, and somewhat strange, scoring threat of their own in the fifth but were only able to muster a single run.

Osier tapped back to the mound to start the inning, but Hudson couldn't handle the play and had no chance to recover in time to throw out the fastest Minutewoman. Cardenas ripped a single to right putting runners at the corners with no outs for Mareina, with Gutridge on deck. Someone apparently missed a sign and Cardenas was caught stealing. Mareina then struck out bringing Gutridge to the plate with a runner on third and two outs. Gutridge didn't need to get a hit as Hudson unleashed a wild pitch and Osier scored easily from third.

UMass tacked on the obligatory eighth run to invoke the mercy rule, and Henderson pounded the nails in the Marist coffin striking out five in the last three innings to ensure the Minutewomen a berth in the NCAA tournament.

THANG VO / COLLEGIAN

The Massachusetts softball team easily captured both ends of its NCAA play-in doubleheader with Marist College yesterday at Totman Field. The Minutewomen won, 3-0 and 8-0.

Ripken nearing world record

By David Ginsburg
Associated Press

BALTIMORE — Baseball is once again a team game for Cal Ripken.

Instead of thinking about a consecutive games streak, the Baltimore Orioles shortstop is eager to help his team put together a winning streak. Instead of chasing Lou Gehrig, Ripken is a part of the Orioles' quest to overtake the New York Yankees in the AL East.

It's quite a departure from last year, when the Orioles were big news for one reason: Ripken's pursuit of Gehrig's major-league record of 2,130 straight games played, a mark that was shattered on the emotional night of Sept. 6.

"It seemed like the season should have been over at that point," Ripken said recently. "It was difficult, mentally, to play those last 20 games or so."

Ripken followed his record-breaking night with an 0-for-15 slide, but this year there have been few distractions as he channels his energy toward helping the Orioles win their first pennant since 1983.

"On the whole, it seems like the focus is much more back where it should be — with the success and activities of the club," he said. "I think things are slowing down and getting back to some sense of normalcy."

For now, that is.

It won't be long before Ripken once again grabs headlines for his incredible staying power, this time as he closes in on baseball's world record — the 2,215 games played by Sachio Kinugasa with Japan's Hiroshima Carp from Oct. 19, 1970, to Oct. 22, 1987.

Ripken is fewer than 30 games away from becoming baseball's all-time Iron Man — in any language, any country. Barring rainouts, he will tie Kinugasa's record June 12 in Detroit and pass the mark the following night in Kansas City.

"I don't know what to expect that night, just like I didn't know what to expect last year," Ripken said. "I don't know what the overall significance is. Intellectually, of course, I know what it means. But how that translates to any kind of festivities or added responsibility on my part, I have no idea."

Certainly, Kinugasa's record isn't nearly as notable in America as Gehrig's mark. Virtually every baseball fan knew that Gehrig played in 2,130 straight games; in contrast, few refer to Kinugasa by name and the number 2,215 is hardly etched in anyone's mind — even Ripken's.

Asked last week if he knew how many straight games Kinugasa played, Ripken shrugged his shoulders and shook his head. But that doesn't undermine his respect for the man's streak.

"The world record should be acknowledged because it's still a tremendous accomplishment, whether it's in the Japanese league or whether it's in the American League.

"It's a tribute to perseverance, a tribute to the sport. I've always understood that, and I've always recognized that as an accomplishment," Ripken said.

The Royals organization feels that way, too. Team officials intend to honor Ripken on June 13, although there are no plans to make the evening anything close to the lavish affair at Camden Yards last year.

"We plan to have Sachio Kinugasa here to be a part of what happens, and we'd obviously like to make the night a memorable one," said Denny Trease, the team's director of communications. "We certainly don't think we can top what happened in Baltimore, but we want to recognize the feat."

Kinugasa, now a part-time journalist for one of Japan's largest newspapers, plans to cover the event and is expected to participate in news conferences in both Detroit and Kansas City.

The hoopla won't end on the road, because the Orioles also plan to honor the new world record-holder when the Orioles return home June 17.

Until that time, Ripken will just keep on showing up at the ballpark with the intention of playing at least nine innings.

"I try not to think about it. I try to keep my focus as pure, as honest as I can," he said. "I come to the ballpark with the idea that I want to play and help us win on a daily basis." That alone is what motivates Ripken, and it's a main reason why he is quick to downplay his amazing streak.

Women's crew to race in Eastern Sprints

By Stephen Reich
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's crew is gearing up for the Eastern Sprints on Sunday, May 13, at Lake Waramaug in New Preston, Conn.

The varsity is ranked fifth and has the potential to win the race.

"I think we are better [than fifth], that's why they have to race [to prove it]. I think it's great to have No. 2 Princeton in our heat, that will help for the final," UMass coach Jim Dietz said.

"I don't know what to expect that night, just like I didn't know what to expect last year," Ripken said. "I don't know what the overall significance is. Intellectually, of course, I know what it means. But how that translates to any kind of festivities or added responsibility on my part, I have no idea."

The horse, a 3-year-old gelding named Harmony, is winless in six races.

• Tremaine Fowlkes, the Pac-10 Freshman of the Year, has announced that he will transfer from California to Fresno State in order to play for Jerry Tarkanian.

Fowlkes, a 6-foot-7 forward, was suspended for 14 games last year for allegedly accepting money from an agent to buy a car.

• Also in the world of college basketball Cal's Shareef Abdur-Rahim announced that he will forego his remaining years of college and bite the bait of the pros.

Iowa's Jess Settles has announced that the lure of big money is too great for him to resist as well.

• Harris County Judge Robert Eckles is trying to pitch a plan to keep the Houston Oilers from moving to Tennessee. His $400 million-plus plan would mean some serious work for contractors in the Houston area.

There are two versions of the plan. The first calls for the Astrodome to be refurbished in order to house the Oilers and the Houston Livestock Show and Rodeo, while a twin dome would be built for the baseball Astros.

The other plan would call for the Astrodome to be reconfigured for baseball, with another facility for football and horses.

One question — are the Oilers really worth $200 million?

• WBC Champion Mike Tyson did a little charity work recently.

At Chalker High School, about a mile from Tyson's home, the boxing champ put down his gloves in order to play a little hoop. A team of Tyson and several of his friends took on a group of coaches from the school.

Team Tyson won, 97-89. The event raised approximately $4,000.

There is no truth to the rumor that Tyson asked the head cheerleader for her phone number.

• There is absolutely no reason for ESPN2 to have a show called RPM 2-night. No reason.

First of all, I have serious doubts about even calling NASCAR a sport. All the drivers have to do, technically, is take left hand turns. They drive around in a circle for pete's sake.

The commercials for the show have a mock announcement that cartoon character Speed Racer is joining the circuit. That would be more interesting than watching the near-coma inducing Chick-Fil-A 500.

But then again, watching metal rust would be more interesting.

So what is ESPN2 thinking giving the sport a nightly show? NHL 2-night, definitely. NBA 2-night, sure. RPM 2-night? What next?

I can see it now... Rake Fighting 2-night.

Henderson, Minutewomen easily handle Marist

By Fred Hurlbrink, Jr.
Collegian Staff

On Totman Field yesterday, the UMass softball team played themselves into the NCAA tournament by virtue of a pair of victories over Northeast Conference Champion Marist College.

The twin bill was dominated by the pitching performance of UMass freshman Danielle Henderson, who did n't allow a run in her 13 innings of work on the afternoon.

Massachusetts 3, Marist College 0

Henderson, who pitched both games, held the Red Foxes at bay for the duration of the first game as she pitched her first collegiate no-hitter, striking out two and not walking anyone. Henderson was an uncharacteristic Kim Gutridge error away from recording a perfect game.

Massachusetts	3

Gutridge atoned for her miscue by notching the final two putouts of the contest.

As for the Minutewoman offense, it didn't waste much time putting a run on the board in the bottom of the second. Kelly Buckley led off the frame with a stand-up, slide stumble over-the-bag triple.

Freshman shortstop Ashlie Hayes quickly followed with a sacrifice fly to straight away left field, giving Henderson an early one-run advantage.

Henderson didn't need any more than that as she set down the first nine Red Foxes that came to the plate. Marla Saracino, Marist's lead-off hitter reached on the Gutridge error to start the fourth, but her mental lapse was rapidly erased as Henderson showed tremendous poise in retiring the next three.

Gutridge came up first in the home half of the fourth and belted a double into right-center field. After Buckley was bunted by Marist ace Michelle Hudson, Gutridge was pulled in favor of speedy frosh, Katie Kenderski. Hayes advanced both runners with a perfect sacrifice bunt, and Amy Powell knocked a sac-fly that scored Kenderski to put UMass up 2-0.

Chris Martens drove in an insurance run in the bottom of the sixth and Henderson almost effortlessly retired the last 12 Red Foxes to give the Minutewomen a not-as-close-as-it- sounds, 3-0 win.

"She (Henderson) was amazing. She just went and threw her game," Buckley said.

Massachusetts 8, Marist College 0 (6 innings)

"What we need to do is we need to keep our focus," UMass third sacker Sam Cardenas said. "We need to get out there. Start early. We just need to get it done."

And get it done they did in the second game, storming out of the gates with three first-inning tallies.

Cardenas herself got it going by hitting the first of three straight Minutewoman triples to start the game and scoring on a throwing error. Centerfielder Stephanie Mareina stroked her own three-bagger and scored on a Gutridge three-base blast. Buckley rapped the fourth consecutive hit to start the inning, driving home Gutridge and capping off Massachusetts' first-inning scoring spree.

Massachusetts	8
Marist	0

"We were set," Buckley said. "We knew what we had to do and we were all over her [Hudson]. We were all ready to play."

Henderson was ready to pitch as well, taking the mound for the second game and picking up right where she left off, putting the side down in order in the bottom of the first.

In the top of the second, her teammates went right back to putting runs on the board. Tracy Osier led off the inning with an infield hit and consequently stole second, her 23rd theft of the year. With that steal, Osier broke her own stolen base mark, which she set last season.

Following Osier, Cardenas popped out and Mareina singled and stole second bringing up Gutridge, the Atlantic 10's Player of the Year. Gutridge lashed a double in the gap, scoring both runners to put Massachusetts on top, 5-0.

Henderson set down Marist's four, five and six hitters

Freshman phenom throws first no–hitter

By Leigh Torbin
Collegian Staff

In the final NCAA play-in series of her illustrious 17-year coaching career, Elaine Sortino opted to start Danielle Harry Henderson, playing in the first series of her young career.

Under the pressure of having the team's season on the line, and asked to pitch two complete-games, the freshman phenom responded with a mesmerizing no-hitter, the first of her career, and showed no signs of fatigue in the second game, throwing a complete-game four-hit shutout with eight strikeouts.

The fact that she was pitching an NCAA play-in game was lost on the fire-baller as she exhibited poise well beyond her years on the mound.

"I don't think Harry even thinks about [pressure]," associate coach Mona Stevens, who handles the team's pitchers said. "She just gets out there and throws. She doesn't get really excited or really down, she's just right there all the time. She takes that into big games and it doesn't change her.

"She doesn't get rattled. She's settling in and not trying to over-pitch. She's just hitting her spots and trying to stay settled. She's not trying to do anything fancy. She's staying nice and sweet with her motion and hitting her spots."

"She was cranking today," catcher Kelly Buckley said. "She just went out and threw the way she throws. She doesn't change anything. She just throws."

"Whenever the ball was hit everybody made the play," Henderson said. "In the first game I didn't strike a lot of people out, but we made all the plays in the field."

Henderson walked none, for only the second time this year in a complete-game, as the only Marist runner reached on what was unquestionably an error at first. Officials from both teams agreed that it was a botched play and not a hometown scoring decision.

Regardless of Henderson's dominance, Sortino did not even have to consider who to start in the second game of the doubleheader, completing her line-up card far quicker than usual for the night cap.

"Harry," she said afterwards. "There was no decision."

After her no-hitter, Henderson, and her microscopic 0.91 ERA, took to the hill for a second time, and got fans thinking of the only thing more sensational, a perfect game.

Through two innings, she was flawless and had retired 27 of 28 batters on the day as defensive replacement Rachel Ammons strode to the plate leading off the third.

Ammons bloooped an astounding bunt just over Sam Cardenas' head at third, and just far enough away from shortstop Ashlie Hayes to sneak in for a bunt single.

The hit had minimal effects on Henderson, though, as she cruised through the duration of the game, striking out eight and allowing four hits.

"She's probably one of the top two

Ripken is truly amazing; 'Bama may face probation

Cal Ripken is nearing another incredible mark.

Last year, on Sept. 6, Ripken broke Lou Gehrig's seemingly unbreakable consecutive game-record of 2130- games. Now, he is nearing the world record for consecutive games played.

Currently the world record is held by Sachio Kinugasa, who played with the Hiroshima Carp from Oct. 19, 1970 to Oct. 22, 1987. Kinugasa played in 2215 consecutive games.

If Mother Nature doesn't get in the way, Ripken should tie the record in Detroit on June 12. He should claim the distinction as his own the next night in Kansas City.

It's amazing to think that such an incredible record will be broken in our lifetime. Cal Ripken, you truly are a legend.

• The University of Alabama football team might be on probation again.

Two players have lost their eligibility until an investigation into tire loans can be completed. Two outstanding loans, of $1,000 and $190, were guaranteed by Boyd Sutherland of Bojo's Mag Wheels and Accessories.

That sounds like a reputable lending institution to me...

A spokesman for the football team said that four or five other players had lost their eligibility late last year for dealing with Bojo's.

Alabama is already on a three-year probation for rules violations involving former defensive back Antonio Langham, who signed with an agent, and Gene Jelks, a defensive back who, coincidentally enough, obtained an improper loan.

A groom caught 48-year-old Jesus Barriga in the animal's stall April 29, lying in the hay next to the horse with his pants down, authorities said.

He was also charged with criminal trespass for allegedly breaking the lock of the track gate and entering the stall. Barriga, who was freed without bail, could get up to a year in jail.

Baseball to face Xavier in A–10s

DIANE KEENAN / COLLEGIAN

The Massachusetts baseball team will try for its second straight Atlantic 10 Tournament title this weekend in Boyertown, Penn. The Minutemen face Xavier today at 4 p.m. in the first game.

By Chris Stamm
Collegian Staff

Things had gotten easy for the Massachusetts baseball team.

On Tuesday, the Minutemen destroyed the University of New Hampshire 18-1, earning their 18th consecutive win (the longest win streak in Div. I baseball) and had secured the No. 1 spot in the Atlantic 10 East. Next up for UMass was Harvard, a squad they trounced 13-2 last month.

Things took a turn for the worse on Wednesday when the Minutemen fell to the Crimson 11-10, the day before they were scheduled to travel to Boyertown, Pa. for the A-10 Tournament. The loss gave them a record of 33-10 overall, 15-5 in the A-10.

Is this good? Is this bad? To the team, it doesn't matter.

"If we went into the tournament with a win, people would say, '19 game winning streak. They've got to lose the first one of the tournament,'" said senior first baseman Justin Kelly. "I guess this way we're going into the tourney with a clean slate. You never want to lose a game, but I don't know I'll tell you after the tournament."

First up for UMass is Xavier, the No. 2 seed in the West. The Musketeers travel to Boyertown with a 26-25 record.

"We want to focus on the tournament," said UMass coach Mike Stone, "that's the main thing. It would have been nice to win and keep the streak going, but the pressure of the streak is gone, so maybe that's a good thing."

Pressure or not, the team has to be on its mark going into the post-season play.

"You can't take anyone for granted," said UMass coach Mike Stone. "You can't just show up, throw your glove on and expect to win."

Especially with players like Musketeer catcher Jim Dallio on the

When the President of the Intercollegiate Horse Show Association, Bob Caccione opened the National Intercollegiate Horse Show, he made special mention of "an extremely dedicated" team in attendance at the competition.

This team, while it doesn't receive a lot of attention from its school, had sworn back in September that it was going to meet him for the season-closing event in California.

The team is from the University of Massachusetts, and while the squad doesn't have the varsity status of other University teams, it has achieved quite a bit of success in its own right.

The UMass equestrian team placed 10th this past weekend at the Nationals in Burbank, Calif. The event closed a long and challenging season for the riders. Just to make it to that point, they had to emerge victoriously over the other schools in their own region, which includes Smith and Mount Holyoke Colleges.

The show marked the team's third straight appearance in the Nationals, a streak which follows a dry spell of 20 years. Last year, it placed fifth overall in Colorado and two years ago it tied for last in Texas.

While only a few members of the team had the opportunity to compete in California, their success was the result of a total team effort. In fact, the UMass team had the largest contingent of riders and spectators present at the Nationals, despite the obvious problems of getting there, a true indication of the riders' team spirit.

The way the three-day competition is set up, individual riders and teams have the chance to prove their mettle separately. UMass made waves in both categories.

Two riders, Jacquie Turcotte and Carrie Edgington, qualified during the season to compete in individual categories. In the Beginner Division, Turcotte turned quite a few heads as she brought home first place in the walk/trot finals. She was presented with the Miller's Collegiate Saddle among other prizes for her excellence.

Edgington did quite well herself taking ninth in the intermediate over-fences competition.

As a team, UMass placed 10th overall, buoyed by strong performances from Allison Bozarth and Heather Clark. Bozarth was the reserve champion (second place) in the novice flat division, and also picked up a point for finishing sixth in the over-fences competition.

Five soldiers wounded in Southern Lebanon

MARJAYOUN, Lebanon (AP) - At least five soldiers were wounded in clashes in southern Lebanon on Sunday, the first Israeli casualties there since a war against Muslim guerrillas ended last month. The Israeli army said its troops were attacked twice in the eastern part of the border enclave it occupies in southern Lebanon. Two officers and two soldiers were wounded when an outpost came under fire, the army said in a statement. Another officer was wounded and in serious condition after an Israeli patrol was hit by anti-tank rockets.

However, security sources in Lebanon said seven Israelis were wounded when a roadside bomb was detonated by remote control Sunday morning as an Israeli patrol drove near the village of Sojod in center of the enclave.

The Israeli statement made no mention of a bomb explosion. Hezbollah guerrillas, who are armed, financed and trained by Iran, claimed four Israelis were killed. But the security sources said they had no reports of fatalities.

Noho's tribute to Truth could cost $200,000

NORTHAMPTON, Mass. (AP) — She has been honored with postage stamps and has had college libraries and even spacecraft named after her.

But a move by a group in this college town to erect a statue of Sojourner Truth in blue-collar neighborhood where she spent several years has raised some eyebrows.

It's not that folks object to honoring the former slave who became an eloquent abolitionist orator and supporter of women's rights before the Civil War, said George Quinn, a city councilor. In fact she is prominently featured with other Northampton luminaries on a downtown mural.

It's the idea of a $200,000 statue that bothers some people, he said, and a sense in the Florence community that once was a separate village that outsiders are trying to dictate how its parks should be decorated.

When his constituents consider what could be done with $200,000 to promote Truth's ideals, their thoughts don't turn to statues, Quinn said

Driving around campus with the UMass police

By Daniel Sullivan
Collegian Staff

AMHERST — It is 11:40 p.m., Thursday April 25, Sergeant Paul Vlach's scanner calls for assistance in Southwest Residential Area. Residential staff wants to stop the yelling match between Washington and Cance Residence Halls. While a patrolman talks to students standing outside, Vlach parks 50 feet behind him next to Patterson Residence Hall. He drinks his tea and listens to the shouting wars.

"Cops suck dick!" someone yells from a tower.

"It is always a pleasure when you have the educated," Vlach says. "It is a hard invitation to say no to, but I think I'll pass."

"Fuck you pigs!" an unidentifiable guy yells from a tower and Vlach waves back. He motions for people to come down and confront him. "It is hard to keep positive... they don't mean it, they are just yelling."

Vlach drives up to the officer and advises him to watch his head for bottles being thrown. He tells the patrolman that the students in the towers do not even see him. The students only see the cruiser, Vlach says.

What goes on during a typical night for University of Massachusetts police officers? Handling spur of the moment events correctly is a daily struggle for cops. They are consistently battling stress, students and a heavy work load.

"We are trained for the unexpected," Lieutenant Steve Warren says. "Ninety-nine percent of the time, this job is boring. But that one percent is terror.

"Up to 11:00 p.m., there could be nothing happening. Then till 2 a.m., it could be non-stop with calls," Warren says. "Thursdays start to pick up with activity. Friday it increases and on Saturdays things start to taper off. A lot of people say that Southwest is a high crime area. It may be so, but two-thirds of the students live there and two-thirds of the activity occurs in Southwest. It is a densely populated area."

Parking Lots

Vlach rolls down his car windows to talk with students and to listen for breaking glass. He drives through a purple parking lot past Sylvan Residence Area, shining his search light on all the windows. This is not the most exciting part of the job, but is necessary because of this semester's vandalism problems in lots.

"We are hoping to catch someone tonight," he confides. "We try to be unpredictable, keep the element of surprise. Spring fever is evident. There are definitely peaks and valleys during the academic year. Convertible tops are down now, so more stereos are being stolen. Also, they have been [breaking into] jeeps lately."

Tonight, police counter the parking lot problems with an officer in an unmarked police car sitting in a yellow lot next to the football stadium, Warren says.

"There are so many cars and only [a limited amount] of us. We can't have people sit in all of the lots. There is better lighting in the lots now than in the past. It deters a lot of break-ins," Warren says. "We have a vandalism problem. Students park in the [outer] lots and when they come back to the dorms, they smash windows [on cars as they walk by]."

Driving around

Early in the shift, a car with four teens in the back seat stops Warren as he pulls out of the police station's parking lot. They ask for directions to the Toaster's show. He pauses and says, "Do you mean the concert?" Though he does not know who Toasters are, he knows where these teens want to go. "At the briefing we are told about patterns: bike thefts, parties or other things happening."

Warren does a quick U-turn and heads for the Campus Center because students at the Massachusetts Daily Collegian complain of someone using equipment. He arrives to find a patrolman already talking with Marni Helfner, the managing editor of the paper. Warren hangs in the background, talking to some students working on the next day's edition. The students joke with Warren and he lets the sarcasm bounce off him.

"If I get in between [students'] space, it will make them nervous," Warren says returning to his car

ValuJet crashes in Fla., all 109 passengers dead

By Lisa Holewa
Associated Press

MIAMI — No survivors, no bodies, no hope on Mother's Day. Authorities on Sunday called off the search for possible survivors of the crash of ValuJet Flight 592, which nose-dived into the Everglades with 104 passengers and five crew members.

"One hundred and nine mothers that are not doing too good right now," Bill Boland muttered to a fellow ambulance driver at midmorning.

The DC-9 had been in the air only eight minutes on a Saturday afternoon flight to Atlanta when the crew reported smoke in the cockpit. They attempted to turn around but the plane crashed about 15 miles northwest of Miami International Airport. The source of the cockpit smoke was unknown.

The swamp yielded pieces of clothing Sunday, in addition to a family photo album and a floating airplane seat that were found Saturday.

"We are known as rescuers," said Lt. Luis Fernandez of Metro-Dade Fire Rescue. "We rescue victims. When we can't rescue people, it hurts us."

Among the passengers on Flight 592 were San Diego Chargers running back Rodney Culver and his wife, Karen, of Woodstock, Ga. "These are human beings," ValuJet Airlines Inc. President Lewis Jordan said of the victims at a Sunday morning news conference in Miami. "Every human being in every seat of the airplane is a life and a loved one with stories to tell, with friends, with places to go. It's Mother's Day weekend, we know that."

The discount airline, based in Atlanta, has had at least three accidents since it began operations in 1993. The most serious was a runway fire last year that destroyed a plane and burned a flight attendant.

Workers at the remote crash site spent the morning trying to determine how to recover the remains and wreckage, including the airplane's flight data and cockpit voice recorders.

The wreckage was buried under waist-high water and layers of saw grass and swamp muck estimated to be up to 40 feet thick in places. Temperatures were in the mid 80s under steady, bright sunshine.

"If they're out of here before two weeks I'll be surprised," said Metro-Dade Detective Ed Munn.

The Everglades — dubbed the River of Grass — is a desolate expanse of swamp covering much of southern Florida. The area is home to alligators, snakes and other wildlife and is accessible mostly by airboat.

Divers wore protective rubber suits after suffering irritated skin Saturday from aviation fuel and hydraulic fluid. They searched the muck by hand, unable to see more than a few inches in front of them in the water.

National Transportation Safety Board investigators were at the site Sunday. President Clinton also ordered Transportation Secretary Federico Pena and Federal Aviation Administration Chairman David Hinson to visit the crash site.

Jordan said he took full responsibility for the crash, but added there was no indication anything was wrong before the 27-year-old plane took off. A list of the plane's past problems showed nothing out of the ordinary, he said.

FAA records showed the crashed jet had returned to airports seven times over the past two years because of various maintenance problems, from an oil leak to loss of cabin pressure. Jordan said he couldn't confirm the records.

The plane had a thorough annual inspection in October and a routine inspection four days before the crash.

"If ValuJet had any reason to believe one of our airliners was unsafe, we would voluntarily ground it," he added. "I can assure you that the FAA, if it had any reason to believe it was unsafe, they would ground it."

Jordan defended his airline's use of DC-9s that are often a quarter of a century old and of young pilots who are signed on at lower salaries than more experienced aviators.

Flight 592's pilot, Candalyn Kubeck of Bedford, Texas, had nearly 9,000 total hours of flight time, including 2,073 hours with ValuJet and 1,697 as a captain with the airline, officials said. "Very experienced, very well trained, very competent," Jordan said of the pilot. "There's certainly no indication it was any responsibility of the flight crew."

The first officer, Richard Hazen, a retired Air Force pilot, had 6,146 total flight hours, Jordan said.

Because of Valujet's accidents, the FAA began increased inspections of the airline in February, examining "literally every plane, every route," said Anthony J. Broderick, the agency's associate administrator for regulation and certification.

Queerfest 2 celebrated despite financial stress

By Jamie Sinsheimer
Collegian Staff

Despite Wednesday's protests from the University of Massachusetts Republican Club and the Young Americans for Freedom, Thursday's Queerfest 2, an event organized to promote awareness of gay issues, promoted visibility on campus.

Due to inclement weather, the celebration was moved o the Student Union Ballroom, where the event organized by the Lesbian, Bisexual, Gay Alliance (LBGA) ended with a free dance.

"Due to a severe reduction in the budget, Queerfest is nothing like how it was last year," said Ashavon Doyon, political chairperson of LBGA. "Queerfest 1 was sponsored by and had support from the Stonewall Center, this years festival was composed of all volunteers.

Terri Nelson, chief organizer of Queerfest, said, "We lost a lot of visibility due to the inclement weather, because when we are outside more people tend to stop and check out what's going on."

"Exposure is the reason why we are here, so queer students can come by and see that there is an organization that can help them," said Rosie Castaneda, co-chairperson of GLBGSO, a social and political organization that holds weekly meetings and various social events.

Tables were set up representing several organizations including the People's Market, the UMass Gay Lesbian and Bisexual Graduate Student Organization (GLBGSO), Amherst Parents, Families and Friends of Lesbians and Gays (PFLAG), Health Education a division of Health Services and Pride and Heritage of Color, a new organization that is targeted to homosexual students of color.

Two performance groups also played at the festival. Nice Shoes, a feminist a capella group from Mount Holyoke College, serenaded the crowd outside the Student Union while the weather was still permitting. When the festival moved inside, a three women drum group called Gaya Root Rhythms blended together international styles through a funky drum beat to a small but welcoming crowd.

"I'm here to show support for my other community," said Richard James, a freshman communications and music major. "It's really needed on this campus and as a community I do not think we are really that visible yet."

Science fair looks to the future

By Suzanne Barber
Collegian Correspondent

Fourteen design teams from the Electrical and Computer engineering department showcased their design projects in a senior science fair at Gunness Student Center in Marcus Hall on Friday.

Last year's Senior Design Day was highlighted by a LEGO computer-controlled car factory. The on going LEGO project was developed further by seniors Albert Young and Wei Shen under the supervision of electrical computer engineering professor Christos Cassandras.

"The development of the computer controlled LEGO car factory began as a senior design project by Jason Bergendahl, David Esterman and Michael Sullivan. It was inspired by a similar project at Linkoping University, in Sweden," said Albert Young, an electrical engineering senior who continued the project for this year's Senior Design Day.

Seniors Sid Arora, William Peets and Corey Simons smelled opportunity in this product and have spent the year modifying the existing fragrance pump to create a new pump for use in cars and trucks. The therapeutic fragrance will be developed as an alert driver device, a variation on the computer warning device for fatigued drivers begun at Carnegie Mellon University.

According to a study at the National Transportation Board, driver fatigue is the cause of 30 to 40 percent of all heavy truck accidents. The "Essential Oil Diffuser" operates on a 12 VDC automobile battery in 20 minute intervals, dispersing a lemon scent. The scents, according to Leydon House owner Gerald McCarthy, keeps drivers alert and provides a calming effect on their mood.

From an infrared burglar alarm to a computerized "smart car" which can parallel park by itself, these innovative graduating inventors' hard work was a preview for the future of technology....

"Distance is very important. It allows me to carry on a good conversation. I can see anything that they may have to hurt me, their hands, etc."

Now with Vlach, he drives up Massachusetts Avenue, talking to another officer on his portable CB in his left hand. His elbow steers the car as he grabs the cellular phone to call the dispatcher at the station, while listening at the scanner for another call.

Stairwell

A few hours later, Vlach gets a call that a man collapsed in a Northeast Residential Area stairwell. The security desk sends him to the second floor. Vlach jogs there and finds it empty. A resident sticks her head out of a room and points him to the third floor. Vlach finds two emergency technicians and a patrolman standing over the fallen student. The student explains he forgot to take his anti-depressant medication.

The patrolman leaves the stairwell and returns a few minutes later with the recent medical history of the student. Both the fallen student and his girlfriend have tried to kill themselves, he says. Also, the patrolman learns that the couple recently had a fight.

The emergency medical technician brings him to his room. Vlach asks him about the relationship and if he is thinking of hurting himself. The officer also asks if the student will work things out with his girlfriend. The man gruggily responds that he did not try to hurt himself and that he was just tired from a long week. The EMT thinks he will be safe, but Vlach asks a floor mate to check the student later.

Bongo party

An earlier drive through the Butterfield Residence Hall parking lot at 11:30 p.m. spotted nine long-haired students playing drums and guitars next to Butterfield. The drummers do not miss a beat as numerous cruisers check on the drumming circle. Later in the night, an undercover cop sees a bong and smells pot. "Drumming isn't the problem, the pot smell is," Vlach says.

A cop car parks behind Chadbourne Residence Hall to watch the people at Butterfield. The car waits as numerous cruisers pass the drum circle. A patrolman later finds that the smoke was from cigarettes. At 2 a.m., Vlach hears the drumming while checking for broken car windows in a lot near Mather Career Center.

"They must have moved out of Butterfield to the garden near Van Meter. The sound carries much better from there. We have to decipher community standards for when to break something up," Vlach says. "You don't know the impact it has on people not feeling well or those who are studying. They have to be considerate of their neighbors."

Now 2:20 a.m., cops break up the bongo party. Warren and Vlach arrive in different cruisers and talk about the speeding car that eluded them. A third officer makes sure the drum circle ends quietly. "This is bongo heaven," Warren says as 20 people leave the area and the night ends for the reporter, but continues for the cops.

Hampshire County organization seeks more University help

By Anastasia Kudrez
Collegian Staff

Throw a football, make a child's day. According to the Big Brother/Sister Program, everyday activities like studying at the library, fixing a bike, or shopping can make a difference for a child who needs a friend.

Big Brothers/Big Sisters of Hampshire County is looking to match volunteers with children in need by the summer.

Case coordinator Ruth Harms said she hopes more University of Massachusetts students get involved, particularly men. According to Harms, about two-thirds of the children referred to the program are boys, and they are harder to match because of a smaller male volunteer pool.

"I'm so aware when I'm on campus that there are so many guys hanging around, talking about sports," she said. "There's got to be some guys for our program."

Over 100 children are on the waiting list for volunteer matches, and the six top priorities are boys. Case coordinator Carol Wood said priority is determined by the children's needs and amount of time on the waiting list.

"It's important to place a child between the ages of nine and 12, around sixth grade," she said. "It's important that kids have on-going relationships before middle school."

The Big Brothers/Big Sisters Program, formerly The Companion Program, matches 70 children aged six to 16 with volunteers. Based in the Bangs Center in Amherst, the program is responsible for Hampshire County.

The program has about 30 volunteers from Hampshire College, Smith College and UMass, students and staff. Wood and Harms said becoming a volunteer does not require intense activity planning or great expense.

"Volunteers can help kids develop social interaction skills and get them involved in activities parents may not take them to," Harms said.

She said kids enjoy companionship and inclusion, and college student activities are enjoyable.

"There's lots of ways for kids to be included in lives of volunteers," she said. "Kids love going to the library and being involved in preparation of activities."

She said there is no format for volunteering. Volunteers and kids develop a relationship based on the specific needs of the child.

"There's no right way and no wrong way. Each situation is so different, we try to be as flexible to people's needs as we can," she said.

Volunteers are asked to spend three to five hours a week with their little brother or sister. Harms said the amount of time is less important than consistency, and the schedule is flexible. Volunteers are needed on a year-round basis, so summer matches must be local. Students who live out of the area during the summer can apply now to become volunteers for the academic year.

"People have to realize, yes, it's a commitment, but it's a lot of fun," Harms said.

Lecture examines shell shock

By Caroline Sunshine
Collegian Correspondant

On Monday, May 6, a lecture entitled "Understanding Gender and mental Disorder: Shell Shock," was given at Mount Holyoke College by Joan Busfield, Psychologist and Pro-Vice Chancellor of the University of Essex in England.

Busfield began her talk by explaining the historical background behind the concept of shellshock, then went on to discuss its implications in the field of psychology and for society in general. She said that shell shock was first studied in Britian, and conceptualized during World War I when it was noticed that the men who fought later displayed symptoms of psychological trauma.

They experienced disturbances in sensation and movement, blindness, deafness, muteness, loss of smell and taste, insomnia, nightmares, halllucinations, obsessibe thoughts, and loss of self-confidence and self-control. The defining symptom, however, was marked by memory loss: amnesia. Men with shellshock came back from war and were unable to recognize their family.

Busfield stated that this list of symptoms was not new to the psychopathological repertoire. Up until that time, these symptoms had always been attributed to women. At the turn of the century, hysteria, now called conversion disorder, was considered the archetypal female disorder. It was characterized by psychological disturbances causing physical disturbances, such as the inability to speak or move a limb.

At the time, shellshock was considered a masculine form of hysteria. There was much resistance to treating it, because many did not want to admit that men were emotional beings vulnerable to the same psychologicla trauma as women. For these reasons, suffering from shellshock was seen as cowardly and weak, and the soldiers who had it were court-martialled and put into mental asylums, which carried a great social stigma.

However, Busfield pointed out that officers suffering from shellshock were not put in asylums, and it was discovered that far many more officers than privates showed symptoms, and outnumbered privates in cases, 5:1. She speculated that "Officers were more prone to developing shellshock because they carried the burdens of endurance, discipline, responsibility, bravery and courage."

The zipper flipper

In this column space I've gotten into the habit of writing about huge problems, things I personally believe could destroy the world. In this my last column of the year, I thought I'd explore a lighter issue, something that plagues us all but doesn't exactly threaten us. I'm talking about embarassing moments. Yes, we all have them, but some of us have more than others.

I happen to have experienced the king of embarrassing moments, and I've now gotten to the point where I'm able to come to grips with and share that moment. It happened to me when I was a senior in high school. I was waiting outside the door of the auditorium to get into an assembly. Since the speakers weren't ready, there was a waiting period, and a crowd was bunching up in front of the door.

I was anxiously waiting when a female acquaintance brought to my attention the fact that my zipper on my jeans was undone. I was a bit embarrassed, but the situation was not entirely out of hand. I coolly and calmly slid my hand down to my zipper so that I could casually remedy the situation. That's where the situation started to get interesting.

You see, my zipper was stuck. I really didn't know to handle such a situation. In my adolescent stupidity, I figured that strength could be used to zip the damn thing up. Unfortunately, that was not the case. This was one determined zipper. While I was futilly using my increased strength, I was also drawing more and more attention to my predicament. By this time, about ten of my peers were aware of what was going on and the embarassment intensified to build.

I decided to take a break and analyze the zipper catch, so that I might quickly and easily clear it up. It was not until that point that I actually saw the monster I was up against. You see the flippy thing that hooks up to the zipper slide thing was jammed in the fabric of the very bottom of the whole apparatus. And it looked like the problem would be solvable, but in desperation I decided to go back to strength.

I moaned and groaned and struggled to get the thing zipped up. Meanwhile, the spectators were growing in number. When the zipper wouldn't budge, I got extremely frustrated. When the large crowd around me started as if expecting some kind of explanation, I yelled at the top of my lungs while jiggling at my crotch, "I can't get it up!" The crowd was definitely amused. I realized that I had made a critical mistake, and amidst their roaring laughter feebly added "my fly." They responded "Yeah, we believe you, he he." I turned beet red and looked for cover.

My fly was still down, so I seized the opportunity by explaining that I was going to go to the bathroom to finish the job. When the laughter continued, I realized that I had again shot myself in the foot. I covered up my whites (tighties) and backed slowly into the bathroom. There, in relative silence, I calmed down long enough to figure out how to solve the problem. I would have to find a pen or pencil or other similarly shaped object to pry the flip thing out. That was the only way. The only problem was that I hadn't a pen or pencil on my person. I would again have to face the crowd.

As I stepped out of the bathroom, the crowd looked back over at me. I silently shrugged my shoulders and proceeded straight to my bookbag. I determinantly extracted a writing utensil and walked straight back to the bathroom and got that silly zipper back up. I breathed a sigh of relief and with a rather relaxed look on my face, I walked out of the bathroom.

To my surprise I got a standing ovation from my peers, who must have been rather proud of me for finally getting it up. But I'll tell you for that whole day and a few others, I had people come who I knew and others who I didn't come up to me, pat me on the back and say "hey man, I heard about your problem. I really feel for you, man." Now that's embarassing.

When I was in those tender high school years, I seriously thought that it would mean the end of the world for me. I thought I'd never get over it. But, over the course of my life I've come to grips with that embarassing fifteen minutes. I guess what I'm trying to say is that there are many occasions in which we could possibly believe that our life is coming to an end, but that's never actually the case. No matter how serious something may seem, it may in fact be nothing at all. I'm still alive, and I'd like to say that I still have a life. And hey, at least I can still get it up.

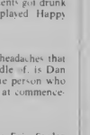
Notes from the campus center basement



Notes from the Campus Center Basement

Welcome to "Notes From the Incredibly Hectic Campus Center Basement. Because our Computers are More Messed up than Baseball's Labor Negotiations." If it seems hastily thrown together and poorly edited ... you'll know why.

* * *

Our first bit of utter foolishness is a Collegian columnist this week comes from our esteemed president, Bill Bulger. It seems that this week, Willy said that the University of Massachusetts needs to get away from that job placement silliness and focus more on becoming a better respected liberal arts institution.

To borrow a phrase from an esteemed colleague, ARE YOU SERIOUS?!?!?!?!

Let's see, there's a good idea. We're in a world of high unemployment where it's difficult enough to get jobs as it is and our president just wants to focus on liberal arts.

Thank God I am graduating.

Speaking of stupidity, plans are already rolling to reshape the campus pond. Did UMass just win the galactic lottery or receive a windfall of cash that we can spend on completely unnecesary projects.

Have we patched up all the leaky ceilings? Have we given all the organizations on campus that are short of funds monies to help them? Have we hired more professors? Have we given the hard working ones we have a raise? No, of course we haven't.

So in the midst of our budget problem we're spending money to reshape the pond.

What the hell is wrong with the pond?!?!?!?!? From what I can gather nothing. I got an idea, why not use the money for reshaping the pond and bring someone cool to Spring Concert.

Well it's that time of year again and boy I had a wonderful time at Spring Concert yesterday.

After starting my day with breakfast at McMunnis restaraunt, my friends and I headed over to Twisters. They sucked down a few Schaffer beers while I had to settle for New Coke and Pepsi Free because I was driving. We managed to stuff 10 people into the Delorean even though we had to stop over at the Enron gas station to fill up before time.

We grabbed some quick grub at Dorothy and Leroy's and Uptown Pizza on the way over so we would have something for lunch at the show.

I couldn't believe the acts that they signed for this year. Wow to think that Elvis Presley, the Beatles, Nirvana and the Doors could all be in Amherst at the same time.

What do all the above talented have in common? Like the Dodo, they've gone the way of the Spring Concert.

Gotta love the ingenuity of some UMass students though. With Spring Concert not happening this year, a bunch of mini-Concerts sort of popped up. While the word concert was a pretty loose term in the minds of some, it really loud stereo propped up on the hood of a pick up truck, or some cheesy garage band playing bad covers of Blues Traveler, it was spring, the students got drunk and the music got played. Happy Spring.

* * *

After the recent headaches that SGA is in the middle of, is Dan Castellano really the person who should be speaking at commencement?

* * *

You've seen the Eric Stoltz movie Naked in New York, well get ready for the low budget UMass video production's special, Naked in Northeast. The flick will star many unnamed overstudious, unclothed engineering students in a film about running. It will debut next weekend. Naked in Northeast, coming soon to a quad near you.

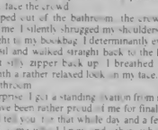
Not getting the picture



A long time ago, I used to believe that going to college would broaden a student's horizons, widen their perceptions, maybe even teach them something they didn't already know. But then again, that was a long time ago and before I actually came to college and experienced what "true learning" was all about.

Let me explain. Essentially, my premise is this. I'm very concerned about the way young women in college are using their education, that is, the way they aren't using it at all. Actually, it would be wrong to classify "women" as a whole, but on average, there are many young women in this university taking classes that could enrich their lives, make them more aware of how women have and will be shit on in the course of their lives. However, from a personal experience, I've noticed that what is actually learned in the classroom and what is then applied to personal life are two totally different concepts.

Let me be specific, with a real life example. Meet "Amy." Amy is a college student, aware of girls who wear too much makeup and go out of their way to impress others. She feels girls like this are "weak." In fact, for a couple of months Amy has been working on a large research project on the topic of women's distorted ideals about body image and the perfect body image and how the media is the cause. In the paper, specific references are made to "bimbo" magazines: Vogue, Mademoiselle, etc.

Well, it turns out that Amy has much in common with the girls she denounces. While Amy criticizes all of those women's magazines in her paper, she is a faithful subscriber to each one. While she ostracizes the media as a "bad thing," distorting women's perceptions of their bodies, she is also guilty of watching TV and frequently commenting, "She is so fat, why the hell is she is on TV?"

Now let me make it clear that each woman is entitled to her own perceptions of what is important in life (and what's absolutely irrelevant), however, it is clear to me that young women who claim to advocate the advancement of women and who claim awareness of the constant objectification and degradation of women in the media, when in reality, they don't have clue.

People like Amy preach about these current women's issues, but aren't really getting the overall picture; they do the research, but they don't take it seriously enough to apply what they learn to their lives. This is such a discouraging issue. Are any young women absorbing what they learn?

I stress women not because I want to exclude men, but because it is primarily a woman's issue that must first be addressed to women. I say this because, well, we are the suffering minority, and being aware of women's issues/literature, as a woman, is like being aware of the Bible as a Christian.

I therefore stress the absolute duty of all women at this university to in some way, shape, or form, become familiar with what's going around us: how we, as women, are portrayed in our society, and how we constantly appear as mere by-products, or "manufactured goods," of a male-oriented world.

So the next time a young women wishes to preach about the subordination of women, or other female-oriented societal issues, please, not only get the facts first, but also make sure you practice what you throw from the pulpit...otherwise your words don't mean shit.

Letters to the Editor

Burke off the mark

To the Editor:

I am writing in response to Mike Burke's article titled "Turn it down! Summer is near and the noise pollution escalates" in the May 9 issue of the Collegian. We live in a society where there are many diverse groups of people who do not look or act the same, like the same things or listen to the same music. Unfortunately, despite the attempt of individuals and public institutions to foster open-mindedness and respect for differences in our society, some people still remain judgmental and closed-minded.

Mr. Burke, I am not writing to tell you that you have to like Bon Jovi or Def Lepard. I am not even writing to say you have to think they are talented. However, I am writing to tell you that you have absolutely no right to imply that I am a "loser" and need to "get a life" because I listen to Bon Jovi while driving from point A to point B in my car, and yes, sometimes roll down my window so that others may hear. Is a loser defined as someone who likes or enjoys something that you dislike? I listen to Yanni, Garth Brooks, The Bodeans, and TLC as well as Bon Jovi. What is your label for me now?

My point is, Mr. Burke, that just because you do not listen to or like a particular kind of music does not mean that others are "losers" because they happen to enjoy it. Think about what you are implying about others before you write your next article.

Oh, and Mr. Burke, if I see you this summer, even if my air conditioner is on, I'll be sure to roll my window down so you can laugh and call me a "loser" when you hear "You Give Love A Bad Name." You know what? According to your implied definiton of a "loser," you'll be one too because I bet you'll start singing along.

ALANA cooperation needed

To the editor:

It is a shame that RSOs are forced to fight over scraps of money to get what they need. However, as the outgoing Music Director for WMUA, I wish the ALANA group had supported the station's request for allocation of more funds for replacing our transmitter. A certain ALANA group called the Black Mass Communications Project seems to feel SGA cut its funding in favor of WMUA transmitter account. However, BMCP needs WMUA's broadcating power to further its agenda.

BMCP has made the promotion of rap, hip-hop and other contemporary African American oriented music and integal part of its goals. What BMCP does not have is a broadcasting facility. Now, whether they believe it or not, WMUA wants the music BMCP promotes as part of its programming. However, if our 23 year old transmitter konks out, we'll both be quite stuck indeed. In essence, money that helps WMUA get a new transmitter is money that will help BMCP too.

After a year of struggling haplessly with BMCP, I'm convinced the organization needs to quit feeling sorry for itself, and take a long, hard look at who its allies are. If they managed their affairs more cooperatively in the middle of the fiscal year, perhaps ALANA wouldn't have to stage a sit-in at the end.

On the other hand, how else do you make the front page of the Collegian?

GEO Treasurer speaks

To the editor,

I am a candidate for GEO President. In an election where the many candidates for various office may seem confusingly similar, all touting union experience and values, I would like to point out one of many major differences between my opponent and myself.

My opponent is running on a slate. In the slate's "New Vision for GEO," my opponent claims that "dump (ing) Roberts' (sic) Rules of Order" will expand the democratic process. I beg to differ. The underlying principles behind Robert's Rules of Order (RRO) are that: the minority must be heard, the absent are protected and the majority decide. A demand for members to respect the rights and opinions of others is implicit. It is one duty of the presiding officer to allow for civil debate (debate meaning alternating opinions are articulated when there is no consensus).

Refusing to use some standard readily available rule of order mean that the chair is effectively a dicatator. No one can contradict the chair on order at meetings since the chair, like the Pope, is infallible. The chair is not accountable to anyone. The chair is not obligated to listen to any positions that he does not favor.

My oppoent has been extremely disrespectful of the rights and opinions of others at union meetings. When complaint was lodged, he did not see fit to respond. I can only conclude that my opponent does not care to listen to those who do not toe his line. If my opponent is so disrespectful of others as a member, what assurance is there that he will suddenly develop respect as the presiding officer?

As GEO president, I promise to run meetings fairly. I favor RRO, but if the membership prefers some other standard text, I will honor their decision.

Proper respect for members and how to run meetings are only one of our differences. In the midst of contract negotiations (which should be our primary concern), I pledge my solidarity to the union by promising (in this public forum) to refrain from any appearance of attacking on the leadership (until we have a contract) should I lose this election. Our contract is far more important than any disagreements that I might have with the leadership. I challenge my opponent to make this same pledge.

Twister blows away audiences with amazing special effects, action

Bill Paxton and Helen Hunt run from the ominous Twister. COURTESY RON BATZDORFF

TWISTER
Directed by Jan De Bont with Helen Hunt, Bill Paxton
Playing at Hampshire Six

While The Wizard of Oz was taking its annual turn on television Friday night, dropping houses on unsuspecting witches, its contemporary tornado counterpart premiered in movie theaters — and what a ride it was.

Twister is everything it promised to be — right down to the core of this action-packed windfest. It has demolished houses, airborne animals (the flying cow is an audience favorite) and farm equipment truck being tossed around at the mercy of a tornado.

Mind you, Twister did not promise to have a gripping plot with engaging characters — probably because the film doesn't need them. It is a complete special effects-fest that literally blows you away, and the credit goes to the masterminds behind the camera.

Take the producer who made you fear nature's wrath the first time, Steven Spielberg (c'mon, how many of you refused to go in the water the summer after you saw Jaws?), the creative scripting of Jurassic Park brainchild Michael Crichton (and his wife, Anne-Marie Martin) and the director who made adrenaline a physical entity in Speed, Jan De Bont, and you've got a ruthless triple-threat in filmmaking that predestines Twister to be a hit.

But the acting is unsuspectingly good. Helen Hunt (best known from TV's "Mad About You") and Bill Paxton (the third, barely-there astronaut in Apollo 13) star as a couple of daredevil scientists who go around chasing twisters. They are not just mad thrillseekers, though. Hunt's character, Jo, is on both a humanitarian, scientific mission to predict better when tornadoes hit (so as to forewarn victims), and a personal vendetta she has to carry out on the vicious twister that sucked her father right out of a storm cellar before her 3-year-old eyes. Plotwise, yes, it's corny — but the scene is spectacularly scary.

Jo's husband, Bill (Paxton), is an esteemed tornado scientist who is supposed to be divorcing her, marrying a chic therapist (Jami Gertz) and taking a job as a (loathsome) weatherman. As soon as he smells a twister coming, in the biggest tornado season Oklahoma has witnessed in 12 years, we know he's staying put with Jo to track the storm, and use the device he created, "Dorothy," to measure the vortex of the twister.

For these two stormchasers, and their caravan of crazy scientists, it is more than just a race to catch the tornado. They also have to beat the onyx fleet of rival meteorologists, led by Cary Elwes. It is an interesting contrast, as the evil crew, looking sleek in their minivans, are so reliant upon their computers and technology, they can't beat Jo's defiant little group.

Twister may leave some feeling a bit perplexed, or as if they've been tricked. After all, how can a giant, black twister fling around a giant fuel tanker truck a mere hundred feet away from Jo and Bill, safe in their little red truck? Well, it's not something we're supposed to just buy — kind of like tornadoes themselves — taking narrow paths of destruction, crushing one house, but leaving the neighbor's standing.

Either way, Twister's effects are so fascinating, it won't matter much whether you believe it or not. Your eyes will be riveted to the screen, your pulse will race and you'll thank your lucky stars that you don't live in the heart of twister country.

May Books: A bevy of 'best-selling' writers

By Ron Berthal
Associated Press

May offers a bumper crop of new hardcover books by best-selling writers including Danielle Steel, Barbara Taylor Bradford, Terry McMillan, William Kennedy, Jay McInerney, M. Scott Peck and Ann Landers.

Ann Landers?

If you count newspapers, Landers, the most widely syndicated columnist in the world, according to the Guinness Book of World Records, is surely a best-selling writer.

And her new book might place her also among the ranks of best-selling authors.

In Wake Up and Smell the Coffee (Villard), Landers offers a collection of columns from her 40-year career, offering advice about matters such as health, relationships and child-rearing, and about some less-vexing questions, such as the Tissue Issue, the long-running debate about the proper way to hang toilet paper.

Should it unroll from the top or from the bottom?

For readers of fiction, Steel offers her 37th novel, Malice (Delacorte). Malice is on the mind of a foe from the stormy past of Grace Adams. Adams' problems began when she was attacked at 17 and have plagued her throughout her life, which has taken her from an Illinois women's prison to a successful career in New York.

Another woman trying to bury her past is Meredith Stratton, heroine of Bradford's novel Her Own Rules (HarperCollins).

The successful head of a chain of luxury inns, Stratton begins to suffer a series of dizzy spells and night mares and, with the help of a psychiatrist, tries to face long-repressed childhood secrets.

Meanwhile, Stella Payne, 42, a successful investment analyst and single mother trying to raise her son to be a good man, is soaking up the sun on a Jamaica vacation and falling in love with a man half her age, in McMillan's novel, How Stella Got Her Groove Back (Viking).

Kennedy offers The Flaming Corsage (Viking), the sixth novel in his Albany Cycle series, which included the Pulitzer Prize winning Ironweed. Set in Albany, N.Y., around the turn of the century, the story begins with The Love Nest Killings of 1908 as it traces the troubled marriage between two people from socially opposite families.

Demon Deacon Duncan to stay at Wake Forest

By Mike Harris
Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — The record-smashing qualifying run that Arie Luyendyk hoped for came Sunday, a day too late to win the pole for the 80th Indianapolis 500.

On Saturday, the first of four days of qualifications for the May 26 race, Luyendyk, the 1990 Indy winner, rode an emotional roller-coaster.

He narrowly missed becoming entangled in another driver's crash, had two engines fail, was forced to switch to his slower backup car and appeared to win the pole.

Then he saw Scott Brayton beat him out with a dramatic late-session run and, finally, watched in frustration as the U.S. Auto Club disallowed his qualifying run because his car was seven pounds underweight.

"It's the first time I've qualified twice in one weekend," Luyendyk said Sunday after taking out his emotions on the asphalt oval, raising the single-lap track record on each of his four trips around the 2 1/2-mile oval and blowing away Brayton's day-old marks.

"Yesterday was a bittersweet day for us, and today the sun is shining on us," Luyendyk said. "The car was working really good, the way this car has been working all week, really.

"We hardly took any practice today, and just put it out there and ran fast. I just said to the guys, 'Let's try for a record. Let's just go for it.'

"Records may be set only in qualifying and during the race. Driving the Menard-powered Lola he had hoped to qualify on Saturday, Luyendyk began with a record lap of 236.239. He followed with consecutive laps of 236.948, 237.260 and 237.498 for a four-lap average of 236.986.

That placed him 20 positions behind Brayton, who on Saturday set qualifying standards of 233.851 for one lap and 233.718 for four laps.

"It was unfortunate yesterday we had problems with this car and had to qualify the other one, because the other one was not as fast as this car. And the damn thing was too light as well," Luyendyk said.

"It was just an oversight on our part. We made a mistake somewhere. But that was yesterday, and we're looking forward to May 26.

That's still the most important day of the month for us, and we're going to try to win the first 500 for this new team owned by Fred Treadway and Jonathan Byrd."

Brayton's run was a dramatic one. It came in the final 15 minutes of the session, after team owner John Menard - hoping to knock Luyendyk off the pole - withdrew the car Brayton qualified earlier in the day at 231.535 to win his second straight Indy 500 pole.

"I've held the track record here before and it was broken," said Brayton, who set a one-lap record in 1985 and lost it to Danny Sullivan the next year. "It's thrilling to get them. It's sad to see them go."

Also qualifying in the early going Sunday was Marco Greco, driving for A.J. Foyt. Greco qualified for his second Indy start at 228.840, joining Foyt teammate Davey Hamilton, one of nine rookies who qualified on Saturday.

Foyt, known for his fiery temperament during the years, stayed calm Saturday when Greco and third entry Scott Sharp were kept from qualifying by blown engines. Greco was not able to get out for an attempt, and Sharp's first try ended in a cloud of black smoke after laps of 231 and 232.

"Marco just needed a good engine in his car and Scott should have been in yesterday, but we're not happy with his car quite yet," Foyt said. "But we expect to have him ready later today."

CHEYENNE, Wyo. (AP) — Something's not afoot on the Olympic Torch Relay.

The traditional form of transportation has been runners carrying the torch across the host countries. But this year's torch run to the 1996 Olympics in Atlanta has planes, trains and automobiles, and doesn't stop there.

Other forms include a cable car in San Francisco, ferry across the Puget Sound, Pony Express in the Plains, canoe in Kansas, steamboat to Mark Twain's hometown of Hannibal, Mo., and a 12,000-ton iron ore-carrying vessel across Lake Erie. Even a mule-drawn 40-foot packet boat gets into the act at Camillus, N.Y.

"This is not the first time where a variety of modes of transportation were used. What separates us is that no one else has done it on as large a scale," said Olympic spokeswoman Alexis Davis in Atlanta. "We wanted the transportation modes to reflect the pages of the past; to reflect America's history as well as the character of surrounding communities."

For Wyoming residents, that means the ever-present railroad. A specially built 19-car train will help carry the torch for about 3,500 of the 15,000-mile relay through 42 states in 84 days. "The train portion is basically the western two-thirds of the country," said Union Pacific spokesman John Bromley. "We're going to help them get it over the wide-open spaces of Wyoming, for example.

"I've had people come up to us and say we never believed that the Olympic flame would come to our town and it's wonderful that people like us can see it," he said. "The train made that possible."

The train departed Echo, Utah, on Saturday morning, day 16 of the torch relay. After whistle stops along the southern Wyoming towns of Evanston, Green River, Rawlins and Laramie, the train pulled into Cheyenne on Saturday night.

Greeting them will be 27 torch-bearers from around the state, who will travel a 15-kilometer course - by foot - past the Capitol and through town.

Those runners don't seem to mind taking the torch handoff by rail.

"As far as the way it's brought in, that doesn't bother me at all," said James Gardner, a Cheyenne physical education teacher and "community hero" torchbearer. "Just to be part of the Olympics has been a lifelong dream."

An American Indian cultural presentation will kick off the Cheyenne festivities, which also include speeches by the mayor, secretary of state and governor.

The torch was scheduled to stay overnight and leave the state Sunday morning.

HOUSTON (AP) — Two Texas Tech athletes received top marks in a junior college physical education course even though they apparently weren't required to attend classes, according to a published report.

The course has drawn scrutiny from NCAA investigators probing the university's athletic program, the Houston Chronicle said Sunday.

Mark Davis, an all-Southwest Conference basketball player at Texas Tech in 1994-95, and Stephen Gaines, a Red Raiders football starter in 1992 and 1993, obtained As in a basketball coaching class at Howard College in Big Spring in the summer of 1992.

The course was taught by Jeff Kidder, the school's basketball coach at the time. The Chronicle said Kidder has extensive ties to James Dickey, Texas Tech's head basketball coach since 1991. Citing Howard College sources, the newspaper reported that NCAA enforcement personnel have made at least one visit this year to the West Texas junior college to look into the course.

One other Texas Tech athlete apparently received academic credit under questionable circumstances as a result of Kidder's efforts, the Chronicle said.

Kidder, now an assistant coach at the University of Nevada, declined comment to the newspaper. A message left for him by The Associated Press Saturday was not immediately returned.

The Chronicle last year described Kidder's role in helping Tech basketball recruit Nate Jackson obtain credit for a Howard College Spanish course in the summer of 1991 without being present on campus or paying tuition.

The NCAA informed Texas Tech in February that it began looking into the men's basketball and football programs since 1991. Chuck Smrt, an NCAA enforcement director, would neither confirm nor deny that the physical education course taught by Kidder was part of the inquiry.

Kidder, 33, became head basketball coach at Howard College in 1991 after spending a season as an assistant at West Texas State. He left Howard for Nevada in 1993.

The Chronicle said Kidder's relationship with Dickey dates to the late 1980s, when both were involved in the University of Kentucky basketball program.

Neither Dickey nor Texas Tech football coach Spike Dykes responded to interview requests from the newspaper. Messages left for them by the AP weren't immediately returned.

Last week, Dickey signed a new five-year contract with the university that will pay him more than $1.5 million in salary and guaranteed outside income.

Texas Tech can be held responsible for Kidder's actions if the NCAA determines he was a representative of the university's athletic interests.

Davis, who spent the past season with the NBA's Minnesota Timberwolves, said he couldn't remember taking a course taught by Kidder at Howard.

Gaines left Texas Tech before the 1994 season, reportedly because of academic difficulties. He declined to be interviewed by the Chronicle.

Dusty Johnston, Howard College's vice president for instruction, said school officials are concerned by the lack of paper trails for the course.

"The gap in this case is no definition and criteria," he said. "If there's a generic syllabus, I haven't seen it. People enrolled, registered and got a grade. That's all we have."

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — All-America center Tim Duncan has delighted Wake Forest fans and bucked a national trend in announcing that he will return for his senior season instead of joining the NBA draft.

He will be the only returning All-American next season. Villanova guard Kerry Kittles was a senior, while Connecticut guard Ray Allen and Massachusetts center Marcus Camby, both juniors, and Georgetown sophomore guard Allen Iverson all declared for the draft.

"I have a strong desire to complete my degree, which I can do next spring, and believe that the additional time spent here will only benefit my development as a basketball player as well," Duncan said in a news release issued by the school.

A 19-year-old native of the Virgin Islands, Duncan is one of a few college stars this year to decide to remain in school. At least 17 other underclassmen have declared for the June 26 draft. The deadline for declaring is midnight Sunday.

"I think it's a much-needed shot in the arm for college basketball and certainly for our basketball program," coach Dave Odom said. "I'm sure his teammates as well as the basketball staff and the students at Wake Forest will join me in feeling very fortunate that we've had him for three years.

"Now we'll have him for a fourth year, and that's very special."

Duncan's decision to play another year for the two-time Atlantic Coast Conference champions should have the Demon Deacons among the top teams in next season's preseason polls.

Duncan said he took the promise of next season into consideration when he decided to turn down the lure of millions of dollars from the NBA.

"That had a lot to do with it," Duncan said. "We have a chance to do something extra special next season, and we're going to try to do it."

Last season, Duncan averaged 19 points and 12 rebounds as the Demon Deacons finished 26-6 and fell one step shy of the Final Four. They lost to eventual national champion Kentucky 83-63 in the Midwest Regional final.

Most scouts said the 6-foot-11 Duncan, the school's career blocked shot leader with 379, could have been the No. 1 overall pick in the draft had he decided to turn pro.

Among the players who have declared for the draft are high school seniors Kobe Bryant of Ardmore, Pa., and Jermaine O'Neal of Columbia, S.C.

SportsWeekend

Collegian Sports • Monday, May 13, 1996

Inside this issue:

UMass baseball defeated Xavier in ithe first round of the Atlantic 10 Tournament see sports weekend for the story.

Minuteman baseball coach Mike Stone was named A-10 coach of the year for the third consecutive year (see page 10 for the run down.)

UMass won the commisioners cup for the second year in a row. (See page 10 for the story.)

UM tops Xavier, Murphy 5-for-5

By Chris Stamm
Collegian Staff

This weekend, the Massachusetts baseball team travelled to Bovertown, Pa. to compete in the Atlantic 10 Tournament. With a No. 1 spot in the Eastern Division, the Minutemen met the No. 2 team in the West, Xavier, while the No. 1 squad in the West, Virginia Tech, faced No. 2 Temple from the East. UMass took the first game handily, defeating Xavier 16-3 to boost its record to 34-10, while Xavier fell to 26-26.

Umass 16, Xavier 3

Xavier jumped out to a quick 2-0 lead in the top of the first inning and took Minuteman hurler Chad Sullivan for four hits. The Minutemen came back in the bottom half of the inning as senior leftfielder Ryan Jette and junior shortstop Brad Gorrie both walked and then made their way home on a two run single by junior centerfielder Nate Murphy to tie the game at two.

Murphy went 5-for-5 in the outing with a double, two home runs, and nine RBI, setting single game A-10 Tournament records for both hits (five) and RBI (nine). In addition, the Amherst-native was also named to the A-10 All Conference Second team.

"I was in a zone today and was fortunate that there were always runner in scoring position when I came to the plate," Murphy said. "I have felt all year that I had not lived up to my potential, so I really wanted to come out today and prove that I am a good ball player.

The Minutemen took a three run lead (5-2) in the third inning with senior first baseman Justin Kelly, Murphy and freshman designated hitter Doug Clark all driving in runs. Kelly, the UMass leader in both the career and single season hit-by-pitch category, was beaned with bases loaded and had to leave the game.

Xavier notched a single run in the top of the fourth putting them down by two runs, 5-3, but that was the closest the Musketeers would come to edging out the Minutemen. UMass answered with two more runs in the bottom of the fifth. Murphy drove in a run with an RBI double and then made his way around the basepath on a groundout by freshman third baseman Bryan Mazzaferro.

In the bottom of the sixth, Jette led off with a double and then came home on a single by Gorrie. Gorrie, UMass' leading base stealer, stole second and then came home on a single by sophomore second baseman Muchie Dagliere. Dagliere would score when Murphy blasted his first home run of the game, a two-run shot to deep right center field. The Murphy blast made the score 11-3 and proved the be the straw that broke the camel's back, sending Xavier starting pitcher Josh Bradford out of the game. Bradford, the 1996 A-10 Pitcher of the Year, gave up 11 earned runs on 12 hits in 5 1/3 innings on the mound, dropping his record to 8-4.

EMILY RILEY / COLLEGIAN

The UMass baseball squad destroyed Xavier 16-3 in the first round of the A-10 Tournament on Friday.

The eight run Minuteman lead froze until the bottom of the eighth. Gorrie was hit-by-a-pitch leading off the inning and Dagliere reached first on an error. With one out, Murphy went yard again sending his second homer of the game, a three-run affair, to left center field. UMass would add two more runs for a final score of 16-3.

The win marked Sullivan's first career nine inning complete game, boosting his record on the year to 5-1. Sullivan gave up just three runs on nine hits, while striking out five Muskateers.

This was a real good way for us to start off the tournament," said UMass coach Mike Stone. "We had good execution and ran the bases well, which helped us get good pitches to hit.

"Chad Sullivan pitched a great game, and settled down well after getting off to a slow start. But, we can't feel too good about how we played today, because we have a few more games to play here."

Stone was named A-10 Coach of the Year, for the third consecutive year, the second coach to do so in A-10 history.

Saturday, the Minutemen were slated to face Virgina Tech in the second round, but the game was suspended after one inning. First pitch was rescheduled for 1:00 Sunday, but results were not available to the Collegian before press time.

Four earn honors, Stone coach of year

By Casey Kane

Four members of the Massachusetts baseball team and coach Mike Stone garnered Atlantic 10 honors prior to Friday's first round A-10 Tournament game.

Entering the tornament with the No. 1 seed in the Eastern Division of the A-10, it is no wonder the squad earned so many league honors.

Sophomore second baseman Muchie Dagliere and junior shortstop Brad Gorrie were named to the league's first team; junior centerfielder Nate Murphy and freshman designated hitter Doug Clark were named to the conference second team. For the third year in a row, Stone was named A-10 Coach of the Year.

Dagliere led the Atlantic 10 in batting for the past three weeks with a .433 batting average. He has tallied four home runs and 45 RBI's on the year.

His .433 average is currently the best single-season mark in school history. A solid defensive player on the diamond, Dagliere committed only six errors on the year, and earned conference Player of the Week honors in late April.

Gorrie, one of the best base stealers in the league, has led the A-10 in stolen bases per game for most of the season, with .68 per game. Gorrie is hitting .378 on the year, with four homers and 27 RBI's.

Murphy, who has been touted as on of the best defensive centerfielders in the league, batted .358 this season. He connected for a team-high seven out-of-the-park shots, and 48 RBI's. Murphy is only the seventh player in UMass history to reach to 100 RBI plateau, and his total of 119 puts him fifth on the all-time list.

Clark, who didn't play baseball in high school, is averaging .314 with one dinger and 32 RBI's. Clark is one of only two freshman to make the all-league squads. On the basepath, Clark has stolen 15 bases in 20 attempts.

With his award, Stone becomes only the second coach in A-10 history to earn the Coaching distinction. He joins Rutgers' Fred Hill, who claimed the honor from 1991-93.

This year, Stone led the Minutemen to the A-10 East title and the nation's longest Division I baseball win streak at 18 games.

Stone's career record stands at 304-254-3, 250-166-1 at UMass. He won his 300th career game when the Minutemen swept a doubleheader with St. Joseph's on April 27; with UMass' victory over New Hampshire on May 7 gave Stone his 250th Minuteman victory.

The Minutemen, 34-10 overall, 16-5 overall, are competing in the Atlantic 10 Tournament in Boyertown, Pa. A tourney would boost Umass' chances at an NCAA Tournament berth. Last season, the Minutemen qualified for NCAA's, losing to Miami

Marlins' Al Leiter suprises fans, earns first no hitter

By Steven Wine
Associated Press

MIAMI — As Dave Dombrowski made his way from the press box to the clubhouse, he wore a grin that barely fit in the elevator. The Florida Marlins general manager was basking in the success of a risky investment.

Al Leiter had just thrown a no-hitter. Skeptics questioned Dombrowski's judgment in December when he signed Leiter to a three-year, $8.6 million contract. But the wild, injury-prone left-hander is off to the best start of his career, and he made history Saturday night in an 11-0 victory over the Colorado Rockies.

Facing just 28 batters, one more than the minimum, Leiter threw the 4-year-old Florida franchise's first no-hitter. It was also baseball's first this season.

"Spectacular," Dombrowski said. "It was just spectacular." Pitching for a team that ranks last in the majors in runs, Leiter improved to 6-2 and lowered his ERA to 2.33, fourth-best in the National League. No one has criticized his contract lately.

"I never really focused on that," said Leiter, holding a bottle of champagne after the game. "The press can say what they want. Scouts and general managers knew what Al Leiter was about. "I never thought about proving anything. I thought about coming in here and doing my share to help this team win."

Despite the 30-year-old Leiter's strong start this season, he was an unlikely candidate to throw a no-hitter. It was just his third shutout and fifth complete game since making it to the majors in 1987.

Leiter struck out six, walked two and hit a batter. He threw just 102 pitches, a total he often reaches by the sixth inning. "I was a little wild at first," said Leiter, who led the American League in walks last season with Toronto. "I slowly gained more confidence, and as the game went on, I realized something special might happen."

With a 6-0 lead, he gave up a walk and hit a batter to start the second inning but was saved by a double play.

"He always has outstanding stuff," manager Rene Lachemann said. "But he keeps you on the top step of the dugout."

Leiter was perfect, however, from the third inning on, retiring the last 20 batters he faced. There were no outstanding defensive plays or controversial calls, just dominant pitching.

After eight years in the American League, Leiter was facing Colorado for the first time. He extended the slumping Rockies' losing streak to six games but said their dangerous hitters brought out his best.

"That's an amazing lineup," he said. "That's what elevates a pitcher to be even more focused."

Adrenaline helped Leiter finish strong. His fastball was clocked at 92 mph in the early innings and 95 mph at the end. He mixed in sliders and an occasional curve.

"I haven't seen any starter in the National League throw harder than he did," Colorado's Dante Bichette said.

In the eighth and ninth, five consecutive Rockies hit the first pitch. The result was three groundouts, a popup and a flyout. That left Leiter one out away with Eric Young — a .324 hitter — at the plate.

The crowd of 31,549 stood and roared after each pitch as Leiter threw Young eight consecutive fastballs.

"I didn't want to get beat on anything else," Leiter said. Young fouled two pitches. Then, with a 3-2 count, he swung and missed.

"You have to tip your hat to the guy," Young said. "His fastball got me."

"From the sixth inning on, he could smell the no-hitter," Bichette said. "You could tell by the way he was throwing. I don't think we had a chance, no matter what."

Brazil announces human rights plan

BRASILIA, Brazil (AP) — Under pressure to curb human rights abuses, Brazil's government proposed sweeping legal reforms Monday that would make slave labor, kidnapping and torture federal crimes. The 168-point plan, announced by President Fernando Henrique Cardoso in a formal ceremony, seeks to dismantle a legal structure inherited from the military dictatorships that ruled Brazil for more than two decades.

Rights groups, however, said the plan was timid and little more than a wish list. Many of its provisions would require legislation, and others are simple pledges, such as ones promising to combat forced labor, encourage adoptions and improve blacks' access to universities and job training.

The plan calls for mandatory human rights courses for police forces across the nation and stiff penalties for inducing children into prostitution.

Announced exactly 108 years after Brazil abolished slavery, it comes amid a surge in accusations of slave labor, child prostitution and police violence.

"All this is true, and what hurts is that there is impunity," said Cardoso. "That's why we must create the conditions so that there is punishment."

Cardoso, a political exile during the military years, announced a payment of $98,000 to the mother of a leftist guerrilla who "disappeared" during military rule, which lasted from 1964 to 1985.

Man, who severed hand, sues hospital

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — A man who cut off his right hand because he thought it was possessed by the devil, then refused to let surgeons reattach it, is suing the hospital and the doctors over the loss of the hand.

Thomas W. Passmore claims doctors at Sentara Norfolk General Hospital should have contacted his parents or his sister to overrule his decision.

According to the lawsuit, Passmore, a 32-year-old working on a construction job, thought he saw the number "666" on his hand and believed it was a demonic sign. Obeying the Biblical instruction "If thy right hand offend thee, cut it off," Passmore sliced off his hand with a circular saw.

At the hospital, the lawsuit said, Passmore told doctors he had a history of psychiatric disorders, including manic-depression, and had had little sleep, little food and racing thoughts for the past week.

He refused to consent to surgery, saying he thought he would go to hell if the hand were reattached. The hospital contacted a judge, who advised that it heed Passmore's wishes, the lawsuit said.

According to the suit, the surgeon and the hospital did not tell the judge that Passmore was incompetent.

Everest blizzard kills eight climbers, one American survives

By Binaya Guruacharo
Associated Press

KATMANDU, Nepal — In bitter cold and howling winds, with the peak of Mount Everest just 500 feet above him, Rob Hall called his pregnant wife Jan on his fading radio to say goodbye.

Hall, a 36-year-old New Zealander, had just reached the peak of the world's highest mountain Friday for his fifth successful ascent. But on the way down, he trailed others in his expedition in a futile effort to help 44-year-old Doug Hansen of Renton, Wash., who was ill and struggling, as a fierce blizzard lashed the mountain.

Hansen died Friday night. Hall was near death when he called his wife Saturday.

On another section of the 29,028-foot-high peak, Seaborne B. Weathers of Dallas struggled down to about 20,000 feet and was plucked off yesterday in the world's highest-ever helicopter rescue mission.

"I am OK. I'm better now," Weathers said as he arrived at the Katmandu airport, his face raw and blistered by windburn, his hands crippled by frostbite.

Life and death, luck and chance. In all, eight climbers were believed to have perished this weekend one of the worst disasters since Everest was first conquered in 1953.

Yasuko Namba, 47, of Tokyo, was reported dead by another expedition member after becoming only the second Japanese woman ever to reach the top of Everest with her climb Friday.

Scott Fischer, 40, of Seattle and Andy Harris, 31, of New Zealand were presumed dead, as well as three climbers from India who began an ascent from the Chinese side of Everest.

Although their deaths have not been confirmed, alpine experts said no one has ever survived two nights in the open without oxygen on the southern summit of Everest.

Hall and Hansen were trapped on the mountain without oxygen, fluids, a tent or a sleeping bag. Hall survived the night, and was able to make a last call Saturday to his seven-months pregnant wife at their home in Christchurch, New Zealand, his friend Geoff Gabites said yesterday.

"I don't know what his last words were. It was a personal conversation between him and Jan. We are sure Rob did not survive another night out in the open," said Gabites, who is also chief executive of the Adventure Tourism Council.

Other friends said Hall was experienced enough to know he was going to die.

"A bivouac, without equipment 150 meters (500 feet) below the summit in bad weather means at the very least you're going to get frostbite and it could go right through to death," said Peter Hillary, who climbed Everest with Hall six years ago. "He would have been aware of that."

Since Hillary's father, Sir Edmund Hillary, conquered it 43 years ago, Everest's summit has been reached 629 times. Thousands more climbers came close. The elder Hillary himself has complained that the track is now so familiar it has become a tourist mountain. But that hardly reduces the danger. More than 100 people have been killed on its icy slopes. Their bodies remain frozen and irretrievable in crevices or under shifting snow and rock. Near the peak, most people need a tank of oxygen. Dehydration in the arid atmosphere can kill. High winds bring swift changes of weather, and the temperature is normally minus 40 at night. At least 11 expeditions were on the mountain this weekend, with each climber paying $10,000 in license fees. Approximately two weeks remain in the annual climbing "window" between winter and the Himalayan monsoon season.

Nepal has no rescue procedures for climbers in danger, and requires each expedition to take responsibility for its own safety.

The storm caught him 400 feet below the peak. It was too dark to continue, so he squatted on a rocky ledge without oxygen or anything to drink.

"But I couldn't make it on that day because of exhaustion and dehydration." Weathers said yesterday.

Western Mass. officials lobby for local casinos

Massachusetts officials went to Boston to lobby for the opening of a casino in Western Massachusetts

By Martin Finucane
Associated Press

BOSTON — A casino in western Massachusetts would create thousands of jobs and pump millions of dollars into the state's coffers, officials from communities in the area said Wednesday. The group, which came to lobby legislators at the Statehouse, included the mayors of Springfield, Chicopee, Westfield, and Holyoke and a selectman from Easthampton.

The casino would be "a major economic engine," said Daniel J. Szostkiewicz, mayor of Holyoke, where citizens have approved a casino in a non-binding referendum.

"The time has come for Massachusetts to approve legalizing casino gambling," he said.

Szostkiewicz said the $415 million casino would create 4,500 jobs during construction and as many as 7,000 jobs afterwards. The casino would attract 9.3 million tourists a year.

The state could collect $148 million in new taxes, he estimated. That would more than compensate for what he called a possible $50 million drop in state lottery revenue.

The numbers came from a study by a non-profit corporation that got its funding from several potential casino developers. But Szostkiewicz insisted they were "independent" figures.

Szostkiewicz said he and other local officials had met with nearly 50 legislators in recent weeks to try to get their support. "The most common response is, 'We'll keep it open. We're waiting for this to gain momentum," he said.

Szostkiewicz emerged from a meeting with House Speaker Thomas Finneran at the end of the day, saying he felt the officials' group had "made out very well."

Finneran was "very open and receptive to what we had to say" and told them that a vote on the issue was "possible" by the end of the legislative session, he said. He didn't state his own position on their issue, Szostkiewicz said.

Finneran didn't immediately return a telephone message seeking comment.

Building a western Massachusetts casino would be allowed under an agreement Gov. William F. Weld signed with the Wampanoag Indians of Martha's Vineyard.

The Indians have a right under federal law to open a casino on their tribal land. But instead of using that land they are proposing to build a facility in New Bedford on a city owned golf course.

Weld forged an agreement with them that would allow their casino, a separate casino in western Massachusetts, and hundreds of slot machines at four racetracks. The proposal now needs the Legislature's approval and several bills are pending that embody Weld's proposal.

Fallen pilot honored by husband

By Melissa Williams
Associated Press

DALLAS — As a teen-ager, Candi Kubeck was captivated by the airplanes that flew over her California home. She wanted to fly, just like her grandfather and uncles had done in World War I and Vietnam.

Her love led her to challenge Air Force cadets to a flying contest and to cross picket lines to work for now-defunct Eastern Airlines.

Her favorite TV show was "Wings."

Mrs. Kubeck believed to be the first woman commercial jetliner captain to die in a U.S. crash, was among 109 people killed Saturday when her ValuJet plane nosedived into the Florida Everglades.

But she didn't love flying enough to take chances, her husband said yesterday.

"She would have everything checked out," said Roger Kubeck. Mr. Kubeck, himself a pilot for America West Airlines, agreed to be interviewed by The Associated Press because "I don't want her to be a statistic."

Mrs. Kubeck, 35, often saw military planes flying over her childhood home near San Diego, her husband said. She was close to her grandfather, who flew biplanes during World War I.

"She was a pilot, that's all there was to it," said Kubeck, 38. "She was not a girl pilot. She thought of herself as one of the boys."

Supreme Court strikes down RI effort to limit prices in alcohol advertising

By Richard Carelli
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court, in a decision that might hamper President Clinton's effort to limit cigarette advertising, yesterday struck down Rhode Island's ban on ads that list or refer to liquor prices.

A unanimous court said the ban, aimed at promoting sobriety, violates free-speech rights. The ruling also gave other commercial speech greater protection against government regulation.

The full impact of the ruling, spelled out in four separate opinions, likely will not be known until lower courts begin to interpret it.

But the ruling marked the high court's strongest statement against regulating commercial speech since a landmark 1975 decision that extended to advertising the First Amendment's free-speech guarantee.

Yesterday's decision appeared to move commercial speech a step closer to being as protected against government regulation as political or artistic expression. But while all nine justices voted to enhance the freedom to advertise, only four favored doing so in sweeping fashion.

The court, however, appeared ready to discredit its own 1986 decision that said government may prohibit advertising for an activity if that activity — such as gambling — could be prohibited altogether.

Justice John Paul Stevens wrote in yesterday's main opinion that blanket bans such as Rhode Island's prohibition against liquor ads "rarely survive constitutional review." He rejected the state's argument that ads for "vice" products such as liquor should be subjected to increased regulation.

Just labeling some activity as a vice isn't enough to justify clamping down on accurate advertising if that activity itself remains legal, Stevens said.

Clinton and the federal Food and Drug Administration have proposed rules, opposed by the tobacco industry and others, that would forbid cigarette brand advertising at sports events and on T-shirts and other goods.

The proposed rules would ban tobacco billboards within 1,000 feet of schools and playgrounds and limit the use of pictures and colors in cigarette ads.

"I think the court's ruling gives more ammunition to those who inevitably are going to challenge any restrictions on cigarette advertising," said Scott Bullock, an Institute of Justice lawyer who had opposed the Rhode Island ban.

"It's not a closed case but the ruling appears to help their arguments," he said.

FDA spokesman Jim O'Hara said the proposed rules do not amount to a blanket ban on cigarette advertising but instead are aimed at reducing tobacco products' appeal to minors, for whom smoking is illegal.

While the Rhode Island case was under study, the justices held off considering a dispute over Baltimore's limits on billboard ads for alcoholic beverages. The city ordinance is aimed at curbing underage drinking.

Rhode Island law allows advertising for alcoholic beverages but since 1956 had required publishers and broadcasters to exclude any mention of prices, or even the word "sale."

The price-advertising ban was challenged by a Johnston, R.I. liquor store, 44 Liquormart Inc., and by Peoples Super Liquor Stores, which sells liquor to Rhode Island residents from stores in two Massachusetts stores.

Commencement will honor six

Supreme Court justice, heads list to receive honorary degrees

By Daniel E. Levenson
Collegian Staff

At the 1996 University of Massachusetts Commencement the University will honor six individuals who have made significant contributions to the UMass community.

Supreme Court Justice Stephen G. Breyer will be the featured speaker at the 126th commencement ceremony. Breyer, who was nominated by President Bill Clinton in August of 1993, is an author in the fields of government regulation and administrative law. He is a former judge in the First Circuit Court of Appeals in Boston. He was educated at Stanford University, Oxford University and Harvard Law School.

Five other noted individuals will also be receiving honorary degrees from the University.

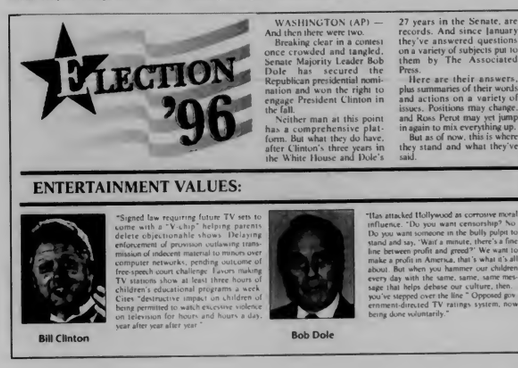
Janice Petrovich, a trustee of Mount Holyoke College and a director of the Center for Community Change and Women and Philanthropy, will be honored at commencement. She is an author and serves as program director for education and culture at the Ford Foundation.

Another person who will receive a degree on May 26 is Melvin H. "Mel" King. A former director of the Boston Urban League, and the founder of the Rainbow Coalition in Boston, King has also written "Chain of change: Struggles for Black Community Development," among other articles and books. Since 1976 King has been a professor at MIT where he is also director of the Fellows Program in the department of planning and urban studies.

George R. Ditomassi, a 1957 graduate of the UMass School of Management, has remained involved with the University extensively since receiving his degree. He serves on the Business Advisory Council of the School of Management and on the Chancellor's Executive Committee. Ditomassi is also involved in various community service efforts in Western Massachusetts.

Author Frances Hyde Crowe has made a career out of her improving her community. She is the founder and past chief counselor of the Northampton Draft Information center. Crowe received a prison sentence for writing her book "Thou Shalt Not Kill."

George G. "Trigger" Burke, a member of the UMass class of 1956 , is a former Boston Celtic team member and UMass basketball player. Burke was a Norfolk County District Attorney and served in the Massachusetts State Legislature. Approximately 4,000 undergraduates are expected to receive their degrees form the University in an outdoor ceremony held at the football stadium.



WASHINGTON (AP) — And then there were two.

Breaking clear in a contest once crowded and tangled, Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole has secured the Republican presidential nomination and won the right to engage President Clinton in the fall.

Neither man at this point has a comprehensive platform. But what they do have, after Clinton's three years in the White House and Dole's 27 years in the Senate, are records. And since January they've answered questions on a variety of subjects put to them by The Associated Press.

Here are their answers, plus summaries of their words and actions on a variety of issues. Positions may change, and Ross Perot may yet jump in again to mix everything up.

But as of now, this is where they stand and what they've said.

"Signed law requiring future TV sets to come with a 'V-chip' helping parents delete objectionable shows. Delaying enforcement of provision outlawing transmission of indecent material to minors over computer networks, pending outcome of free-speech court challenge. Favors making TV stations show at least three hours of children's educational programs a week. Cites 'destructive impact on children of being permitted to watch excessive violence on television for hours and hours a day, year after year after year.'

"Has attacked Hollywood as corrosive moral influence. 'Do you want censorship? No. Do you want someone in the bully pulpit to stand and say, 'Wait a minute, there's a fine line between profit and greed?' We want to make a profit in America, that's what it's all about. But when you hammer our children every day with the same, same, same message that helps debase our culture, then, you've stepped over the line.' Opposed government-directed TV ratings system, now being done voluntarily."

FDIC: Some banks are still failing

By Rob Wells
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — One of every four banks fails to warn customers about the risks of buying mutual funds and other investments that aren't insured by the government, according to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

The year-long survey of banks' sales of mutual funds and other investments, released yesterday, showed that 28 percent of customers weren't told that mutual funds lack federal deposit insurance. Savings accounts and certificates of deposit, on the other hand, are insured by the FDIC up to $100,000 in the event of a bank failure.

In 30 percent of the cases surveyed, banks failed to tell customers that stocks, mutual funds and other investments aren't federally insured. The survey found results were particularly negative when customers talked with bankers over the telephone about investments. Only 46 percent of customers were told on the phone that Wall Street investments lacked FDIC deposit insurance. "These results need to be improved," FDIC Chairwoman Ricki Helfer said in a statement.

A spokeswoman for the American Bankers Association agreed that the industry needed to do a better job.

The survey is the latest indication of banks' shortcomings in the sale of Wall Street investment products, which are a major growth area for banks. In 1994, banks sold about $317 billion worth of mutual funds, or about 15 percent of the industry's total. Mary Griffin, a financial services expert at Consumers Union, said the FDIC's survey is especially disappointing because regulators issued guidelines two years ago on how banks can better inform customers about risks of buying mutual funds or other non-insured investments.

"Obviously, they're not getting their act together," Griffin said, adding that the survey shows a need for stronger regulations. Sarah A. Miller, senior government relations counsel at the American Bankers Association, took issue with the survey's design. She said the mere mention of mutual funds in a phone call was considered a sales presentation, which requires a host of warnings. Despite this perceived flaw, Miller conceded the broader point. "I do agree that we have to do a better job," Miller said. "We are continuing to do more in that effort" by improving bankers' sales training.

The survey, conducted by Market Trends Inc. of Bellevue, Wash., was conducted by trained interviewers posing as customers, who contacted more than 1,000 banks in person or over the phone on 7,800 occasions. The FDIC analyzed the survey's findings.

A separate study released in January by Prophet Market Research of San Francisco, which examined brokers at 50 large banks, found one in four brokers weren't telling customers the investments weren't insured, or otherwise failed to follow regulators' guidelines for investment sales. The Prophet survey said banks' behavior was worse than during a similar survey in August 1994. The FDIC and other bank regulators established guidelines in 1994 concerning what banks should tell their customers, and Helfer said those rules should be re-examined in light of the latest survey.

Pataki looking to up sagging gender gap

By Caren Benjamin
Associated Press

ALBANY, N.Y. — When Gov. George Pataki announced in April he would lead the charge to remove the anti-abortion plank from the Republican Party platform, the head of the state Republican Family Committee sent him flowers.

Less than three weeks later, Lynn Grefe headed to Albany — this time to protest a state Senate bill the governor promised to sign that would ban late-term abortions.

Just a typical month in office for New York's fiscally conservative, socially moderate governor who until recently has been able to maintain a fairly consistent level of support among women voters.

But like his national counterparts, New York's governor has seen the support of women slipping in the polls.

Some women's groups say that the downslide could become a landslide by election year — no matter how many Pataki signatures pile up on popular bills like one mandating that women receive at least 48 hours of hospital care coverage after giving birth. In other words: It's the budget, stupid.

A national New York Times-CBS poll in late April found that when asked how they would vote if congressional elections where held then, women-supported Democrats by a 18-percentage-point margin, while men favored Republicans by a 7-percentage-point margin. A March 1996 poll from the Marist Institute for Public Opinion found Pataki has a 33 percent approval rating among women voters in New York, 10 percentage points less than his approval rating among male voters.

In September 1995, 57 percent of women voters approved of the job the governor was doing, compared to 41 percent of men, according to another Marist poll. In September 1994, 42 percent of women polled said they'd vote for then-candidate Pataki.

The governor has been trying to bolster those numbers with moves like last month's executive order banning the use of unmarked state police cars for making routine traffic stops, according to Marist pollster Lee Miringoff.

Sharon Fawley, New York state president of the National Organization For Women, called the order "a little baffling. "It isn't that we are unappreciative of such efforts, Fawley said. "It certainly is a small step. But there are a great many more things that he could and should do."

Like his national counterparts, Pataki's "budget proposals are less favorably received by females, particularly in the area of social programs issues," Miringoff said.

Pataki's proposed budget is blueprint '90s Republican.

He has sought to shrink the size of government and make state agencies more efficient and business-friendly. He has also tried to spur job creation by pushing a three-year state income tax cut which went into effect in 1995.

Pataki has also promoted a sweeping reform of the state's welfare program, including a lifetime limit on benefits, a reduction in public assistance checks and no additional money if people have more children while on welfare.

He has supported a crackdown on deadbeat parents, which he credits for forcing the payment of millions of dollars in child support payments that will help welfare families, particularly mothers.

"Gov. Pataki's budget offers hope and opportunity for every man, woman and child in New York," said Pataki spokeswoman Eileen Long.

"Welfare reform is essential for the renewal of New York. For too long, the failed welfare system hurt the people it was intended to help. Gov. Pataki is committed to promoting a strong work ethic and encouraging individual responsibility," Long said.

Fawley calls this misguided at best.

Women as heads of households make up a large portion of those that would go into workfare," she said.

These women need "job training that would provide a good, living wage and some opportunity for advancement in a chosen are, not these piddly little jobs that no body can make a living at anyway," Fawley said.

For women already in the workforce, the budget cuts to education and public transportation add to the fallacy that a minimum wage job can keep women off welfare, said Deborah Rothman, education and safety coordinator for 9-to-5, the National Association of Working Women.

Local bookstore signing showcases feminist authors

By Michelle Hillman
Collegian Staff

Food for Thought Books, a local Amherst progressive bookstore, hosted a book signing for two new feminist publications on May 2.

Participants in the informal gathering included two University of Massachusetts professors, Sara Lennox and Ketu Katrak, co-authors of Antifeminism in the Academy. Also speaking was Margaret Randall, author of The Hidden Cost of Women's Relationship to Money.

Ketu Katrak, Associate professor of English, and Sara Lennox, professor of Germanic languages, began by describing their motivation for writing Antifeminism in the Academy.

"We started hearing testimonies of women who described themselves as feminists and the harassment they endured because of it, or because other people thought they were [feminists]" Ketu Katrak said.

At first, Ketu and Lennox were just going to hand out a pamphlet highlighting the growing anti-feminist sentiment in academia. But they realized they needed a more analytical and philosophical look towards the issue, so they started handing out fliers.

Katrak and Lennox first started working on the book in 1988. In 1989 Katrak sponsored an open hearing on women's experiences with antifeminism at institutions of higher education. It was held at 8:30 a.m., and she was surprised when the session was packed with stories ranging from women's experiences at graduate schools to smaller colleges. This massive response was only the first indication of a growing tide of intolerance in universities and colleges.

As we worked on the book a more antifeminist movement emerged, especially from the right," Lennox said. She cited Christina Hoff Summers 1994 book, Who Stole Feminism, which launched a major assault against feminists.

Following a few short readings, Katrak and Lennox answered questions from an anxious audience regarding the emergence of antifeminist critique.

Katrak said that most critique comes from the popular culture — television, magazines, etc. Katrak also noted "no one is being deliberately antifeminist, it is the way the academy has always functioned.

Lennox added that resistance from the right wing is no coincidence. She explained that the right wing encompasses conservative corporations who are funding attacks against multiculturalism and feminism. Money from these corporations goes to the publication of antifeminist books.

One audience member was curious if the book included any solutions to the backlash that exists within the academy. Lennox replied by saying the last section of the book is an attempt to talk about institutional remedies.

"We wanted to identify this as a problem, and not only as sexual harassment. We wanted to get people naming the problem and exercise resolve," Lennox said.

When a feminist views pornography

Hannah Thorne

For weeks there has been a bulletin board in the Van Meter lobby displaying statistics of the pornography industry. The statistics are advertising a workshop put together by the Everywoman's Center and the Educator Advocate Program. These pornography workshops include slide shows and discussions that have taken place in Butterfield, Van Meter and Orchard Hill recently.

I recently attended the workshop in Butterfield dormitory. The crowd was large at the beginning of the evening, perhaps 50 people. But as the slide show progressed the crowd slowly dwindled to around 25 people. Perhaps it was the cartoons from convicted child-molester Dwaine Tinsley that Penthouse prints each month, or the images of Asian women hanging from trees also from Penthouse, or maybe it was the photo of black bitches in bondage that drove the week stomached out of the room.

Members of the crowd might have been bothered by the speakers description of how the women in the photographs most likely had their genitals held open with glue, or painted red and purple to suggest arousal. Or maybe they were bothered by the cartoon of the man holding his wife by the hair with cuts, bruises and scrapes all over her body or the photo of a woman with pieces of meat inserted into her vagina. If the main goal of pornography is pleasure then I need a clear explanation of how these graphic depictions of the dehumanization and objectification of women are pleasurable.

Let us draw a clear line between erotic or graphic sexual art, where women are not subjugated, and pornography. Pornography defined as "a demeaning and sometimes violent representation of sexuality and the body, typically a woman's." (Cambridge Encyclopedia) Or the root, porne, defined as "the graphic depiction of female sexual slavery." Pornography is not erotic art.

I was recently driving with a friend who did not want to honk in support of the picketers outside the Hadley adult video store. The signs asked motorists to honk if they were against pornography.

"I'm not against all pornography," she said.

I am fairly certain that the distinction she was trying to make had to do with the difference between hard and soft core pornography. But is there a distinction? And is one the distinctions of violent and non-violent pornography, violent being hard core and non-violent being soft core pornography? Then again very graphic material can be considered hard core but not violent. The differences between hard and soft core pornography blend together when we consider that all pornography, as defined above, is degrading to women. Obviously many people, mostly men, consume all different levels of pornography.

The pornography industry is huge. The billboard in Van Meter gives evidence to this fact; It states that pornography is a $12 billion industry, child pornography is a $4 billion industry, profits from the pornography industry exceed the film and music industry combined. Hustler, Playboy and Penthouse make $20 million a month, and nine of 10 men consume pornography on a regular basis. Is there an explanation for the enormity of this industry?

When notorious killer Ted Bundy was asked about his unending desire to kill women he said his drive began with pornography. Did alleged killer Gregory Breeden begin his career with pornography as well? It is interesting that the women he allegedly killed were prostitutes, which can be defined as a position of power for women, and that they were dismembered, which exemplifies objectification and dehumanization. Examples of the dehumanization and objectification of women were given in the slide show portion of the pornography workshop I mentioned earlier.

One main stream pornographic magazine featured on the cover a meat grinder with a pair of female legs and hips sticking out of the top, suggesting that women are not human but meat. Countless slides showed close-up shots of a woman's genitalia, suggesting she was just part, not a whole woman.

It is very difficult to argue against pornography when we consider our first amendment right to freedom of speech. But if pornography is a link to, increases and promotes sexual violence, what can be said to defend it? Obviously not all men who consume pornography will rape or kill women, but each man who is subjected to pornography is internalizing the degradation of women. Every minute of every day a woman is raped in this country according to the U.S. Justice department. And every minute of every day someone in this country is consuming pornography.

Police closer to answer in recent serial killings

RICHMOND, Mo. (AP) — A man suspected in the slayings of eight women, including four whose bodies were found partially dismembered, has been charged with one count of murder.

Gregory Breeden was charged Friday in the death of Viola McCoy, 36, whose mutilated body was found in September 1994.

Police said McCoy and three other victims were found with their legs removed at the hip in the same, precise manner. Seven of the women, most of them known prostitutes, were found dumped in the Missouri River between August 1986 and September 1994. One body has not been found.

Breeden, a former stock clerk for the Kansas City Public Works Department, has repeatedly denied the killings.

"I am absolutely, positively against violence," Breeden told WDAF-TV Friday from prison in Jefferson City, where he is serving time on bad-check charges.

Breeden was scheduled to appear in court Monday.

Women's abuse is no love story

We live in a society where many women live in daily fear of men. Fear of abusers, stalkers, rapists, brothers, fathers and lovers, especially husbands or boyfriends. The sad part about is that not only do we live in a violent society, but the media actually perpetuates violence through television, movies, books, advertisements and magazines.

A few weeks ago I went to go see the movie Fear and besides the fact that the movie was absolutely atrocious, it was very disturbing. This film is about a psycho guy (Mark Wahlburg) who not only stalks his girlfriend Nicole. (Reese Witherspoon) but her whole family.

He placed his hand over her mouth and said "I love you" as he stabbed her from behind through her stomach until the point of the blade could be felt on his own stomach.

Michelle Hillman

He uses manipulative, controlling techniques to make Nicole believe he is in love with her and she with him.

He successfully rapes her best friend and kills one of her male friends because he tries to help her escape from him. The fact that the movie industry not chose to produce a movie like this is troubling. But to make it appear so ludicrous and unrealistic that the audience leaves the movie theater mocking the stupidity of some of the scenes, the problem of violence and abuse that exists from the high school level to adulthood is trivialized.

A film such as Fear is most disgusting because the producers are profiting from one of America's largest problems — domestic abuse.

On Thursday Oprah Winfrey hosted a show about teen violence, opening the show with the statistic that one out of every four women experience violence before graduating high school.

The stories the women told on the show were not glamorized by the silver screen or ridiculed in any way by the audience. They were real stories of torment and murder, witnessed by friends and family. Stories that start as early as the age of 14, and end there. Jamie Fuller, 16, brutally beat and murdered his 14 year-old girlfriend after she broke up with him.

He placed his hand over her mouth and said "I love you" as he stabbed her from behind through her stomach until the point of the blade could be felt on his own stomach. He then covered her mouth and cut her throat, and as she lay on the floor, gurgling on her own blood, she said I love you. This pissed him off, so he stomped on her head. Jamie Fuller was convicted of first degree murder and sentenced to life in jail without parole.

Oprah gave another statistic, that 30 percent of all 15 to 19-year-olds die at the hands of someone who has said "I love you" to them. One couple featured on the show had been together for three years. Violence had become a part of their relationship and the boyfriend said he hit his girlfriend out of "compassion." He stated several excuses for hitting his girlfriend such as a tool for disciplining her, and because "she beat me too, she hurt me too."

When questioned by an audience member about his ability to control his anger on a bus, for example, the guest replied he would not allow himself to do something like that because he knew he would have to face consequences, assuming there were none for beating and hitting your partner.

The stories on the show could have been movies, but they are not. They are real life stories that go on every day. Violence is learned from the visual and audio messages that exist around us every day. Images like the ones America witnessed while watching the O.J. trial, hearing Nicole Brown on the phone screaming for help. According to District Attorney, Jeanine Pirro who started the first domestic violence program, "we've tolerated domestic violence for so long, so we shouldn't be surprised that it has trickled down."

Well America, it is time to do something about it. The first step obviously would be to start teaching boys and girls at a young age how to respect each other, but the second step would focus on the media. Let them know that it is repulsive that movies like Fear, that patronize the violence epidemic are being mass-marketed as Friday night entertainment.

Clinton pushes to aid teen moms; critics question the cash incentives

By Diane Duston
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Clinton ordered the government Friday to carry out his plan to help teen mothers break free of welfare dependency by living at home, staying in school and getting the education they need to get a job.

But one Republican critic said one element of the Clinton blueprint, giving cash bonuses to teen mothers who stay in school, sends the wrong message to the girls who don't get pregnant.

Clinton ordered the Department of Health and Human Services to use its legal authority to require states to submit plans describing how they will ensure that teen parents stay in school and prepare for a job. He also ordered the department to require teen parents who have dropped out and are on welfare to sign personal responsibility contracts that spell out how they are going to support themselves and their children, including going back to school.

The Clinton plan, which he announced in a radio address last Saturday, would also allow but not require states to reward with cash allowances teen parents who stay in school.

The Clinton plan would challenge states to use their existing authority to require minor mothers to live at home. "The plan I have outlined will help assure that the welfare system requires teen parents to follow responsible paths to independence," Clinton said. "Its swift implementation is vital to achieving our goal of further instilling the American values of work, and personal responsibility into our welfare system."

But Rep. Clay Shaw , R-Fla., said the message of Clinton's suggestion that states pay a bonus to teen mothers is: "Get pregnant, stay in school and get a big check." Shaw is chairman of the House Ways and Means subcommittee with jurisdiction over welfare.

Federal law already requires states to take welfare payments away from teen-age mothers who drop out of school. The Clinton administration says states should have the option of combining a carrot with that stick.

Teen-age mothers without high school diplomas stay on welfare longer and are more likely to return to welfare during their lives than those who have completed school, according the Department of Health and Human Services.

Many states have already adopted incentives to keep such girls school. In California, for example, teen parents get a $100 bonus for maintaining a C average and $500 for graduating from high school.

In Ohio, checks are increased by $62 for school enrollment and $62 each month if the teenager attends school regularly. Teens not in school have $62 deducted from their welfare checks each month until they comply with the rules. A $200 bonus is granted at graduation.

But Shaw said: "Other kids who are deserving, who play by the rules, who go to school, who are poor, who in many cases are struggling, they don't get a check."

Shaw's criticism came a week after Clinton announced his administration was going to get tougher with states about teen-age welfare mothers.

It was a day after Clinton met with a bipartisan group of senators and congressmen to discuss the differences between Congress and his administration on changing the overall welfare system.

Shaw was not invited to that meeting, his office said. The White House and Congress have tangled for more than a year over welfare. Clinton twice vetoed Republican bills, saying they were too harsh on the most vulnerable Americans. Since then, a bipartisan group of governors has been working with Congress to design legislation acceptable to both parties. And legislation is being drafted by moderate Republicans and conservative Democrats in both the House and Senate.

Rep. Michael Castle of Delaware, one of the moderate Republicans working on welfare changes, was among the lawmakers who met Thursday with Clinton, Vice President Al Gore and top White House advisors.

"The president told me our bill was a very good proposal," Castle said. "He said it showed the best understanding of how welfare reform should work."

Shaw also said he was trying to put welfare legislation on a fast track since time is running out in this legislative year.

Anti-abortion fight strong in France

By Eduardo Cue
Associated Press

PARIS — As a fashion model, Noelia Garcia strutted down runways from Paris to Tokyo and appeared in dozens of fashion magazines.

Today, after witnessing many of her girlfriends abort unwanted pregnancies, the 22-year-old language student is seen mainly in hospitals and courtrooms as a leader of France's anti-abortion movement.

She has accumulated 21 months of suspended jail terms and hundreds of thousands of francs in fines over the past year for taking part in disruptive rallies inside hospitals where abortions are performed.

"The death penalty was abolished for criminals in 1982; it has been applied to the innocent since 1975," she says of the Veil law that legalized abortion in France up to the 10th week of pregnancy. Although the militants have been inspired by the determination and demonstrations of American anti-abortion groups, the movement in France has not generated any of the bombings, shootings or arson attacks aimed at U.S. abortion clinics and their employees. But the French government and courts show little tolerance for anti-abortion "commandos" who raid clinics, chaining themselves together, singing, praying or simply remaining silent. The raiders are promptly arrested whenever they invade abortion clinics. "Our association has found the commandos its best form of action because they are what disturb people most," Claire Fontana, president of God's Truce, one of the most radical anti-abortion groups, said in an interview.

Indeed, they have succeeded in drawing attention to the issue in a society where polls indicate a vast majority believe a woman's right to an abortion takes precedence over any group's moral values.

The militants say the commandos give the fetus another chance at life and force women who have decided to abort to think about it. Fontana claims 300 women decided not to go through with the operation after a recent raid on an abortion clinic in the southeastern city of Grenoble. She offered no evidence to back up his claim.

More than 166,000 legal abortions were performed in France in 1995, the last year for which official figures are available. A decade earlier, there were 183,000, according to the National Institute of Demographic Studies.

But experts agree the real number is about 225,000 a year because many clinics and hospitals do not report all the abortions they perform. Critics contend doctors do not count abortions performed on women more than 10 weeks pregnant - the legal limit. Despite the publicity, abortion opponents have had no success in weakening the Veil law.

Only three of 577 Parliament deputies voted for an amendment that would have allowed anti-abortion groups to sue doctors and clinics on the grounds that they encourage abortions rather than just offer them as a last resort.

"Those who oppose abortion have a right to do so. But who can accept that a minority imposes its moral values on the rest of society?" said Socialist lawmaker Serge Janquin, who led the fight against the amendment.

In 1993, Parliament passed a law making it a criminal offense to prevent legal abortions. Since then, hospitals have not hesitated to press charges against anti-abortion militants.

Deputies also refused to include anti-abortion protesters in an amnesty declared for minor criminal offenses to mark President Jacques Chirac's election last May 7.

Courts have handed down increasingly stiffer penalties in an effort to deter the movement from becoming violent.

Twenty cases have been heard by the courts, which have ruled against the abortion opponents in all but one case. Even the single ruling in favor of protesters was overturned on appeal. To date, no militant has served time in prison, although dozens have received suspended sentences.

Lecture held in Butterfield on Beijing conference

By Hannah Thorne
Collegian Staff

On Thursday, May 8 in Butterfield dormitory, Ben Zeman held a lecture and discussion on the topic of his involvement with the Fourth World Conference of Women in Beijing, China.

Zeman went to the conference as a representative for the National Organization of Men Against Sexism. His goals at the conference were to create an international network for the National Organization for Men Against Sexism, to listen to the stories and experiences of women at the conference, and to have fun.

The discussion took place amidst a retrospective entitled "An American Man at the Beijing Women's Conference," which has been hanging in the dining room of the Butterfield dormitory for a few weeks, previously on display at Earthfoods. The exhibit consists of posters and collages Zeman has created with pictures, scarves, tee-shirts and other souvenirs from China.

Zeman actually stayed in Huairo, China which was the sight of Non-Governmental Organization (NGO) conferences, separate from the United Nations conferences held in Beijing at the same time.

Zeman talked mostly about his typical day at the conference. Daily activities included workshops, demonstrations and keynote speeches. The workshops were numerous and varied, one was led by two African women who spoke about female genital mutilation, another was about communication skills between men and women.

Zeman said there were many people in opposition to U.S. involvement with their countries. He showed a few slides of the speech given by First Lady Hillary Clinton in Beijing. In the crowd a group of individuals were holding a banner that read "Down with U.S. Imperialism." Another group called G.A.B.R.I.E.L.A., a radical feminist group from the Philippines, had a similar banner that read "Down with Imperialism, Women of the Toiling Class Unite."

Zeman also talked about the rumor that the Chinese government was uncooperative in response to the conference. He said in fact they were very helpful and welcoming, however certain Chinese individuals were not in support of Tibetans and lesbians.

Zeman was asked to give a two minute presentation on men's involvement with the conference. Zeman ended up being the only panelist to show up for the talk but decided to proceed anyway. His speech was picked up by a National Public Radio reporter, parts of it were used for a program called "All Things Considered."

Home Grown Lessons
by Anna Lotto

It was on one of those childhood Sunday mornings, in a sun-strew kitchen,
, when my mother's eyes
were glittering olive forests in the light, and warm wind blew through the vase-propped window that I learned how to be a woman.

Baking bread scents escape and bask in the lazy morning as she checks the oven.
I sit smiling on the counter, smiling at my mom's wistful, wishful, thin-lipped smile
as she hums with the playing music like a child herself.

My mom, who taught me the secret of happiness not through her skillful cooking or playful dancing, but when my father's angry voice broke our reverie with a bitter mouth-filled grumble,
And she only twirled lightly over the tiles, swept up my body in her arms and propped me on her hip
And without looking back, yelled at him "to make his own damn coffee" before kissing my cheek.

Women lack press space; study highlights problem

Front page newspaper references to females have declined for the second year in a row in 1996, according to a newly released study conducted by the group Women, Men and Media which documents how women are covered, hired and promoted in the press.

The eighth annual survey of news coverage and women found that front-page references to females constituted only 15 percent of front-page references in 1996.

Despite the fact that females make up 52 percent of the U.S. population (and 53.2 percent of all registered voters), fewer that one percent of references in front page political stories were to females. Prominent women in power in both the public and the private sectors received insignificant coverage, either as newsworthy subjects or as sources or important information or commentary.

The study was conducted in February when four key pages in 20 newspapers from around the country (both small and large markets) were examined. The study examined proper names in headlines and photo captions as well as female bylines and their appearance in photos on front pages. The major papers reviewed included The New York Times, Los Angeles Times and The Washington Post, among other prominent national papers.

According to the report, most front-page coverage of women was negative. A review of stories in which the key figure was female found "that slightly more than half concerned victims or other negative news. Women and girls who were murdered, missing, or abused; females who were accused of crime or other wrongdoing." In addition, bad news such as the divorce announcement of England's Princess Diana was also a frequent negative portrayal of women, the study said.

While women were under-represented on front page news stories, the study found, they were also shorted in key local pages (24 percent of references) and key business pages (14 percent of references). The percentage of female photo appearances on the front page occurred 33 percent of the time, the same as last year and a decrease from 39 percent in 1994, the report said.

Women making news are also a significant minority, according to the report. It stated that women wrote an average of only 26 percent of the opinion pieces on the op/ed or equivalent pages and 33 percent of bylines on the front pages.

The makers of the study this year noted unhappily that these figures not only represented a decline in women's representation in the press, but showed a stagnation in the news coverage of females.

Women, Men and Media (WMM) was funded for this study by The Freedom Forum, Capital Cities/ABC and the Sister Fund. WWM was founded in 1989 and co-chaired by Betty Friedan and Nancy Woodhull. Since 1989, the study has been conducted by Martha Junior Bridge of Unabridged Communications.

Coming out for New England's largest college daily

Jamie Sinsheimer

I wrote this poem. It wasn't really a poem though. I see it more as a jumble of semi-thought out phrases that flow together really nicely. I know, I know, not the usual style of writing one would expect to find in the Collegian, but usual is boring sometimes. Last week I read it for the first time aloud to a group of about forty people at Claudia's Cafe in Amherst. Needless to say standing up in a room full of writers and sharing my work was a very traumatizing experience. I did it though, and it was okay.

So back to this piece of writing. It's very personal. It's about me and I think it's something that really needs to be run as an editorial. Take it as a long poem that I'm trying to incorporate into news writing. Here goes:

My brain twitches and my emotions mingle throughout the leaves scattered out there. Here — sitting in this spot, it's nice here, I feel calm and comforted in a quiet sort of shadowy way.

I frame her face with my four fingers, she stands like a photograph — black and white — high contrast, a little fuzzy maybe and a tiny bit on the blurry side. I put the frame down, the photo stays etched in my mind. A soft guitar fades in the near distance, it echoes throughout the remote area and then tapers off. It's gone now, lost out there with my emotions — scattered through the lifeless leaves that live on the bright green grass.

White lights slowly fade to a soft piercing grey. It's grey here. Soft, delicate, warm, grey — grey like a small rabbit running across a bare street in the middle of a midnight blue evening. Hop-hop-hopping along into the depths of the forest, to the trees that have been sucked of all their life due to the changing seasons. Spring got lost in the shuffle this year, but returned today like a breezy cool movie.

A movie that has no cast, a movie that has no players, but that's what we are, we are the players, we are the cast. A cast credits. The credits never role because the movie never ends, it goes on and on. At this moment, I am the star of this movie and you — you are all just onlookers watching me act my part. A part that was never written for a movie that has no screenplay.

Mapped out — no, no — not me or you probably. Are we all marked the minute we are thrust out of loving, caring wombs? Yes. Well, maybe. Eighty-eight percent of us are. Women? Yes, you are all marked. Homosexual? Marked as well. African-American, Asian, Hispanic, Indian, a color — any color, yes, you too have a blemish that eliminates you from the perfection of society. I have two to my advantage: a woman — yes, I am a woman — bisexual, why yes I am that as well. I have a girlfriend, if you have a problem with it you better stop reading now before it gets too hard for you to handle. Be prepared to face it somewhere else though, because it is all over the place. So, that's me, marked. It's written all over my forehead — you'd be blind not to see it.

That's me, a marked woman — a woman — a maternal loving mother figure. Maternity is my role, but it shouldn't be, it should be your role instead. I am so sick of this role I have been forced to play for so long.

Exemplify my choice as a woman. My choice to make my own choices. Don't give me crap for it. She's soft, her lips delicate like mine, skin like a satin sheet, smooth and pure. With her, there is no light that has to be reached, it doesn't work like that in this place, the end isn't concrete and when it happens we melt together — just like M&M's do when you leave them in your sweaty palms for too long.

Okay, that's it. More poetic than an editorial should be, but it also means a lot more than most editorials do. I figured I come out and declare my sexuality to the world in a more dramatic way then 'hi, I'm Jamie and I'm bisexual.' That's pretty lame. I didn't really feel like taking that approach.

I decided to print this piece for all of you lovely readers because it contains important issues that need to be heard and addressed on this campus and throughout the five college community. Women and members of the GLBT community need to have their voices heard and I can't think of a better way to do it than in New England's largest college daily.

Asian self-evaluation

Lisa Chiu & Sunanda Ghosh

It was approximately 150 years ago when Asian immigrants first arrived inthiscountry, they came from China then, practically a colony of European powers. They came as sourjourners, with the intent to survive and provide for their families back in China.

They were treated in the United States as semi-slaves and indentured servants. They were convinced and coerced to come to the United States to satisfy the need of cheap labor for building industry, railroads and agriculture. These Chinese laborers were used to diffuse the white labor movement, by using them as a "reserve army" of cheap labor. The Chinese were employed on the most barest of wages. These Asian workers were exploited by their white employers, as well as subject to harassment, physical assult and lynchings by angry white workers. This all, to benefit the white American businesses.

I say this to stress two things, one that as Asian Pacific Americans, we have a long tradition of building up the wealth of this country with our labor, and secondly, that even today in 1996, we are subjected to the very same evil forces of racism, expolitation, and hatred as our ancestors did in 1882.

We are gathered here tonight to celebrate our Asian and Asian American heritage. In keeping with the theme of shattering images, let us define the images that white America depicts of us.

Asians in the United States are silent. The men are geeks and the women are either quiet and submissive or the exotic Asian lotus blossom waiting to unfold our petals at the hands of any white American G.I. We don't yell, we don't scream and we don't fight.

These are just some of the images that we must constantly fight, images created by the white majority aimed at keeping our collective voice out of "their" country.

Let us shatter these images by looking at the grim realities.

On January 17, 1989, a white man, Patrick Purdy fired 100 rounds from an assult rifle into a crowded elementary schoolyard, killing four. The police and media portrayed him as a deranged individual, not mentioning that he was dressed in military fatigues, or that he was known in the community to have harrassed young Southeast Asian children, telling them to go home, where they belonged. The media failed to say that the children murdered were all Cambodian. Raphanor Or was nine years old, Ram Chun and Oeum Lim were both eight years old, and the youngest two, Sokhim An and Thuy Tran were just six-years-old.

Similiarly another white man, by the name of Richard Millhous Nixon, ordered secret bombings in 1974 on Cambodia on Christmas Day. This series of bombings lasted two weeks, reducing a peaceful neutral country to rubble and killing hundreds of thousands.

On January 30, 1985, Jean-Kar-Har Fewd an eight-year-old Chinese orphan girl from Hong Kong was found dead, hanging from a tree in Chapel Hill, N.C. The crime was racially motivated and the purpetrator was charged with kidnapping, rape and murder.

A few months ago a 12-year-old Okinawan girl was raped by three American G.I.'s on the United States Naval base in Okinawa. The presence of U.S. Naval bases in South Korea, and the Philippines have created the sale of Asian women as sex toys. Sex tourism is the number one source of income for poor Asian countries such as Thailand. This abuse of Asian women is all for the pleasure of western businessmen.

Again on September 27, 1987, in Hoboken New Jersey, a middle-aged Asian Indian executive was taunted by 11 teenagers. The teenagers punched, kicked and beat him on the head with a brick. Three days later he was dead. Four of the elevem were tried and later released, just like in the 1992 Rodney King verdict.

Such violent racially motivated incidents have occurred all over the United States and even at our campus. Last year an Asian student was walking home after class when he was attacked and beaten by two white non-students. As they beat him up, they called him a nigger. They were later tried and found guilty of assult and battery and civil rights violations.

One-hundred-and-fifty years ago our ancestors were expolited and today we continue to be exploited by the whitet majority, these injustices occur not only for Asian Americans in the United States, but to our Asian brothers and sisters in the Third World as well.

In the 1950's, leaders of newly independent Third World nations such as Mao Tse Tung of China, Jawaharlal Nehru of India, and Gammal Abdul Nasser of Egypt, expressed their solidarity with the struggles against racism and exploitation by the United States. Similarly, many Black leaders such as Malcolm X, W.E.B DuBois, and Martin Luther King, reached their political vision when they alligned themselves against internal and external racism by supporting decolonization struggles in Africa and the rest of the Third World. Even today a great moral leader of the African American community, the Honorable Minister Farrakhan, expressed this sort of solidarity in his recent visit to Africa and the Middle East.

As a consequence, the modern civil rights movement of the '60s, won a number of gains for people of color in the United States. Gains such as the end of segregation, the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the voting rights act, and of course, Affirmative Action.

These gains of civil rights in the United States, and political freedom in Third World Asian states, depended on solidarity between people of color in the US and the Third World Asian states. Nonetheless, the Asian American community for the most part, remained indifferent to these stuggles, both at home and in Asia.

Ironically, the ones who have seen the most economic gain through Affirmative Action, and other civil rights legislation, has been the Asian American community. Our Community has unjustly taken advantage of these gains in which we did not play an active role in.

For example, even on the UMass campus, in 1992, it was primarily the Black, Latino, and Native American communities that fought for the 1992 ALANA agreements, but the negotiating team did include seats for the Asian American community.

Even today at UMass, we find the number of Asian Americans is greater than any other ALANA community. This lack of participation at both the local and national level has created a perception in the eyes of the rest of the ALANA community that Asian Americans are racist, that they have been brainwashed by the white majority into believing that they are superior to other people of color, but yet inferior to white people. Asian Americans have allowed themselves to be, "divided for other people of color and conquered by the white man."

The UMass administration (a.k.a. the local white man) continuously attempts, and accomplishes it in the most part, to separate the Asian Americans from the rest of the ALANA community. They would prefer us to perform traditional dances, rather than ask why there are so few people of color at our University. They would rather us sing traditional songs, than fight for increased funding for the ALANA academic advising centers. They would rather have us cook ethnic food for them, than ask for the end of police harassment of all people of color. In other words we are to be exploited as engineers, entertainers and exotic dolls.

Also, the white majority is so racist in their quest for dividing and conquering the ALANA community, that they will not even tell us of our own great moral leaders. How many of you have heard of Yuri Kochiyama, and Asian American leader who is hailed as the "Queen of Harlem" by the community of color there? This woman has worked tirelessly her whole life, with Black leaders such as Malcolm X, to end U.S. imperialism and inequality both here and in the Third World.

As Asian Americans we need to rise above this colonized mentality, we must seek to build solidarity with people of color both in the United States and Developing Nations.

I was very saddened to see so few of us, Asians, at the ALANA takeover last week. We must remember we are people of color, and we have the responsibility to end oppression and racism for all our sisters and brothers. *This was a speech given at the 1996 annual Asian Night. World's largest democracy goes to polls

News Analysis

By Shyamala Ivatury
Collegian Staff

India the world's largest democracy went to the last week. Over 500 million cast their ballots in what has been the most unusual election in the history of the republic, with no single party receiving an out right mandate.

Elections were held in 537 of the 545 elected seats of the lower house of the Indian parliament (Lok Sabha). Among the big winners are the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) and its allies securing 185 seats, the National Front-Left Front alliance (NSLS), securing 123 seats, and the regional parties securing over 190 seats.

The big surprise was the performance of the incumbents the Indian National Congress (INC), securing only 135 seats. Thus the new government will have to be a coalition of various parties.

Yesterday, none of the major parties were invited by the president Shankar Dayal Sharma, to form the government, since no single party secured the requisite 269 seats, which constitutes a majority.

Leaders of both the BJP and NSLS met with the president over the weekend, asserting their right to form the government. The BJP has threatened to take the matter to the supreme court if president Sharma does not call for Vajpayee to form the government and allow the party 30 days to secure the majority.

The NSLS is seeking to form a secular alliance with the Congress and other regional parties so as to prevent the BJP from coming to power. Their banner is that of a "secular and good" government versus a "communal and corrupt" government. The NSLS will need an alliance with Congress in order to become the majority.

Nonetheless, some leaders of the NSLS claim that they will just seek the support of the congress seats in parliament, without any power sharing in cabinet/ministerial positions.

At present, there appears to be frantic maneuvering and negotiation on part the of the various parties, to gain the majority, and the most number of seats.

All the three major parties, do agree on economic liberalization, foreign direct investment, multinational investment in India, but it is clear that both the BJP and the NSLS will have more restrictive policies towards this liberalization.

Another unique feature of this election is that as no single party has won an outright mandate, the election can be read as a major repudiation of the personal dishonesty and corruption within the INC.

The party of the Nehru family, the congress is over 100- years-old and has been in power for approximate 44 of the last 50 years. Under the leadership of P.V. Narasimha Rao, former prime minister of India, the party initiated economic liberalization in an attempt to induce foreign direct investment in India. The liberalization policies have been popular especially among the middle and upper classes. The mantra of the congress, "Stability for Prosperity" resulted in an overwhelming mandate for them in 1991. In 1991 the congress and its allies secured 271 seats, receiving an overwhelming mandate to rule the country.

Nonetheless in the past five years, party members have been riddled with a stream of corruption charges. This election can be seen as a "referendum" repudiating the rampant corruption among congress members i.e. the personal qualities of the members, not necessarily the policies of the congress.

The winner of the most seats has been the BJP, the standard bearer of the Hindu Nationalist movement, headed by Lal Krishna Advani and Atal Behari Vajpayee. The BJP secured 70 seats more than what they received in the 1991 elections. The party favors the stepping up of India's nuclear program, a tougher stance on Pakistan, constitutional changes that would end the special status of Jammu and Kashmir, and a "uniform civil code."

The party originated as Jan Sangh in the '30s, merged with the Janata party in the late '70s to form the government in 1997. In 1980, after the Janata party lost power, it was renamed the BJP. Avowedly, communal in nature and rhetoric. The popularity of the BJP and its allies has been on the rise in the last few decade. If the BJP were to form the government, it is expected that the new prime minister will be the moderate leader Atal Behari Vajpayee.

Fluent in Mandarin Vajpayee favors a closer cooperations with China. The NSLS is an alliance of centrist and left parties, including the Janata and the Samajwadi parties which are the two centrist parties and the four leftist groups the Communist Party of India [Marxist] (CPI-M), the Communist party of India, the Revolutionary Socialist Party, and the Forward Bloc. The main platform of this alliance includes socio-economic justice for the poor. The alliance was formed before the 1989 general election, and formed a government under V.P. Singh this government collapsed after 11 months.

If this party comes to power, the new prime minister will most likely be Jyoti Basu, the chief minister of West Bengal state and leader of the CPI-MI. In West Bengal, Jyoti Basu oversaw a number of programs for poor people, such as land reform, health care in villages, and primary education. He has been a big supporter of Rao's economic liberalization.

The biggest victors in this election has been the regional parties such as the DMK, and TMC. This is another indication of the mood of the electorate that they are fed with a corrupt central government and do not have much confidence in the major national political parties.

Whichever party does form the government it is unclear that they can survive a "no-confidence motion" for an extended period of time.

Third World & ALANA Community United

With this, our last installment of Developing Nations, we hope to be providing an informative array of articles and events concerning the "developing nations" around the world. From an excerpt of Fidel Castro's speech to the United Nations, to an article on 'racial categorization', we hope that the page has maintained its quality this semester, and hope to continuously improve with next semester's page. Although we were only able to put out two spreads for this semester, we hope to possibly reach the consistency of past pages, and also be a provider of relevant information for the entire UMass community.

Again we could like to request that those of you who want to write for the page, please come do so next semester. We absolutely encourage all writers to come down and contribute to what this campus should be reading about everyday.

Thank you, Sunanda Ghosh and Ibrahim Ali.

Learning solidarity from the Malcom X and Castro alliance

Sunanda Ghosh

The relationship of Malcolm X and Fidel Castro is one that exemplifies solidarity between the struggles of Third World people and African Americans in the United States.

Both were revolutionary heros among their people, seeing the connections between their own local struggle and the global struggle against imperialism and racism. At a personal level there was deep mutual respect for one another as they saw each other as the new leaders for social change in their respective societies.

Castro met Malcolm X in 1960 after the Cuban Revolution, when he came to the United States to address the 15th Session of the United Nations General Assembly. Castro came only to find himself being ignored by the leaders of the western nations and their allies. This attitude was most evident when the U.S President Eisenhower held a reception in and invited every Latin American head of state except for Castro.

Even though the white power structure snubbed Castro, he was greeted with great warmth and enthusiasm by a large number of people of color. Feeling unwelcome and disgusted by the attitude of the management at the midtown Shelberne Hotel where he was staying, Castro and the Cuban delegation moved to the Hotel Theresa on 125th street in Harlem. On arrival thousands crowded the streets to see and cheer them on.

This was were the memorable meeting between Fidel Castro and Malcolm X took place. Along with Malcolm X many other leaders of Developing Nations such as Nasser, Nehru and Nkrumah came to pay their respects to Castro at the Hotel Theresa. Malcolm arrived at the Hotel Theresa around midnight. After introductions, Castro sat on the edge of his bed, and kindly asked Malcolm to sit besides him and spoke to him in English.

Members of the Castro party crowded up the small room most of them smoking long cuban cigars. When on the topic of African Americans, Castro, being well known for fighting discrimination in Cuba, as everywhere else, comments to Malcolm "You lack rights and you want your rights. Our people are changing. Now we're [Cubans] one of the most free people in the world. Malcolm stated " as long as Uncle Sam is against you, you know you're a good man."

Many others topics such as, Africa, the United Nations, U.S./Cuba relations, and the state of African Americans were discussed during this historical meeting.

This is one event in the long history of cooperation and solidarity between revolutionary African Americans and Developing Nation leaders.

On September of 1990 in Havanna, the Castro regime hosted a symposium honoring the legacy of Malcolm X. This sypsium was attended by African American activist, scholars, and youth leader as well as a large number of progressive act from the developing Nations.

The relationship between Fidel Castro and Malcolm X remains a symbol of unity between people of color in the United States and the peoples of Developing Nations.

Excerpt from speech given by Fidel Castro at the United Nations 50th Anniversary:

Half a century ago the United Nations organization was born after the continuation of a monstrous war where an average of at least ten million lives were lost at it's peek moments. At present, 20 million men, women and children are dying very year of hunger and curable diseases. Some wealth nations have a life expectancy of up to eighty years, while others have hardly forty. So there are billions whose lives are cut off. How long shall we wait for this carnage to end? The cold war is over, but the arms race goes on. And nuclear and military hegemonism perpetuate themselves. How long shall we wait for the total removal of all weapons to mass extermination? For universal disarmament, and for the elimination of the use of force, arrogance and pressure in international relations. The obsolete veto privilege, and the ill use of the Security Counsel by the powerful, are exalting a new colonialism within the very United Nation. Latin American and Africa do not have one single permanent member on the Security counsel. In Asian, India has a population of almost one billion, but it does not enjoy that responsibility. We lay claim to a world without hegemonism, without nuclear weapons, without Interventionism, without racism, without national or religious hatred, without outrageous acts against the sovereignty of any country; a world of respect for the independence and self determination of peoples, a world without universal models that totally disregard the traditions and culture of all components of mankind. We lay claim to a world without ruthless blockades that cause the death of men, women, and children, youths and elders, like noiseless atom bombs. We lay claim to a world of peace, justice, and dignity, where everyone without exception has the right to life and well being.

Jordanians take to the streets denouncing Israel

By Munther Haindon
The Jordan Star

Courtesy of The Jordan Star

All over the country, people are taking to the streets to demonstrate their condemnation of Israel's continued bombardment of Lebanon.

More than 2500 people participated Tuesday (April 23, 1996) in one of the biggest demonstrations to take place in Jordan since the Gulf War. The downtown protest, called for political parties and professional associations, was preceded by a number of demonstrations in Irbid, Salt, Zarqa and at the University of Jordan.

Jordanians denounced Israel's shelling of civilians in Lebanon which claimed the lives of more than 150 people in two weeks. The Israeli attack elicited the strongest anti– Israel sentiments since the signing of the Jordan-Israel peace treaty less than two years ago.

Opposition parties and NGO's issued statements condemning the Israeli onslaught and called for an immediate end to the Jordan-Israeli peace treaty. Holding placards and shouting slogans, the protesters accused Israel of attempting to subjugate Arabs and imposing its political and military power in the region.

Last week Jordan witnessed intensive reactions to the attacks. Among these were the demonstration organized by the Jordanian Women's Union (JWU) in front of the Lebanese Embassy. "It is the least we can do to support Lebanon," Nadia Abu Falah, one of the participants, told The Star. She added that these reactions are still not up to the required standard.

The authorities, while keeping a watchful eye, did not attempt to interfere in the peaceful marches...

To express their indignation, protesters carried signs that bore statements such as "No peace with Zionist Nazisss"; "We all stand in support for Lebanon: a land of Arabs and Mulims." Except for the banner which read "kick the Israeli ambassador out of Amman," the slogans were to a great extent synonymous with those used in the past.

Politics was evidently mixed with feelings of anger, which opened the door to different interpreations of the situations in Lebanon. "Peace was made to stop the shedding of blood not to increase it," said Abu Falah. The National Jordanian Committee in Support of Lebanese People, recently formed, rejected all peace treaties from Camp David to Wadi Araba.

"There is an increasing awareness that peace is becoming a joke as it is not in harmony with people's needs," said Labeeb Kamhawi, a political analyst. "It was not until the world reacted sharply to the Lebanese situation that we decided to condemn Israel," he added.

Reactions were directed against the double standards of the Israelis. "While the killing of one or two Israelis shakes the international community, the slaughter of hundreds of Lebanese people, most of whom are innocent women and children is overlooked, for the sake of the so-called 'Security of Israel'," said Asma Khader, a prominent Jordanian lawyer. "Lebanon pays the lives of innocent people as a price to guarantee the security of Israel... It is unbearable that the security of Israel is becoming the responsibility of the whole world, even if it was at the expense of civilians," she added.

The downtown demonstration attracted people of different political views which led to lack of organization due to counter-chanting. All present however, joined in the condemnation of Israeli aggression.

"There is no doubt that diplomatic efforts to solve the situation are moving very slowly," said Khader. "These efforts are subject to Israeli military logic which conceives the lives of children as legitimate taxes for the accumulation of votes."

The Return of Desert Storm

Ibrahim Ali

Sometime in the near future CNN may broadcast that the Islamic nation of Sudan is being invaded – "Desert Storm" style. This nation will be the victim of an aggressive force that includes armed contingents from Ethiopia, Eritrea, Uganda, Egypt, Saudi Arabia, and Qatar. This coalition is currently receiving logistical and financial support from the United States and its allies.

Why is this happening?

In recent months the country of Sudan has made efforts to establish an Islamic state, which in the eyes of western nations, equates the country as harboring terrorist activity (in fact the U.S. government has declared Sudan as a "terrorist state").

This paranoia surrounding the Sudanese governments wish to become an Islamic state is due to these nations governments running ideologically counter to western interests. The establishment of such a state will mean the establishment of political and economic institutions which the United States and other western nations will have difficulty manipulating. The absence of the ability to control and manipulate means the United States and its allies will not be able to continue to plunder the Muslim countries of their natural resources, nor install leaders who oppress their people in order to do the bidding of the west.

A brief chronology of events will clearly show a pattern of escalating activity against Sudan. This pattern is designed to harass the country to a point of provocation and response. It is the response to that provocation that the United States backed coalition will use as an excuse to wage war against Sudan.

In December 1994, a meeting in Asmara,Eritrea culminated with the "27 December Agreement." Among this agreements resolutions was the "non-use of religion in politics." This euphemistic language is promoting the secularized nation, and undoubtedly encouraging the breakup of the Sudanese Islamic state.

Around this time it was reported that the United States was funneling substantial military aid to the so-called Sudan's People's Liberation Army (SPLA), an avowedly Marxists-Leninist group admittedly focusing on destroying the Islamic government of Sudan by force. In armed encounters with the legitimate Sudanese army, the retreating troops have left behind weapons made in the U.S., Britain, France, and South Africa.

By March 1995, Israel also became involved in the process of supplying arms and training to the SPLA. This was done while the US was attempting to build a northeast African coalition against Sudan, Ethiopia and Eritrea. (Both bordering the Red Sea and thus strategically important to an invasion of Sudan), are core countries around which the United States intends to build this coalition. Training camps funded by the U.S. have already been reported to be in place in each country, as they prepare troops for the possible invasion.

The June 26, 1995 attempt on the life of Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak in the capital of Ethiopia Addis Ababa, revealed the extent to which the United States backed plan against Sudan is willing to go through to rally international opinion against the forming Islamic state. This assassination attempt, which many observers now believe was staged, was an ingenious scenario designed to legitimize Egypt's and Ethiopia's participation in the anti-Sudan conspiracy.

In fact, Egypt and Ethiopia have so vociferously accused Sudan of harboring three co-conspirators, that they have successfully urged the United Nations to pass a resolution condemning Sudan, and the demand to release the three supposedly involved into U.N. custody.

Although Sudan has repeatedly stated that the men are not within its border, the United States, Egypt, and Ethiopia are unwilling to drop their charges and thus Sudan may face possible economic sanctions.

Many biased stories have been released about the Sudanese government, yet it has done a far better job than the previous administration in meeting the basic needs of the Sudanese people. The previous government, which received millions in foreign assistance, was unable to curb the dreaded famine which today no longer threatens the millions of lives it previously did. The present government has improved the telephone system, made electrical power plent(iful, and made crime virtually non-existent.

The West, despite these improvements, still believes that without hard currency the regime cannot survive for long. There is no denying that, like other Third World nations, Sudan needs foreign investment for development. The World Bank has estimated that Sudan needs 600 to 800 million in foreign exchange each year to keep up with basic operation services and continue the war. The best estimate is that the country is earning about 350 million a year

The direction that the United States, the Pope, the United Nations, and the World Bank are demanding of Sudan is too high in the eyes of the Sudanese government. To become part of the 'World Order' Sudan must give up the Sharia (Islamic Law), grant the Christan south independence, cut off ties with all so-called Muslim "militant groups," and bring fundamental changes in its domestic and foreign policies.

Sudan faces considerable obstacles in the coming months. The United Nations intends to tighten sanctions for failing to hand over Mubarak's attempted killers, abeting Islamic insurgency in Egypt, harboring Hamas members and so on. Meanwhile southern separatists are contiually receiving heavy arms and training from various sources in neighboring countries, and discredited opposition leaders continue to employ unethical methods to try to topple the government.

Western policy makers seem sure that economic boycotts and alienation from other Muslim and African nations, (which has crippled Sudan's economy, forcing a devaluation of its currency, and high inflation), will force the Islamic government out.

Many people around the world support Sudan's sovereignty and desire to rule according to Islamic law and tradition. It's alarming that the United States, despite all the pressing domestic issues it is facing going into the 21st century, is about to embark on yet another countries right to rule as it wishes.

Racial classifications don't work

Lamumba Fernandes

When I opened the March 6, 1996 issue of the Collegian, and flipped to the Multicultural Affairs section I saw a picture of W.E.B. Du Bois, and a chart with the headline: "In defense of Justice: traditions of Jewish Anti-Zionism." Next, I re-focused my attention on the chart and began diligently to peruse it. I observed the different student ethnic/"racial" groupings on the horizontal axis. Each student ethnic/"racial" groups had their respective bars that represented their total populations at UMass/Amherst. On the left side, vertically, was the total student body population in increments. Out of all the bars, the highest was the "white" bar. The others were the ALANA groups broken into Native American, Cape Verdean, Latino/a, African American, Asian and lastly non-reporting. I oppose this division or classification of African heritage people namely, the separate category for Cape Verdean from the African-American category.

One of the weapons that was used by the capitalist– colonialist–imperialist was and is, to divide and conquer. So in this case, the division of Cape Verdeans from the category African American is dangerous. Other African heritage people were not separated from the category, such as Haitians, Jamaicans and so on. Nevertheless, it is true that during the 1970s, some Cape Verdeans fought and won for this separate category. Their reason it seems was caused, in short, because they wanted to assert their cultural identity. The concept "cultural pluralism" had caught on fire during the mid-70s by the celebration of the American bicentennial. Another overlooked reason is that Cape Verde had won its independence on July 5, 1975. It seems that they wanted to re-connect themselves by proclaiming their Cape Verdean roots or heritage. Granted this might be true, but the concept "cultural pluralism" is only a smoke screen. Furthermore, the debate about cultural pluralism is too late and too little.

The "white" group seemed more inclusive. It was not termed Euro-American, or white American. Also, the word white might confuse some people. Most of the time, the way you look is what you are. If you "look white,"; then, usually, you are considered white. However, the category African American might seem to some, exclusive. For example, I have heard Haitians, Cape Verdeans and others say emphatically that they are not African American. It does not appeal to them. Therefore, more division arises out of this unfortunate circumstance. However, cultural pluralism does not apply to "whites." They are not broken down as Italian, French, Anglo–Saxon, Portuguese, German and so on. They are simply "white." Therefore, it is easy for any European or European heritage peoples to identify themselves as white. This was not done accidentally, however, but by deliberate design. They do not want to divide. As Abraham Lincoln said, "a house divided cannot stand." We must realize this also.

The time and place we are living in, calls for umoja (unity) more so then ever. First, the time is 1996. We are heading into a new millennium. Now, we are seeing the resurgence of the right wing as a political power. Its agenda includes, a balanced budget, anti-affirmative action legislation, anti-immigration legislation, tough prison sentences, more prisons, and so on. It is a time when broadening this category is politically shrewd. Second, we are living in a place called the United States of America. It is a superpower that is at the forefront of leadership, directing the world. Therefore, if this attempt by the government to sharpen the division, by proposing a new separate category for interracial/mixed people succeeds, domestically, then internationally, it will further the division with our brothers ad sisters. This will re-plant the seed of tribalism, which we are so desperately trying to uproot. We cannot be subdued into looking at the world through a straw. We must remember that "the system" does not differentiate among black people. We are discriminated and oppressed as a group. If we are discriminated and oppressed as a group, then we must be represented as a group. Therefore, this attempt by the government to create this separate identity is to its advantage.

In conclusion, the student ethnic/"racial" category must be more inclusive for African heritage people. An African proverb states: "I am because we are." So I am Cape Verdean because we are African, you are Haitian because we are African. You are African American because we are African and so on. We must remember at all times that we are Africans first and foremost. This collective identity must be our motto in continuing the struggle.

Long live the African World Revolution. Death to the oppressor and the forces of imperialism. The Victory is Ours!

Crunch time

Andrew Trodden

As I'm sure you are all aware the end of the semester is once again upon us. Since there's no use meddling over what has transpired this semester I thought I might take a little look into what still remains for most of us.

Let's begin with that all too familiar phone call home. "Hi Mom and Dad, say what kind of mood are you guys in? Okay good, are you sitting down?" These may typically be the opening lines for many students who are about to attempt an explanation as to why they have again managed to attain a GPA equivalent to a bag of rocks.

Others may select the more direct method, "I've got something to tell you and I hope you appreciate my honesty." I choose to add a little bit of fun and excitement into the ordeal, make it kind of a game for my parents. "Hey guys, guess what?" If they're willing to play along, this can be pretty fun. But by this time in my college career they pretty much know the answer to the "guess what" game.

Any other answer offered is simply my parents attempt at making fun.

To mention failure without mentioning the end of the semester, all encompassing efforts to dig ourselves out of the depths just wouldn't be fair. It's necessary to create the illusional feeling that you actually did do some work this semester. Otherwise we will come to the all too shocking revelation that we actually are failures. So in desperation we try to complete as many of those missed assignments as humanly possible.

This procedure at this point in the semester will of course involve many a sleepless night writing, typing and studying away. Keep in mind that while we do all that old stuff there's still all those final papers and exams to worry about. So to aid us in staying awake on those late nights we'll ingest anything we feel might help us along that road. I myself have become the self proclaimed "king of the "ines," you know caffeine and nicotine. Heck if I had any Ovaltine, I mix some of that up too.

Allow me to give you all a nice example of this madness. At the end of last semester during a stretch of 80 hours I managed to sleep only eight of them. Yes, eight. My nightmare was consciousness. Instead I was busy typing 35 plus pages while doing the research, taking three tests, drinking about a case and a half of Mountain Dew, and smoking a carton of Marlboro's. I don't remember much after that. I think I began to hallucinate from lack of Z's.

It would be silly to think that this load of work just appears on one's schedule. So, but it has to happen somehow. I think we all know how we can land ourselves in this predicament. It's called procrastination. Yes ladies and gentlemen, procrastination, the second best nation in the world, second only to these, our great United States. I have become a seasoned veteran at this art. To be able to put everything off for as long as possible and still get it all done is quite a talent, don't you think? It's a real resume builder. Why I even procrastinate when I drink caffeine.

I will so long to drink some that by the time it kicks in I'm afraid to do anything with what I had to do. Now of course I want to go to sleep. No, I don't think so. Instead I think I'll caffeinate to another couple hours. Yippee!

Either way when it all comes down to it whether we think we passed or think we failed we will all try to guess at what our GPA might be. Well, at least I know I do that. I'll sit there and think of as many combinations of grades and numbers that I can. Then, of course, my actual GPA will be something different then any of my predictions. Usually and unfortunately it ends up being a little south of my aspirations.

Oh well, maybe next year my grades will go up. Sure this will...check - in the mail my friend, check's in the mail.

Beware of Greeks bearing gifts

For four years I paid no attention to the Student Government Association. I was content to let them bang the gavel, make their motions and waste their Wednesday nights. In fact, until very recently, I didn't realize how much my experience at the University depended on those Wednesday night meetings. This year's funding follies illustrated how much power SGA actually has, and how this power can be manipulated.

How did last year's senate affect this year's students? Well, they decided where this year's student activities money went. Sounds like normal politics, but last year the senate composition was not exactly representative of the campus community. Basically, it was stacked with Greeks. Like each dorm, each Greek house had a senator. A Greek house with 50 constituents had as much political clout as a dorm with hundreds of students.

OK, so what? It was constitutional at the time. But the situation developed deeper ethical problems. Five Greeks from Alpha Chi Rho became senators under the heading of dorm or commuter reps. This effectively increased Greek representation by another third. Were they dishonest and sleazy to join as commuter or dorm reps even though they were Greek? Or were they admirable for taking an active part in student politics on a politically apathetic campus? They ran for office, won and protected their own interests, like any politician would do.

Five Greeks from Alpha Chi Rho became senators under the heading of dorm or commuter reps. This effectively increased Greek representation by another third.

Anastasia Kudrez

All told, the Greeks, including Speaker Tom Darby and Associate Speaker Dave Garappolo, had 21 senators, controlling one third of the senate. They spoke for 951 Greeks, while the other two thirds of the SGA represented the other 16 754 students. This imbalance of power was corrected in the constitution, but not before the budget allocations.

Money wise this was a great year to be Greek. A great example — the allocation of 1996 area government funds.

The Southwest Area Government (SWAG) representing 5,052 constituents was allocated $22,300 for this year. In comparison, the Greek Area Government (GAG), with 951 constituents received $15,450. This breaks down to $14.14 per Greek more than triple the SWAG allocation. Orchard Hill Area Government took second place, receiving $7.85 per resident slightly more than half of the GAG allocation.

Another way Greeks used their voting power was to form a coalition with MANA senators and cut $10,000 from University Productions and Concerts (UPC) last year. UPC lost $23,000 altogether. There's no Spring Concert this year, and UPC staff blames internal bickering and lack of student support. According to UPC Production Manager Stacey Peck, money was not the deciding factor, so the budget cut had negligible affect on the decision to cancel the concert.

But look at the numbers. Last year Spring Concert cost about $70,000. This year, UPC had about $58,000 before the Toasters/Let's Go Bowling show on April 25. According to UPC Stage Manager Ben Allen, UPC lost money on the concert, but the discrepancy still comes (coincidentally?) near $10,000. Even if the concert could have been run cheaper, I can't help but wonder how much a $23,000 cut contributed to UPC's internal conflicts all year.

The Greek and MANA senators did nothing illegal. Forming a coalition is a valid political tactic to protect interests. An initial breakdown of the money cut shows $5,150 went to HASA, Conceptio Latino, AHORA and Casa Dominicana. The Radical Student Union/Alliance for Student Power got $450.

The remainder was divided as such: $2,400 for the Greeks, $2,000 for the rugby teams, Jim Simpson, listed as a MacKimmie senator, was part of the coalition. He was from Alpha Chi Rho. He played rugby.

This was all legal and constitutional. Simpson knew the most effective way to get money for organizations he cared about, and he made the effort to help them. Instead of complaining that this was unfair, I had to consider my own lack of involvement in SGA. I am unhappy that Simpson pushed the money toward his own interests, but I have to respect his political savvy.

This year my area government received half of what the Greeks were allocated, but I have no grounds to complain. I didn't run for office, I didn't get involved, I didn't care about the SGA until it was too late. Hindsight is 20/20, but if I had more time on this campus, I wouldn't let it happen again.

Words of wisdom

Dawn Jennings

Four years ago, I met this guy. I was a freshman at the time and he was a senior. When he asked my year, I was hesitant to answer. I mean this guy was an upperclassman, he was actually like a grown-up this was back when I still thought that one matured by the time they were in their final year. I did. I really want to admit to him that I was only in my first year? However, after debating it in my mind for a moment, I opted to tell the truth. "I'm...ummm...a freshman," I mumbled.

Instead of saying, "See ya later," and taking off upon hearing this, he instead gave me some great words of advice. "Don't be ashamed to be a freshman," he said. "I wish I was one again. I'm graduating in a couple weeks and I'd love to have three more years of college ahead of me like you do. The time will fly by and the next thing you know you'll be saying the same thing to someone else."

Truer words were never spoken. In a couple weeks I'll be able to say I am a college graduate. However, what I've learned can by no means be summed up in the psychology degree I will soon possess. I've met so many different people and had so many new experiences that I couldn't possibly express all I've learned in this article. I've laughed more than I thought possible and also cried harder than I (or my roommate) knew I could. I've taken some risks, both physical and emotional, that I never would have four years ago.

Many times they've seen positive results, sometimes they haven't. I've done some really stupid things and swore they changed my life and I would never do them again...and then did them again. There are people I probably wouldn't have even talked to when we were back in high school that have become close friends of mine. I'd be lying if I was to say that I've enjoyed every minute of these last four years, but I wouldn't give up my memories for anything.

I remember my freshman year like it was just yesterday. I'll never forget my first Townhouse party that Spring (actually I don't really recall all of that day). Spending two hours at the DC each night, drooling over all the baseball players. Having "90210" get togethers, where we'd order Sugar Jones cookies and then spend the rest of the night doing "Abs of steel" so we could try and combat those dreaded freshman 15. Didn't work. Dancing the night away, with a hundred of my closest friends, to "Oh, what a night," at Sig Ep on Friday nights. Most of all, I recall meeting half a dozen people who would become very close friends of mine.

Sophomore year I was much more mature, no comments please. I remember staying up until three in the morning, teaching a friend of mine just how he should walk, talk and act to impress girls. Letting my friend convince me to go for runs with him, which always turned into more like a marathon training than anything else. My wonderful neighbors who taught me how to do six-foot bong hits. Coming home caked in mud after dancing to the Violent Femmes at Spring Concert (back when we actually had a Spring Concert) and spending numerous hours practicing our aerobics routine in the Cance lounge to the amusement of all my floormates.

Junior year I had the experience of moving into an apartment. To anyone still in the dorms and on the meal plan: It's not that bad. Appreciate that you are eating more than Ramen noodles and mac and cheese. I recall hanging out until the sun was coming up, listening to Nirvana, and playing the guitar with my downstairs neighbors. Having water balloon fights and slam dancing to "Sabotage." Pulling all nighters while studying for my Spanish and Cognitive exams and swearing I'd stop procrastinating for senior year (didn't happen).

My senior year, I swear half my friends turned 21 in a one-month time period. This is when I finally started to please all those credit card companies that have given me free t-shirts for four years. I remember the excitement of Rafters during UMass basketball games. Going for long walks with my roommate where we endlessly analyzed every person we knew (we're both psych majors, so no one was spared) and having my printer break, not once, but twice.

To all of you that are graduating, first, congratulations. Some of you have had similar college experiences to mine. Maybe we've stood in line for Antonio's together one night. Others might feel like we attended different universities considering your years here were spent in a completely different way. However, the thing we have in common, despite the variety of our actual experiences, is that we have all learned many lessons. Don't forget them. To anyone that will be returning in the fall (especially the freshmen), I want you to re-read the first paragraph. As I was given this speech three years ago, these are now my words of advice to you.

The Cigarette Choice

She was a picture of elegance. Hair done up in the latest style, fingers balancing a thin cigarette, red lips puffing smoke in small dark clouds.

When my grandmother took up smoking around 1950, it was the stylish thing to do. Now tobacco advocates are making radio and television appearances to say they "lied" and smoking really is addictive and dangerous. And statistics show the addiction is stronger among smokers who start as teenagers, but the tradition continues.

On Christmas Eve, my grandmother called and said she wouldn't be able to go to church. She couldn't breathe. An emergency room visit confirmed her fear — she had to quit smoking. She had tried everything, from chewing gum to quitting "cold turkey" to the patch, emphysema succeeded where the patch failed. She quit "cold turkey," and it worked because she had been close enough to death to know that what she wanted was life.

Emphysema succeeded where the patch failed. She quit "cold turkey," and it worked because she had been close enough to death to know that what she wanted was life.

Amy Paradysz

A 64-year-old woman was soon amazed at how good food tasted. She went to the Holyoke Mall for the first time since it went non-smoking in 1994. She could sit through performances, and didn't need an aisle seat. She could eat anywhere, sit anywhere.

While the advantages of the non-smoking life come quickly, a great deal of damage is permanent.

In early February, my Grandma went to the doctor's during her lunch break. He gave a "clean bill of health." Early that Monday morning, my mother had to help her dress while they waited for the ambulance. This time it was pneumonia.

"Bring coffee this afternoon, and we'll sit and talk," she said, after receiving oxygen. But when my mom came back with the coffee, Grandma had been moved to intensive care, where she remained on a respirator for the remaining five weeks of her "life." The damage to her lungs, caused by decades of smoking, meant that she was unable to fight off the infection.

Now she's gone. We crossed her laughing with everyone at work... have a cigarette or an ash tray in the corner. Grandma and cigarettes were never far apart.

It wasn't because she loved them — she was addicted.

My sister, who quit smoking after the funeral, told me how she saw Grandma out of the corner of her eye when she ran the mile in a track meet last spring. "I thought she'd always be there," my sister said. "So I just kept running."

When she quit smoking, after just a few years, she said it was "so hard," even as she watched her Grandma die, even while her boyfriend nagged, even when her track coach caught her smoking under the bleachers.

"I wish I never started," she said.

Looking for software that doesn't cost much? Here's where to look

It is not hard to find inexpensive software on the Internet. It is simply a matter of knowing where to look.

There are numerous places to go, but here are the three best places to visit: Stroud's CWSApps List at http://www.bookwp.net/cwsapps.

Stroud's page is a must for anyone who is serious about cruising the Web. All the applications on the page are related to the Web or the Internet.

The site is easy to navigate. The main page is basically a giant table with about 40 different clickable headers. About 35 of the 40 headers are different categories of software.

Stroud reviews the software, and rates it using a five star system. The reviews are actually quite useful. In addition to the rating system, the page provides other important info such as version, date of release, and size of the file. The site also has a top twenty, and what's new lists.

The only drawback is that all the software is specifically for Windows and the Internet. B

Shareware.com at http://www.shareware.com

Shareware.com might possibly have the largest library of shareware on-line with over 190,000 files.

Users can browse the page in two methods. The first method, which involves simply searching through headers, is similar to the method of browsing Stroud's site. The second method, which works like a basic search engine, allows users to simply type in a keyword or title. The site also includes a title of the day, and a weekly top 30 list of applications by operating system. Unlike Stroud's, the page includes applications that are unrelated to the Internet, as well as software for Mac and OS/2.

The only drawback to this site is a comprehensive review and rating system like Stroud's. B+

ZD Net Software Library http://www.zdnet.com/zdi/software

Like the other sites, this one divides the software into categories. However, unlike the other sites, ZD Net has more than simple utilities and productivity applications — it has games and education software.

The site is easy to navigate, and operates like Shareware.com. In addition to its ease of use, it provides a five star rating system like Stroud's. It also includes file of the day, and feature applications too.

However, the system only offers applications for Windows and Macintosh, and the library is only a fraction of the size of Shareware.com. A-

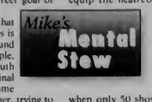
No sentimental crap here as Stew says its farewell



When I look back at my four years here at UMass, the things I'll remember most are all the people I've met, the things I've learned and how I've grown as an individu...

Oh please — someone get a bucket before I hurl.

That sentimental rubbish might have been something I would have written a year ago. Wait, scratch that, I would have never written anything like that. Giving people intestinal problems has never been a career goal of mine.

The preponderance of sentimental dribble that comes out of people as graduation approaches is often overwhelming. Every time you turn around it's: "I learned so much, met interesting people, experienced life and blah blah blah." The truth is, however, that sitting in front of this terminal right now it's really tempting to spout some sappy anecdote about one experience or another, trying to relate my college experience to life or some other pseudo-philosophical utterance.

But I'm not going to. Instead I'm going to go out screaming. Screaming at all the things that really deserve to be raked over the coals.

• The Blood Drive — The word "drive" usually conjures up an image of a quick trip to the store or a Sunday motoring to grandma's house. What the Red Cross really has going here on campus is more like a Blood Road Trip.

• The Lecture Halls — Is it wrong to want to go and fall asleep in Oceanography 101 and not get a spring up my butt? I guarantee you that if we got the entire Massachusetts Congress to come and sit in Mahar for three hours, they would allocate some cash for the restoration of these rooms.

• All Other Rooms on Campus — Someone take note. When designing buildings and rooms, always equip the heat/cooling system with an on/off switch. Buildings are not MeDI T's. We're not trying to keep the hot rooms hot and the cool rooms cool. What we're actually shooting for here believe it or not, is comfort.

•The Valley Music Scene — There is a major problem with an area with over 30,000 students when only 50 show up at shows with local acts. When MTV went to the University of South Carolina to showcase Hootie and the Blowfish's origins, the local acts interviewed pointed out that once Hootie hit it big, people didn't mind shelling out three bucks to go see a band.

Don't get me wrong, Hootie is still a threat to good music everywhere, but there is a lesson here. Students should take a break from the bar scene once in a while and go see some local music. The next big thing could be playing in the room next door right now, and when they get big it will be a lot more than three dollars to see them. Bands don't just grow from record company offices (usually).

•The Southwest Speed Trap — Why is it these guys are always in front of Southwest doing this? I'll bet all the people who got their cars busted into this year would love to have been driving at all instead of paying up for broken windshields. Remember, the more people that stay on the road, the faster the quotas are met.

This may be a little too much cynicism for so close to the end, and you might propose that an attitude adjustment might be in order (my parents would agree). Cynicism is just the way I like it, it keeps people on their toes.

All of this is not to say I haven't had fun in college, I won't go on and on admitting all the things I did because everyone who cares already knows and what the hell, I might want to run for office some day. Along those same lines, everyone who was a part of my college life and that I could thank, saying "wasn't it fun" already knows who they are and how I feel about them. So thank you, and in the words of Ferris Bueller:

"Life moves pretty fast, if you don't stop and look around once in a while, you could miss it."

Paul Westerberg speaks out on his music, life and "Melrose"

By Dade Hayes
Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — Beneath the wry smile of Paul Westerberg lies the truth his fans long have feared.

"I never even liked punk music," he says, puking a straw into the ice in his ginger ale. "I liked pop music and rock 'n' roll. We combined the two. The fact we were sort of louts made it authentic."

As the drunken legend of the Replacements swirled around him, Westerberg gamely played along, ripping off slurred Hank Williams covers and adolescent anthems drenched in feedback. But the sensitive singer-song writer in him was struggling to emerge. At 36, Westerberg finally has made peace with a reputation earned by fronting the 'Mats, as the seminal 1980s Minneapolis band came to be known. Critics still marvel at the club gigs the foursome turned into alcoholic spectacles and the sweet lyricism they blended with their self-described "power trash" style. Mat fans may stew over the former symbol of ripped-jeans rebellion awaking at dawn, thapsodizing about trees and writing songs about parenthood, but he takes obvious delight in this new chapter. The old way is foreign now.

"I've grown accustomed to the opposite of the rock 'n' roll lifestyle," Westerberg says. "I wake up every morning and I know where I am."

Westerberg's second solo album, Eventually, has just come out. He's smoking cigarillos and nibbling bread in the booth of a tony restaurant overlooking one of his hometown's many lakes. Talk centers on the stripped-down feel of the new record, which he largely produced himself.

"I go with sort of an old-fashioned motto and creed that it's either simple or it's impossible," he says. "If it doesn't come easy, and if it doesn't come fast, then it's usually wrong." Several of the album's 12 tracks derive from first or second takes, including "Good Day," a piano-based ballad partly inspired by the death last year of former Replacements guitarist Bob Stinson. Late in the tune, its chorus, "A good day is any day that you're alive," is paired ironically with a classic 'Mats line, "Hold my life one last time."

Westerberg hasn't lost the gift for coupling a winning lyric with a seductive melody. "You've got a voice like the last day of Catholic school," he sings in his craggy tenor in "You Ain't Got Me." He dots the ambling album closer "Time Flies Tomorrow" with images of hearts breaking "like a pinata" and "eyes like two hubcaps at the bottom of a river."

"I like picturesque words," he says. "I like a line that you can visualize, and if it makes you smile. I mean, 'Pin the tail on Demi Moore,' (from "Trumpet Clip") what does it mean? I'm not sure, but it's an interesting thought."

One thought that doesn't make him smile is the common perception that since he quit drinking several years ago, Westerberg has traveled the familiar solo-artist's road to sober but uninspired self-interest. Cynics point to his inert 1993 solo album, 14 Songs, and recent contributions to soundtracks for television's "Friends" and "Melrose Place" as proof that a dry Paul is, well, dry.

Westerberg stiffens at the suggestion. "People are preoccupied with what they see as being sort of a landmark in someone's life or changing their music. There are so many little things that they never see. I can hear when I got a good acoustic guitar, when my songs started to sound different, or when I bought a new instrument or when I stopped wearing a certain kind of clothes. It's a little more ordinary things than you would imagine."

The issue is more than just sobriety. Some songwriters struggle, too, with finally getting total control over an album after maturing within a collaborative band setting.

Peter Jesperson, who signed the Replacements to their first record deal and managed the group for years until his acrimonious firing, believes Westerberg's music has declined.

"He's lost without a band," Jesperson said in a interview from Los Angeles, where he produced ex-'Mats bassist Tommy Stinson's new band, Perfect. "He just writes songs that are half-good."

Refugee boat returns to Ghana

By Beth Duff-Brown
Associated Press

ABIDJAN, Ivory Coast — A rusty freighter seeking a port of refuge for thousands of sick and weary Liberian refugees crawled back to Ghana on yesterday with permission to restock urgently needed food and medical supplies.

But just as the Bulk Challenge was given a temporary reprieve from its eight day ordeal at sea, 3,000 more people were scrambling to board another freighter in Monrovia.

Fighting broke out among the people desperate to buy $70 tickets, and African peacekeepers whipped them with belts and batons to restore order.

The Nigerian-owned Bulk Challenge, carrying 3,000 to 4,000 Liberians, many sick with diarrhea, has been seeking West African refuge since it set sail May 5.

Although the ship was allowed to dock at Takoradi, a port in western Ghana, authorities made it clear yesterday the refugees would only be given medical help and then be sent back to sea.

"The vessel, which has been found to have no mechanical fault, was provided food and water and medicine," said a government statement. "The captain was then directed to return to Monrovia, where ECOMOG has created a safe haven."

It referred to the West African peacekeeping force, which has done little to contain six weeks of brutal violence among rival factions that has destroyed the Liberian capital.

Phil Doherty, head of the Liberian mission for the international relief agency Doctors Without Borders, said there was only one toilet on board the freighter and people had been forced to defecate on deck. A woman died Sunday from hemorrhaging and her body was removed from the ship by Ghanaian authorities.

"It's just getting worse," said Doherty. "We have no confirmation of specific diseases, but we've known for many days of severe diarrhea among many of the people."

Diarrhea is often a sign of cholera, a highly contagious disease that can be fatal if left untreated.

The refugees were taken in small batches off the Bulk Challenge Yesterday and onto nearby barges for medical attention. They were then put back on the ship, which was expected to set sail again Tuesday for either Nigeria or Liberia.

Beijing discovers life after dark

By John Leicester
Associated Press

BEIJING — Venture down the dim alleyway past the decrepit houses, piles of broken bricks and bicycles to the end, push open the chunky wooden door and marvel as old China gives way to new. Amid the cigarette smoke, necklines are low, hair-styles are preened, the make-up's caked and the pop music's loud.

This, as the bright yellow sign by the door proclaims, is the Jazz-Ya cafe, part of an explosion of bars and clubs that are electrifying Beijing's once nonexistent nightlife.

Beijingers still bid each other farewell with the phrase "Take it slow," but the bars, clubs and cafes reflect the city's new hectic pace of life.

No longer does sunset mark the end of the day. After dark, there's live music, good food, Hollywood movies, giant discotheques, places to go, people to meet.

With English names, tasteful decor, capuccinos and Western food, the new nightspots aim to tap the invasion of foreigners who have moved to Beijing to work with the opening up of China's economy. But they also draw the new generation of young Chinese who are eschewing communism for cash and cool, and who like to "zhao le" - seek fun.

The government, while often critical of Western influences, has done little or nothing to stop the boom - probably because many bars are concentrated in Beijing's diplomatic quarter and their prices keep most ordinary Chinese away. A beer can cost 20 yuan ($2.40), a lot for the average urban Chinese who makes only 400 yuan a month.

Two years ago, police forced one large bar to close on the anniversary of the June 3, 1989, crackdown on the Tiananmen Square democracy protests - a sensitive date on the government's calendar - and last year others also shut to avoid trouble.

Otherwise, the bars are left largely to their own devices, leading some people to suspect they may be bribing police officials to look the other way.

By some estimates, at least a dozen bars have opened in the last six months in the diplomatic quarter, a leafy district in the eastern part of the city where foreign embassies are concentrated. New bars have been throwing launch parties with such regularity, "you can almost go

Simpson tells British TV why he fled

By Ron Kampeas
Associated Press

LONDON — O.J. Simpson told British television viewers today he sped away from police in his car after the killing of his former wife because he was hurt by others' suspicions that he murdered her.

"Essentially, I was being attacked for the first time in my life," said Simpson. "I just wanted the pain to stop."

Simpson, on his first major publicity swing abroad since his October acquittal in the slaying of Nicole Brown Simpson and her waiter friend, was talking on a British chat show.

At one point, facing the lightweight husband-and-wife interviewing team on Granada television looking relaxed.

But as Richard Madeley and Judy Finnigan showed flashes of impatience about his not answering questions directly, Simpson appeared tauter.

"Not one person has ever said they saw me become violent," said Simpson.

Asked why so many Americans still appeared to believe he was guilty Simpson blamed the reporting.

"The reports were so, I felt, inaccurate, skewed, always generally to the negative."

Simpson arrived in Britain on Saturday, and has been playing golf and dining out.

He's reportedly also been looking to buy property near London, a newspaper reported on Sunday. Simpson was looking at sites in Surrey, The Sunday Telegraph quoted his publicist as saying. The area southwest of London, famed for its mini-manors and multi-car garages, is known as the "stockbroker belt."

The former football star has seen less of the odd mix of contempt and fascination that surrounds him here than in the United States. Parts of the trial were broadcast here, but some aspects of the case - like Simpson's earlier conviction for wife battery - remain less well-known.

For Britons, unused to seeing court proceedings transmitted on TV, O.J. Simpson is a curiosity. And there is a measure of sympathy for him.

"O.J. Simpson is, understandably, a sad and disillusioned man," said an editorial in the left-leaning Guardian newspaper today. "The exonerating verdict of 12 of his fellow countrymen has been largely ignored in the rest of America, while the accusatory memoirs of one of his failed prosecutors, Christopher Darden, storm up The New York Times bestseller list."

Over the weekend, Simpson enjoyed a round of golf with the editor of a golfing magazine. Fans gathered along the course, and he good-naturedly signed autographs.

But reporters also followed, and their questions handicapped his game.

"I don't have very good form at the moment, and you guys being here doesn't help," a smiling Simpson told more than 100 journalists and photographers watching him tee off at the south London golf course Sunday.

Later, he dined with Michael Winner, the British film director best known for the "Death Wish" series.

Golf, dinner with celebrities and lightweight TV were all part of Simpson's life before the trial; he has come to Britain partly in an effort to recapture that life.

Program-maker Granada TV has denied media reports that it has received death threats. But they acknowledged today that Bo Derek, who was scheduled to appear on the same broadcast as Simpson, pulled out because she does not feel she can appear on the same program as Simpson.

Carmichael still ready for revolution

By John Rice
Associated Press

HAVANA — His hair is going gray and his body is fighting cancer.

But when Kwame Ture - once widely in the news as black activist Stokely Carmichael - reaches across his hospital bed for the telephone, he answers it as always: "Ready for revolution." A central figure in the United States' "black power" movement of the 1960s and a crusader for pan-Africanism since, Ture came to Cuba in April for treatment of prostate cancer discovered in January.

Ture - whose name is pronounced KWAH-may tour-Ray - said he first felt leg pains in November while home in the West African country of Guinea and took medicine for the pain.

When the pains became more severe, he visited Dr. Barbara Justice during a trip to New York and wound up spending nearly a month undergoing treatment at Columbia-Presbyterian Hospital. Smiling frequently, often laughing, Ture seemed as upbeat and polemical as ever during an hour-long interview at the Cira-Garcia clinic in Havana.

"Actually, I live on borrowed time," he said. "In my job, death is an occupational hazard. So whether it's a bullet, whether it's cancer, makes no difference."

He came to Cuba for care because "I'm a socialist," he said. "Cuba does have excellent health care. As a socialist I must be consistent. I cannot attack capitalism and attack an entire system and when I get sick run to capitalism and ask them to patch me up."

Ture, 54, has responded well to treatment, said Justice, who accompanied him to Cuba. She said the tumor - and sites to which the cancer had spread - seem to be regressing, "so we're quite optimistic at this point."

Ture said Justice, a cancer specialist, accompanied him without pay. It is one sign of the regard with which he is held in much of the black community in the United States.

"He is a living legend, a hero who has dedicated his life to the liberation of African people worldwide, and it's very important that we, the members of the community, support him in the same way he has supported us," Justice said.

Ture said he has also received financial help for his treatment from the Nation of Islam, led by Louis Farrakhan.

In the 1960s, the Trinidad native then known as Stokely Carmichael led the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee. He participated in some of the first U.S. civil rights sit-ins and freedom rides, was repeatedly arrested, and became a national figure leading a group that challenged the credentials of the official Mississippi delegation to the 1964 Democratic convention. Growing more frustrated with the American system, he became prime minister of the Black Panther Party, then embraced pan-Africanism and in late 1968 moved to Guinea.

He founded the All-African People's Revolutionary Party under his new name - taken from African leaders Kwame Nkrumah and Ahmed Sekou Ture.

Ture said he hopes to see a single, socialist state for all of Africa, which would give Africans there and abroad - he rejects the term "African-American" - pride and power.

"For us, once Africa is unified and strong, the problem will be solved because Africans will be respected wherever they are. And if they're not, they can just get up and go home," he said.

The state that comes closest to his vision, he said, may be Libya, led by Moammar Gadhafi.

Steffi Graf sets record for No. 1 ranking, 332 weeks at top

By Bob Greene
Associated Press

Steffi Graf is No. 1 all alone - sort of.

The German right-hander on Monday was ranked No. 1 for the 332nd week in her career, breaking the record of 331 weeks she shared with Martina Navratilova. Ivan Lendl holds the men's tennis record of 270 weeks at No. 1.

"I realized that I have been No. 1 for an extremely long time, but I never really was the kind of person who counted the weeks or the years," Graf said by telephone from Berlin, where she's playing in the German Open. "But to hear the number, it is pretty amazing.

"And knowing that no one has ever achieved something like that is extremely special to me, because I know how difficult it is to stay there for such a long time."

Because of a special Corel WTA Tour rule, Graf is not alone on top of the weekly rankings. She shares that spot with Monica Seles, who trails far behind in fourth place in the number of weeks - 152 - she has been ranked No. 1 in the world.

Seles was No. 1 when she was stabbed by a spectator during a match in Hamburg, Germany, in April 1993. When she returned to the court last August, the WTA Tour gave her special ranking, naming her co-No. 1 for one year or six tournaments, whichever came first. Her next tournament will be her sixth, when another special ranking consideration will be in effect until she has either played in 14 tournaments or 18 months have passed since her return. Only six women have captured the top spot since computer rankings began in November 1975: Graf, Seles, Navratilova, Arantxa Sanchez Vicario, Chris Evert and Tracy Austin.

Evert held the No. 1 spot a total of 262 weeks, Austin 22 weeks and Sanchez Vicario, currently ranked No. 2, 12 weeks.

Behind Lendl on the men's tour, Jimmy Connors was ranked No. 1 for 268 weeks, John McEnroe 170 and Pete Sampras, the current No. 1, for 121 weeks.

Graf first became No. 1 at the age of 18 on Aug. 17, 1987, ending Navratilova's 10-year dominance of women's tennis. She stayed No. 1 for a record 186 consecutive weeks, until March 11, 1991, when Seles took over.

Over the next 26 months, Graf and Seles swapped the top two rankings a total of six times.

From June 7, 1993, through Feb. 6, 1995, Graf was on top alone before Sanchez Vicario took over. The two then traded the No. 1 ranking a record six times in 1995, the last on June 12, 1995, when Graf once again moved to the top.

Since then she has held the No. 1 ranking for 49 consecutive weeks, being co-ranked No. 1 with Seles since Aug. 15, 1995. That her record came while she was playing in Berlin seems appropriate.

It was in Berlin where Graf burst onto the tennis scene in 1985 as a gangly 15-year-old, pushing Chris Evert before losing in the final. She returned the next year to capture the first of her eight German Open titles, defeating Navratilova in straight sets. Since then, she has lost only once on the clay courts in Berlin, to Monica Seles in the 1990 final.

This year's Berlin tournament also is a chance for Graf to get her game back in order before the year's second Grand Slam event, the French Open, later this month. She was upset last week at the Italian Open by 15-year-old Martina Hingis of Switzerland, and lost to Japan's Kimiko Date in a Fed Cup match on April 28.

"Actually, I am not feeling too bad about the two matches that I lost," Graf said. "I just didn't play as I am used to playing, so I haven't been upset about the losses that I have had.

"I was really surprised about the two wins that I have had — starting the year late and winning two tournaments. It is the middle of May and I have only played three tournaments."

Graf has been plagued with injuries the past few years and underwent an operation on her foot in December.

"The foot is perfect," she said Monday. "My back is not too bad, either. Physically, I think I can't be much better."

Which leaves her other problem.

Her father Peter Graf and tax adviser Joachim Eckardt have been charged in her native Germany with tax evasion, although prosecutors say the player has not been incriminated in the case.

Still, the mental pressure has admittedly affected her concentration, if not her game.

"Mentally I think I am doing sort of OK," she said. "I am preparing for the French, so I am getting there."

Graf, now 26, has won 18 Grand Slam singles titles, including a feat tabbed the Golden Grand Slam in 1988, when she captured the titles at the Australian, French and U.S. Opens, Wimbledon and the Olympic gold medal. She is the only player to win each of the four Grand Slam singles titles at least four times.

She has won 97 career singles titles, third behind Navratilova (167) and Evert (157) among the women.

Blues could upset Wings

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Maybe Mike Keenan had the right idea, after all.

The St. Louis Blues, a collection of mostly aging stars that limped to the finish line in the regular season, are one victory away from advancing to the conference finals for the first time in a decade.

The biggest shock is that heading into Game 6 Tuesday night in St. Louis, the Blues are on the verge of putting away the Detroit Red Wings, the team that set an NHL record with 62 victories.

"This is a great feeling," said Brett Hull, who had a goal and an assist in the 3-2 victory in Game 5 that put the Blues ahead 3-2 in the series. "No one gave us a chance of being in this spot."

After losing three straight games for the first time since they were swept by the New Jersey Devils in last year's Stanley Cup finals, the Red Wings are trying hard not to look concerned.

"Our team is still confident," Red Wings coach Scotty Bowman said. "It's hard to believe, but it's still true."

As general manager, Keenan came under fire for putting together a roster that averages about 30.55 years, the oldest in the NHL. Seven players are 34 or older.

As coach, he likes the playoff grit this group, which has played on 33 Stanley Cup winners, brings to the team. Since their last appearance in the conference finals in 1986, they've made it to the second round only four times, the latest in 1993.

Philly lets go of Lucas; Tyson appeal denied

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — John Lucas once joked that he demanded three titles when he took the job of rebuilding the Philadelphia 76ers because friends told him to ask for as many as he could get.

Having already been dismissed as vice president of basketball operations and general manager, Lucas was fired as coach Monday, three weeks after the team completed the season with the second worst record in the NBA.

"We felt the best thing to do was move in a different direction," said Brad Greenberg, who last week was hired as general manager, replacing Lucas. Greenberg said he hoped to hire a new coach by the NBA draft June 26.

This season, Philadelphia was 18-64, better only than the expansion Vancouver Grizzlies. The 76ers set an NBA record for sustained futility by losing successively more games in each of the last six seasons.

Greenberg, a former Portland Trail Blazers executive, met with Lucas late last week. He said he decided to fire Lucas over the weekend.

"He did a fine job... but it's time to move on," Greenberg said. "This is a new organization right now."

Also dismissed were assistant coaches Ron Adams and Tom Thibodeau. Lucas was 42-122 in his two seasons with Philadelphia. Asked if he thought Lucas was a good coach, Greenberg said, "I like John, and I think he did the best he could."

Lucas, 43, is a recovering alcohol and substance abuser who runs several counseling centers. He did not return two calls to his suburban Philadelphia home seeking comment about his dismissal.

Lucas' future with the 76ers was in doubt even before the team's majority owners, Comcast Corp., bought the team from Harold Katz in March.

Katz hired Lucas in 1994 to try to revive a franchise that in 1983 was the NBA champion. When it became clear around January no turnaround was forthcoming, Katz not so discreetly began interviewing prospective coaching replacements.

Finally, Katz said Lucas would remain until the end of the season. Seven weeks later, Katz sold the team for a reported $125 million to Comcast, Flyers owner Ed Snider and former 76ers conditioning coach Pat Croce. Immediately, Croce said he would separate the roles of coach and general manager. Eventually, he said he would hire someone to run the basketball operations, and that person would decide whether Lucas would stay as coach.

Lucas came to the 76ers with a 94-49 record in his first NBA coaching stint with San Antonio in 1992-94.

He also lost his job in San Antonio partly because of a change in ownership.

In Philadelphia, he didn't have David Robinson but the underachieving Shawn Bradley. He didn't have Dennis Rodman. In fact, he didn't have much of anything except for Clarence Weatherspoon and, last year, rookie Jerry Stackhouse.

Lucas felt he could make up for the lack of talent by giving second chances to talented but troubled players like Richard Dumas and Vernon Maxwell.

But the losses mounted. Lucas approved the November trade that sent Bradley to New Jersey for Derrick Coleman. That Bradley blossomed with the Nets while an overweight Coleman remained sidelined with a bad ankle helped speed Lucas' demise.

Greenberg, who helped induce P.J. Carlesimo to leave Seton Hall to coach the Trail Blazers, said he planned to consider college coaches, NBA assistants and former NBA coaches.

"I have a lot of names," he said. "I have a little but list of names that would certainly be a lot shorter than that main list."

The team is retaining one of Lucas' assistants, former point guard Maurice Cheeks, who will help the 76ers prepare for the draft and possibly remain in the personnel department.

The 76ers expect to end up with one of the top picks in Saturday's NBA draft lottery, and Greenberg said he'd like to have the new coach on board in time to help decide on the selection.

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) - The New Jersey Supreme Court denied an appeal yesterday by fighter Mike Tyson to overturn a judge's order and allow him to fight WBA champion Bruce Seldon in July.

The court voted unanimously to deny the WBC champion's appeal, keeping in place a temporary restraining order that forbids Tyson from fighting anyone other than British heavyweight Lennox Lewis until a lawsuit is settled.

Tyson and promoter Don King sought to overturn an appellate court's ruling that forbade them from appealing Superior Court Judge Amos Saunders' decision regarding Tyson and Lewis. The appellate court also refused to lift Saunders' restraining order, pending the appeal.

Lewis claims in his lawsuit he was wrongly passed over to fight for the WBC title when Tyson was allowed to challenge Frank Bruno, a match Tyson won in March in Las Vegas.

Lewis defeated Ray Mercer in a 10-round decision Friday and wants to fight Tyson. Tyson, however, wants to fight Seldon on July 13.

King said Friday that Tyson would rather drop his title than agree to Lewis' demand for more than the $10 million purse being offered. Lewis is seeking $15 million for a fight with Tyson. Lewis, who beat Bruno in defense of the WBC title in October 1993, lost it to Oliver McCall in September 1994. McCall then lost to Bruno in September.

Lewis maintained he should have been first in line for the championship after he defeated Lionel Butler in a WBC-ordered elimination bout last May.

But the WBC maintained Tyson became the top contender after his release from prison in March 1995 after three years on a rape conviction, which under its rules made him the mandatory challenger for the title. Saunders in March forbade Tyson from further fights without his permission until Lewis' suit was settled.

mound with little rest, and he really has done his job. In fact, Kennedy seems to be leaning toward making Stanton the closer and demoting Slocumb to a set-up role.

Mo Vaughn is on a tear, and the rest of the Boston bats look to be coming around. The defense has also shown signs lately of being better than they were, but having Jose Canseco and Kevin Mitchell in the outfield at the same time is an in-the-park home run waiting to happen. Wil Cordero had been looking more comfortable at second base, before two errors in one game against the Blue Jays.

Cordero, who now prefers that the media use his full first name Wilfredo, is a tremendously gifted athlete, so he will continue to come around and be an important part of the Red Sox comeback... whenever that happens.

The key is patience, but Kennedy's is spent, so expect more changes than Stanton to closer. Dan Duquette is on a mission to find a dependable defensive centerfielder. More versatility and depth in the infield is another area that needs to be addressed.

• Brain Buster Answers: 1. Vida Blue 2. Joel Youngblood for the New York Mets in a day game at Shea and then for the Montreal Expos against the Pirates in Pittsburgh.

• Saturday night in Florida, Marlin port-sider Al Leiter threw the first no-hitter of the young 1996 season. Marlin management was harshly criticized for giving Leiter such a lucrative contract (somewhere in the $3.5 to $4 million range), but it appears that they knew something that nobody else did because Leiter is off to an incredible start to his season.

• Speaking of incredible seasons, Brady Anderson is on some kind of streak. Or, he was until he injured a hamstring. Anderson has been out for about a week, but he still leads the American League in home runs with 15.

Also hot is Dodger reject and current Expo Henry Rodriguez. Rodriguez is just one of a number of Montreal players that are exceeding expectations in the early going as the Expos have one of the best records in the senior circuit.

• Well now, Greg (Cy Young) Maddux isn't looking so invincible this season is he? The superman of the mound is off to a mediocre 4-3 start, and he recently was out-dueled by Philadelphia newcomer Mike Grace.

Taking (dis) out of disability

I'm too busy doing the things I love to dwell on my disability. MDA has helped make that possible for people with neuromuscular disease. Because of the medical, physical and financial support from my association provided by MDA, muscular dystrophy doesn't stop me from achieving.

Even though I have muscular dystrophy I got an education and started my own business. I won 18 gold medals at the National and International Games for the Disabled. I am a husband and father.

Thanks to MDA, my abilities are what matter.

Baseball brings home A–10 title after sweeping VT

By Casey Kane
Collegian Staff

When the members of the Massachusetts baseball team took to the field to begin yesterday's first game with Virginia Tech, they knew they had nothing to lose and everything a gain.

When the Minutemen walked off the field in Boyertown, Penn., they hadn't lost a thing and they had gained the Atlantic 10 Tournament crown by defeating the Hokies in two games, 5–2 and 8–2.

The Massachusetts baseball team swept a doubleheader with Virginia Tech yesterday to capture the Atlantic 10 Tournament title.

THANG VO / COLLEGIAN

Going into the day's championship, Virginia Tech held a decided advantage over UMass. The day before, the Hokies had handed the Minutemen their first loss in the double- elimination tourney. Virginia Tech had yet to lose a tournament game, and could have claimed the title with only one win.

In the afternoon's first game, senior pitcher David Dart threw a complete game six-hitter. He retired the last 10 batters he faced, and didn't allow a hit after the fifth inning.

"I felt really good out on the mound today," Dart said.

Virginia Tech led after five innings, 2–0, courtesy of single runs in the second and fifth frames. UMass came back to score four runs in the top of the sixth to take the lead, and the Minutemen didn't look back.

With one out in the sixth, junior shortstop Brad Gorrie and sophomore second baseman Muchie Dagliere singled, and Gorrie scored on a Nate Murphy double. Freshman Doug Clark singled to bring both Dagliere and Murphy home. Freshman third baseman Bryan Mazzaferro connected for a single to score Clark, giving UMass a 4–2 lead.

In the top of the eighth, Murphy singled to reach base, and eventually scored when senior catcher Andy Kiah was walked with the bases loaded, closing out the game's scoring.

In the afternoon's second game, Virginia Tech took a one- run lead in the first inning. After hitting a pair of singles, UMass starter Jeff Pulers walked the next two batters he faced to bring in a run.

In the Massachusetts half of the inning, the Minutemen easily took back the lead. With one out on the board, Gorrie connected for a single and Murphy knocked a shot out of the park to make the score 2–1 in favor of UMass.

After Kiah drew a walk in the bottom of the second, freshman first baseman Ryan Hodgson cracked a two- out double off Hokie pitcher Matt Litchel to bring the catcher home.

Virginia Tech cut the Minuteman lead to one in the top of the third, but that was the last offensive effort the Hokies could muster.

Gorrie put another run on the board in the fifth, and freshman designated hitter Brian Samela scored a UMass run in the sixth.

In the bottom of the eighth, Massachusetts put three more runs on the board. Samela was hit by a pitch for the second time in the game, Hodgson was walked, and leftfielder Ryan Jette singled to load the bases. Gorrie knocked a triple to left center, scoring all three baserunners.

Freshman lefty Bill Cooke pitched 4–1/3 innings of scoreless relief to earn the win.

"It feels real good to win two games today, because we know we beat a good team," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "We took a really aggressive approach to the games today."

Murphy, UMass' centerfielder, was named the tournament's Most Valuable Player after he went 5 for 6 on the day, with three RBI and a home run. Over the course of the tourney, Murphy was 9–for–18 with three homers and a A–10 Tournament record 13 RBI.

Kiah, Dart, Gorrie, and Mazzaferro were named, along with Murphy, to the All-Tournament team.

With the A–10 win UMass will receive an automatic bid to the NCAAs. Regional pairings will be announced next Monday.

Margo Schott is a Nazi-lover, but that isn't the most news in the wonderful world of baseball. She's one of the all-time great guys in the sport. Brett Butler is out of the Los Angeles Dodgers' lineup indefinitely with throat cancer. His contributions to the Dodgers, and all the organizations he's been involved with, far transcend his gritty defensive play and respectable batting ability.

Butler is a man of tremendous character who deserves a fate better than he has received. He has spent nearly his entire career free of tobacco products, but somehow upon graduation his parents both smoked like chimneys. Butler has found Butler.

But the diminutive centerfielder, if he's half the man I think he is, will not let this beat him. He'll be back. Baseball needs him to be back.

The loss of one of the league's top guns drastically thins out the Yankees' pitching staff that was already surrounded by question marks.

Andy Pettitte is off to a terrific start, but Doc Gooden, Kenny Rogers needs to find the strike zone sometime soon. Maybe Dwight Gooden should start smoking crack again, because he hasn't been able to pitch without it yet this season. I wonder whether he could possibly get his hands on illegal drugs. I mean it's not like Tim Raines and Steve Howe still like up, right?

The Massachusetts men's and women's track and field teams headed to opposite ends of the state this weekend to compete in the New England Championships.

At Tufts, the Minutewomen finished with 66 points to place fourth out of 20 teams. Northeastern captured the top spot with 119.5 points. Rhode Island took second with 90.8, and Connecticut (77) finished third.

At Williams College, the Minutemen tied for sixth place out of 26 teams, with 39 points. Brown took home the title with 79.5 points. Williams finished second with 61, and Southern Connecticut tallied 55 to place third.

Sophomore Rebecca Donaghue set a new school record in the 1500m, as she ran to a winning time of 4:28.50.

Junior Molly Dunlap took top honors in the 10,000m with a season-best time of 58:51.02.

Nicole Roberts pulled double-duty for the Minutewomen, competing in the 400m and 200m. Scoring points in both events, she placed second in the 400 in a time of 57.51. Roberts finished third in the 200, clocking a 25.05.

For the Minutemen, freshman Andre Roach captured first place in the triple jump, leaping to a season-best 46–feet– seven–inches.

Freshman Tom Toye helped pace Massachusetts, with a second place finish in the 200m. He crossed the line in a time of 21.96 seconds.

Both the men's and women's teams are scheduled to return to action May 18–19, when they travel to Fairfax, Va. for the ECAC Championships.

Filthy tourist barred from flight to Belgium

BRASILIA, Brazil (AP) — A German tourist was barred from boarding a flight to Belgium because he was "filthy and foul-smelling," an airport official said yesterday.

Wilhelm Trautmann, described as being in his 80s, had traveled in northeastern Brazil for more than a month without once changing his clothes or taking a bath.

Airport authorities stopped him Thursday just as he was about to board a Brussels-bound plane in Recife, 2,000 miles northeast of Brasilia.

"I have never met anyone who smelled so bad and with so much aversion to water," federal police spokesman Joaquim Neto said.

Trautmann said he refused to bathe or wash his blue jeans and woolen shirt during his entire stay in Brazil "because the water and clothes here are full of malaria germs."

Contempt charges were dropped when Trautmann agreed to shower and buy new clothes. The next day, wearing new Bermuda shorts, a clean shirt, and fresh socks and shoes, he boarded another flight to Belgium.

New home HIV test earns FDA approval

WASHINGTON (AP) — People will soon be able to take an HIV blood test in the privacy of their home using a new blood collection kit approved yesterday by the Food and Drug Administration.

The kit will enable patients to take their blood sample at home, send it to a laboratory and then receive the results by telephone. Until now, all blood sampling for HIV tests had to be done at clinics, hospitals or doctors' offices.

Direct Access Diagnostics of Bridgewater, N.J., developed the test kit and will market it under the brand name Confide HIV Testing Service for about $40.

Jeffrey J. Leebaw, a spokesman for Johnson & Johnson, parent company of Direct Access, said the kit will be sold over the counter in Texas starting in June. It will be sold in drug stores, college health centers and clinics, he said.

Also starting in June, the kit will be available for purchase by telephone in Texas and in Florida, he said.

Leebaw said the sales are initially limited to Texas and Florida to help the company fine-tune the process.

"We felt we needed some real market experience for the product before going to a national rollout," he said. Leebaw said the company wanted to get an indication of the call volume and the product reception before offering the kit in all states.

Scott reveals changes for UMass

By Jonathan Liberty
Collegian Staff

Minor and major changes will be implemented at the University over the next five years as the result of Chancellor David K. Scott's Strategic Action plan which was released yesterday to the Faculty Senate.

In the document, Scott said, "Strategic action is designed to provide a philosophical and fiscal framework for the implementation of strategic planning and thinking that have taken place over the last three years. Over the next five years these plans will continue to be redefined and focused, guided by the over-arching direction of this Strategic Action plan."

The components of the multi-year plan include revenues, expenditures, information technology, reallocation and the building of a distinctive Land Grant ——— American Association of Universities (AAU) institution.

Scott outlined four major action steps in order to implement the plan.

Step one includes major investments in the schools and colleges to better reflect modern society's needs for teaching, research and outreach.

The investment stage will create a new College of Life Sciences and Biotechnology, which will draw on faculty from the College of Food and Natural Resources, Social and Behavioral Sciences, and Natural Science and Mathematics.

There is also a consideration to create a new School of Management and Applied Management — with hotel, restaurant and travel administration, for example — joining with and including the current offerings in the School of Management.

The chancellor said that no faculty will be lost due to these departmental consolidations.

The second action step redesigns administrative procedures such as personnel and payroll to make the bureaucracy more effective and efficient. By 1998, there will be 240 fewer faculty and staff members through a retirement incentive program. Approximately half of the retirees will be replaced.

"In order to release funds we need to redesign the University with quality and good support for the people that we employ," Scott said.

Within step three, the Strategic Action plan will determine how faculty can be reorganized and rewarded equally for teaching research and outreach efforts.

"The key of the plan is to connect teaching, research and outreach in a holistic way of scholarship," Scott said. "We need the three areas to serve each other simultaneously."

Step four of the plan restructures the administration for, effectiveness. The vice chancellor for research, graduate education, and economic development will be folded into the provost area, with the areas of research and outreach to be led as vice provosts. Scott said that it will be important for all academic activities to be integrated under the provost.

Also, a task force will be formed in order to recommend improvements to academic advising.

The document said student enrollment should remain around 25,000 for the year 2001. "This is the number of students which physically fills the campus," Scott said. "We would like to keep it filled to capacity, then as the demographics of graduating high school students increase, we will be able to enroll more competitive students."

The Strategic Action plan expands the University beyond the campus through technologically interactive distanced learning.

"It should not matter whether we have 500 more or 500 less students, what matters is how we can reach thousands of students through outreach," said the chancellor.

The plan will launch a comprehensive Fund Raising Campaign starting in October, 1996. The goal will be $125 million over a six year period. Scott said that he hopes the Fund Raising Campaign will create a new level of enthusiasm in terms of annual giving. Presently, the annual is $14 million. The plan projects $30 million per year by 2001.

"It will be prudent to work out new private partnerships for funding in order to create a win/win situation for the

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

Chancellor David K. Scott

University," Scott said.

Scott's ultimate goal of the Strategic Action plan is to be among a special set of public universities for research while offering outstanding teaching for undergraduates and outreach for the public good.

Currently there are 60 Land Grant Universities in America, including UMass, which were created to educate mainly for the importance of the economy, like agriculture and engineering. Scott said that he wants to reinvent the Land Grant University for the 21st century by educating about all areas of knowledge. There is also a set of 60 schools of higher education in the AAU which are research universities.

"The Strategic Action plan prepares the University to become one of the 16 schools which intersect both Land Grant and AAU status," Scott said. "These Land Grant/AAU schools are the universities committed to becoming the powerhouses of American higher education for the next 20 years."

Scott added, "We must create a new collective vision for the campus."

Budget cuts affect department's rank

By Melanie B. Arruda
Collegian Staff

The computer science department at the University of Massachusetts was ranked 22nd out of 108 departments by U.S. News and World Report in the March 18 issue, a fall of four places.

Professor David Stemple, co–chair of the department, said it has been ranked 18th in past years.

"You can't stand still in computer science," he said. "If you're not moving forward, you're moving backward."

According to Stemple, the U.S. News and World Report "could be indicative of a loss of reputation."

"We prefer to be moving up," he said.

The rankings by the U.S. News and World Report were based on a survey of department heads and graduate studies directors at doctorate–granting schools. They rated college and university departments on scholarship, curriculum, and the quality of the faculty and graduate students.

The rank helps to establish a general reputation, according to Stemple. The more highly ranked the department, the better reputation for the campus, he said.

Stemple said the computer science department at UMass has not been able to hire because of the budget cuts.

"I have lost a faculty member I couldn't replace, had to let staff go, and had a cut in my teaching assistant budget," he said.

In the past couple of years the budget cuts have been in the neighborhood of $100,000, according to Stemple.

"The rank has an effect on students coming into the department," Stemple said. "It helps students leaving the department get Interviews. It's not perfect but it is an indicator about reputation and quality. People are more likely to look at you."

Linda Slakey, dean of the College of Natural Sciences and Mathematics, which includes both polymer science and computer science said, "We are very pleased to have the excellence of the departments recognized and acknowledged."

But Slakey and Stemple, who both chair the computer science department, believe it should be ranked even higher by U.S. News and World Report. The National Research Council (NRC) ranked the computer science department number 18 in scholarly quality in a decade comparison between 1983 and 1993, according to Stemple.

The NRC based its rank on quality of faculty and graduate students, and the quality of the graduate program in terms of scholarship and Ph.D.s, Stemple said.

The graduate enrollment is about the same at 500 applicants per year, according to Stemple.

Concerns raised over way UM deals with rape

By Anastasia Kudrez and Matt Vautour
Collegian Staff

In the wake of recent cases bringing the issue of rape to the attention of the University of Massachusetts community and other college campuses, the way rape is dealt with by school officials is being scrutinized, and the process at UMass has raised questions.

The Dean of Students office handles complaints of rape and sexual assault filed through the University. The victim is required to write a detailed account of the incident for review by Dean Jo–Anne Vanin or a member of her office. The person accused of the violation is contacted to present his or her side of the story. After reviewing both statements, the administrator, likely an assistant or associate dean, decides what action to take.

The official charge is determined by the Dean of Students office. If sufficient evidence is found, a judicial hearing, comprised of students and UMass administrators, will be scheduled.

According to the current interpretation of University policy, the hearing requires both parties to state their versions of the story before a judicial hearing board. Both the victim and the accused are present and are given an opportunity to question each other about the accusations.

A third party, who must be a part of the UMass community, who cannot be a lawyer, may speak on behalf of one of the victims, but the victim must be in the room and available for clarification. Both parties may bring an advisor, but that person is not allowed to participate in the proceedings. This process is used for all University disciplinary action.

Sarah Griffiths, a first–year student at Mount Holyoke, filed a complaint after being allegedly sexually assaulted by a UMass student. Her case never reached a hearing, because the accused student withdrew from UMass. But Griffiths still questioned the fairness of the system and its treatment of the victim.

"It's his presence in the room," Griffiths said. "It's me being there and him being there. Vanin kept saying, Sarah, you've got to realize you're safe. He can't hurt you there.' Physically no. He's already done that damage. Emotionally, that's not good. I couldn't see how she didn't understand and she just did not see that.

Rodriguez, however, decided to not categorize the case as rape, but as sexual assault.

"I define rape as penetration, penis, vagina, that sort of thing. As a non–legal, that is what I define as rape," said Rodriguez, who added she did not feel Griffiths' case was rape.

Ackermann said he was surprised by Rodriguez's decision.

"I was astonished to learn that this was not treated as a rape case," said Ackermann, who added that he felt it shouldn't be the Dean of Students' responsibility to make that determination. He suggested it would be more appropriate for the charges to be determined by the judicial board after it had heard the information.

challenge what the other party says, it is important for them to be able to directly hear each other. And therefore being present at the same time in the room is a part of that process.

"When you have people in separate rooms," she added, "in my opinion you open the door for miscommunication... The University continues to hold, with the advice of legal counsel, that it is an important part of the process for the two parties to be in the room, for each to hear what each other is saying and to be able to challenge them."

Rachel Thorburn, assistant coordinator for the Counselor Advocate Program Against Violence Against Women, a program of the Everywoman's Center, criticized the University policy.

"The fact that [the confrontation] is required is a problem," Thorburn said. "The fact that they have to sit in the same room can make the survivor feel very uncomfortable and not safe. She says it, and what happens if he's not convicted? Then she's hurt in the process and potentially in danger.

"Being with someone who potentially intimidates you or scares you can make you unwilling to testify, so you can't say what you want to say," she said.

Griffiths sought help from the UMass Ombuds office, prompting Ombudsman Robert Ackermann to examine the judicial hearing process.

"Sarah's case was a shock for me. I had read about cases like this in magazine articles before, but this one was right here in front of me," Ackermann said. "This is the first one that brought my attention to the fact that the judicial process needs examination."

This is the first year that rape is recognized as a specific violation by the University's Undergraduate Rights and Responsibilities publication. Previously it had fallen under the category of sexual assault, which included everything from uninvited touching to rape. Although the administration added rape, a legal term, as a violation, the Dean of Students office did not adopt the legal definition of the charge.

In criminal court, Griffiths' case was going to be tried as rape, prior to a plea bargain. Jay Talbot, an assistant district attorney for Hampshire and Franklin Counties, said "case law says it was sufficient to be categorized as rape."

"Who the hell would want to have a discussion with someone who has raped them?" she added. "His rights were being protected while mine were going down the drain."

While acknowledging the sensitivity of the situation, Vanin and Associate Dean Gladys Rodriguez, who handled Griffiths' case with Vanin, defended the hearing process.

"The current position of the University on the hearing process is that it is an administrative hearing based on evaluating information presented by the person bringing the allegation and the person being charged," Vanin said. "In order for each party to be able to present their version of what happened and be able to question or

French company to pay UMass $42M for vaccine

By Jon Marcus
Associated Press

BOSTON — The University of Massachusetts Medical Center has reached a $42 million licensing agreement with a French pharmaceutical company for a new type of vaccination developed at the University that may be used to fight HIV, hepatitis, influenza and other diseases.

The deal is the largest of its kind at the University and officials said it was a harbinger of more research agreements with private industry.

"It's not only extremely important science, it's also good business," said Edward Bresnick, vice chancellor for research at the Worcester medical campus.

Pasteur Merieux-Connaught agreed to pay $42 million for the rights to a vaccine technology that injects genetic material from a disease organism, triggering the human immune system to fight off the disease — essentially "having the actual person produce their own vaccine," according to the professor who developed the technology, Harriet L. Robinson.

The technology could be used to protect uninfected people from 13 different types of illness. Human clinical trials to test its effectiveness against HIV and influenza are under way at the University of Pennsylvania and trials to measure its impact on malaria are scheduled to begin this summer. The success of these tests will determine the amount of time it takes before vaccines of this type are publicly available.

The University, where the process was developed using state and federal grants, would receive $42 million in increments beginning during the next two years as the vaccines move through the approval and marketing process, plus royalties to the tune of 6 to 12 percent of profits. Pasteur gets the exclusive worldwide rights to develop, manufacture and sell vaccine products using Robinson's technique.

A third of the money would go back to the University for research. Twenty percent would go to Robinson and 30 percent to the pathology department, where she works. The rest would pay for the school's new Office of Commercial Ventures and Intellectual Property to monitor the agreement.

Tom Chmura, the University system's vice president for economic development, said several other deals also are in the works. Today,

UMass-Worcester receives $60 million a year in research grants, but 90 percent of it comes from the government.

"We're expecting the contribution from industrial concerns to grow," said UMass President William Bulger.

Departments like the commercial ventures office at the Worcester campus, which has been operating for about a year, are scheduled to open at the Amherst and Lowell campuses this summer.

The University system is far behind its rivals in capitalizing on faculty research. In 1994, the last year for which the figures are available, U.S. and Canadian universities earned $360 million in royalties, according to the Association of University Technology Managers. That's up 60 percent in three years.

The Universities of California alone made $45.4 million last year, Stanford $31.2 million, Columbia $21 million, the University of Wisconsin $15.8 million, the Massachusetts Institute of Technology $5.8 million and Harvard $5.4 million.

Collectively, the schools awarded 2,227 licenses to private industry and applied for a record 3,835 new patents.

UMass-Worcester has negotiated 10 licensing agreements since 1993. Revenue from patents and inventions comes at a time when universities and colleges are searching for new ways to raise money, while private industry is cutting back on its own research and development.

But the money isn't free and clear, said Terri Willey, director of special commercialization projects at Purdue and president of the technology managers' association.

"As far as it being a great revenue generator for institutions, it isn't yet," said Willey. "It does take an investment to file for and maintain a patent portfolio and negotiate and monitor the arrangements."

Proposed casino causes problems

By Daniel E. Levenson
Collegian Staff

News Analysis

There has been much controversy lately concerning the issue of casino gambling in western Massachusetts, specifically in Holyoke.

The issue is a sensitive one, which draws concern regarding environmental, social and economic issues.

According to the Associated Press, economists said New England residents spend a larger percentage of their funds on legal gambling than any other group of people in the country.

Ken Grzyb, of the water protection division of the Massachusetts Department of Environmental Protection Agency, said no construction is allowed within a certain protective zone that exists around public water supplies and environmentally sensitive areas.

When asked if a casino would have a negative effect on the ecosystem, Grzyb said, "Not any more than any other construction project, as long as it wasn't built over a water release area or public water supply."

Patty Gambarini, from the Connecticut River Watershed Council, said the group has vehemently opposed the construction of a casino in the Holyoke area. She cited a myriad of problems as the reason they are against it.

They are opposed to the construction "because it brings all kinds of problems associated with casinos," Gambarini said. "Traffic — they're talking 25,000 cars a day — crime, domestic violence."

Police spending in Atlantic City has gone up 300 percent since casinos came to the area, according to Gambarini.

"It ends up costing the state an incredible amount of money to have such a problem enterprise within its borders," she said.

The council also opposes the idea of a casino because of serious environmental concerns.

There were two possible building sites considered in Holyoke, one downtown and one in the uptown section, near Mt. Tom. Endangered species could be adversely affected, and run-off from parking lots would affect the local water supply and aquifers.

"Every indication is that they're gonna do it on top of Mt. Tom," said Gambarini. "It will impact the aquifers that four towns draw their water supply [from]."

The committee is also concerned about the social impact of having a casino close to a large population of college students.

"Are parents gonna want to send their children to an area that has a casino in its midst," Garambini said. "I think it's something that colleges need to think about."

A committee calling themselves Western Massachusetts Against Casinos has been formed. Their steering committee meets on a regular basis. The group said, "The $800 million gambled away into the pockets of out-of-state companies and the state's coffers would mean money drained from local economies and businesses and from family savings."

In a letter urging voters to reject the casino proposal, Western Massachusetts Against Casinos addressed problems casinos have brought to other areas that have allowed them.

The letter said that, "Maryland's Department of Health and Mental Hygiene task force determined that its 52,000 gambling addicts cost citizens $1.5 billion in lost work productivity, monies stolen and embezzled, bad checks and unpaid taxes."

Some local community leaders said they feel a casino would bring a lot of money into the area, benefiting local economies. According to an Associated Press report, the mayors of Springfield, Chicopee, Westfield and Holyoke have been part of a group that has lobbied for the building of casinos in western Massachusetts.

UM begins restoration of pond's bank

By Joseph R. Fountain
Collegian Staff

New England Environmental Incorporated has donated significant amounts of labor and materials for the reconstruction of the western edge of the pond at the University of Massachusetts.

"How much is it going to cost?" asked graduate student Fernao Magachaes. "If the costs are reasonable they should do it."

The total cost for the project is $1,700.

That edge of the campus pond has been degrading for several years and numerous benches are falling into the pond, said a memorandum from Physical Plant Division.

It was announced yesterday that 200 feet of the western bank will be shored up through a new method to prevent erosion called streamback bioengineering. This will stop the erosion of the banks and strengthen the shore wall. This project is not part of the million dollar plan to fix up the pond, rather a smaller project that was part of a workshop at Hampshire College on May 8th.

The work was started immediately by participants in the workshop who wanted to see this new method to prevent erosion in action. University grounds personal will complete the work before commencement.

Marc Fournier, assistant deputy of grounds and recycling said, "If this wasn't done, the banks would continue to erode and benches would fall in. It's important that the students know we are doing positive things to save the pond.

"It was also very cost effective. Outside companies donated materials and labor," Fournier said. "The University saved thousands of dollars."

Numerous UMass students were enthusiastic about the project.

"That's wonderful," Corey Sanderson, philosophy graduate student, said. "The ducks won't laugh at my wet [behind] when I fall from one of the benches that are way too close to the pond."

Kristen Morgananelli, a sophomore history/political science major said, "It's great and I love those ducks."

Annie Merullo, a junior exercise science major, said, "It'll be good for the ducks and now if they only clean up the [excrement]."

ELECTION '96

ENVIRONMENT — PROPERTY RIGHTS: Do you support "takings" legislation that would require payment if federal environmental regulations reduce property values?

Bill Clinton
"No. The administration supports protecting private property. If the government takes someone's property, the government should pay. But the so-called takings legislation introduced as part of the Republicans' 'Contract With America' goes beyond constitutional protections — it would cost taxpayers tens of billions of dollars and weaken safeguards for public health, safety, and the environment."

Bob Dole
"Yes." Sponsored legislation.

WASHINGTON (AP)
Breaking clear in a contest once crowded and tangled, Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole has secured the Republican presidential nomination and won the right to engage President Clinton in the fall.

Neither man at this point has a comprehensive plan form. But what they do have, after Clinton's three years in the White House and Dole's 27 years in the Senate, are records. And since January they've answered questions on a variety of subjects put to them by The Associated Press.

Here are their answers, plus summaries of their words and actions on a variety of issues. Positions may change, and Ross Perot may yet jump in again to mix everything up.

But as of now, this is where they stand and what they've said.

So as I thought about the [illegible] odd columns I have written in the past, I laughed. Not necessarily because I thought I was funny. I just can't believe these guys granted me such space on this page for the last six semesters. I have had the freedom of basically writing a weekly journal.

I mean, how can I beat this? I love writing this stuff. I love writing about random things. I love making people laugh. I love cracking myself and those around me. I get a kick out of people who don't think what I write is funny or those who approach me and say what I write is "crap" and how it "doesn't inform people."

So kidding? You mean the one I told about the guy who smeared feces all over himself didn't inform people the dangers of finger painting with human crap? Damn.

Of course it wasn't informative. It attempted to entertain those who were in the mood to laugh at themselves. It wasn't written in hopes of an intelligent discussion. It was just the opposite, the part in the page where you could rid your brain of all arrogance and focus on the humorous anecdotes which life offers us, seen from the single viewpoint of the guy in the picture up there.

I've made a couple of times about how I drive a car now. I don't know if you heard, but I have a 1981 Oldsmobile Cutlass Brougham. Don't even ask. I still don't know how to pronounce Brougham. Use your imagination. I do when I drive the damn thing. I do admit though, I get just as many looks from fellow drivers while on the road as a man would in say, a Corvette. The looks I get just have a little more laughing involved.

Four years of notes from the Basement

Matt Vautour

In the last couple weeks, it seems everyone has been asking me what I learned in college. After careful consideration and a scientific (not really) study, I've come to a conclusion as to what the average student learns here at UMass. Keep in mind, the gloves are off.

• If you stand on the Student Union steps and yell, people look at you funny. If you do it with an oversized cat mask on, people think you're an idiot.

• If there is a problem that needs immediate attention, the Chancellor will form a task force that will never be heard from again to deal with it.

• There is no better value anywhere than Antonio's Pizza by the Slice for a dollar, especially when it tastes that good.

• If you place a large group of very studious people in one residential area, by the end of the year they will all feel the desire to run through that residential area naked. I'll take nude engineering majors for $1,000, Alex.

• Crossword puzzle dilemma: a three letter acronym for people that take themselves too seriously... Hmmmm... The equestrian team doesn't fit.

• A lot of people are really scared of being against what is considered politically correct or liberally acceptable. For a school that is supposed to be so free thinking, it appears that free thinking only really includes political correctness.

• There is absolutely no truth to the rumor that Billy Bulger was seen on campus this week talking to students and trying to find out what they thought.

• Far too many administrators think that they know what is best for the students when they really don't.

• Oh, I got the answer to my crossword question... S.G.A.

• The four years have come and gone and I still can't figure out what the Cannabis Reform Coalition really does... except for the obvious.

Whatever happened to Settie, the weird folk singer that used to be at the Pub all the time. It seems like every old Collegian I look at has her ad in it.

• • •

Rape is a serious problem on this campus — I wonder when the administration is going to start treating it like one.

• • •

Someone told me that Scooby Doo was created by a former UMass student and that each character was based on one of the five colleges. Shaggy was Hampshire, Velma was Mount Holyoke, Daphne was Smith, Fred was Amherst and of course Scooby was UMass. This of course leaves one question... What school is Scrappy-Doo?

• • •

A few weeks back someone called me in the Collegian offices and asked me for the answer to nine-down... Get a life.

You haven't lived until you get a condom from Dr. Abel...

With the exception of Buffalo Tom, there wasn't any band that I was a fan of to ever play spring concert, yet I still loved the event. It doesn't really feel like spring without it. UPC should have just charged three bucks for admission and gotten somebody good. People still would have come. It's the event more than the music for the most part.

Ah, the air is just thick with memories... Boy it seems like just yesterday that idiots were swarming the Student Union steps. I miss the days of people moaning about how we need a library that isn't shaped like a penis, or that the Minuteman isn't a politically correct mascot. Activism just isn't as much fun anymore.

Perhaps the event that struck me the most in my four years was the passing of former UMass lacrosse coach Dick Garber.

When he died, as the lacrosse beat writer, I wrote a story about him. The positive feelings that were generated from the people I interviewed just from talking about the man were amazing.

I met him once, less than a year before he died. I shook his hand briefly and even then I could feel there was something special about the man. I wish I had gotten to know him...

Matt Vautour has spent four years in the basement.

All I really need to know

Marni E. Helfner

Like Robert Fulghum, all I really need to know, I learned in one place... UMass.

• Go to class. Contrary to popular belief, you do actually learn, and the professor remembers when you're absent.

• Everyone has one semester when all they do is drink. Just make sure you only have one of those semesters.

• Kiss your professor's ass every opportunity you get. While it doesn't seem important right now, they are going to have to write you letters of recommendation some day. And they do write bad ones.

• When it comes to making a choice between two things do what you think is right rather than what is easy.

• People in high places (University administrators) use a lot of big words to really say nothing. Learn the difference between what is politics and what is reality.

• If you want to drink, drink responsibly. If you want to do drugs, do it responsibly. If you want to do anything, do it responsibly.

• Make new friends, but keep the old ones. Take time to chill with friends, because after graduation they may be all you have. Plus, who else will bail your ass out of jail?

• Learn the difference between sexual harassment, sexual innuendos and flirting. Some people never will, and that puts you ahead of the game.

• If you're broke, eat in the DCs. Otherwise, stay as far away from them as possible. You should always be able to identify what you're eating and it should be a color that actually appears in nature.

• Take a class in something you know nothing about. I promise, it will be the most interesting class you take each semester.

• There's nothing wrong with being a virgin. Or dating someone older than you or younger than you or of a different race or gender.

• Look to learn and learn to look beyond just what you see on the surface of people. People with neon magenta hair and Young Republicans are often one and the same.

• Dress up once a week. Put on a shirt and tie, wear a nice suit, wear a skirt once in a while. Unfortunately, people will treat you better than if you wore jeans and a t-shirt.

• Be nice to your RA. Their jobs suck so much that they need people to be nice to them once in a while.

• Talk to your family/parents on a regular basis. Contrary to what you might think, they actually miss you.

• Get involved in a RSO. They can change your whole life. You can become obsessed with one thing — like the Collegian.

• Lock your door.

• Tell the important people in your life how important they are to you. Someday it may be too late.

• Learn to take criticism and learn when to let it just roll off your shoulders like water off a duck's back.

• If you're going to have sex, practice safer sex — condoms, dental dams, etc.

• Cut out coupons, then use the money you saved to buy Antonio's.

• The phone number at D.P. Dough is 256-1616, the number at the Sub is 549-5160, and the number for Sugar Jones is 549-JONES. Those are the only phone numbers you will ever need to remember.

• If you sign for loans, make sure you know every little detail about them — they will come back to haunt you.

• Never walk alone at night on this campus.

• Major in what you love. If you don't, you've wasted four years here.

• Find a good professor and stick with him/her for as long as possible.

My final words of advice? Eat some, drink some, sleep some, party some, study some and never take it too seriously. It'll be over before you know it.

An emotional farewell

Justin C. Smith

Alright, I admit it. I could tone it down just a little. OK. I could tone it down a lot, but then again it just wouldn't be me, and I wouldn't be the person I am today.

It has been pointed out to me on more than one occasion that I get just a little bit too excited when it comes to... well just about anything in life. When the Bruins are on TV, my housemates remind me that the referees can't hear me... in Edmonton. When I play basketball at Boyden or some playground, I'm reminded at times that not everyone takes it so seriously. And when it comes to dealing with a woman I'm interested in, my emotions can become my biggest enemy.

While all of the above may be 100 percent true, it also would not be me if I didn't act the way I did. Maybe it's just that everyone who thinks I need to take a sedative to relax misunderstands my emotions.

I admit that when my favorite sports teams are on the tube and something spectacular happens, I act like I am in the arena where the game is being played. In 1982, when Brad Park scored in overtime for the Bruins to win game seven of the Adams Division Finals, I woke up everyone in my house with my screams of excitement. I also got grounded for being up two hours past my bedtime, never mind being a nuisance to my slumbering family. But it was also the most savored punishment of my childhood. To this day, my enthusiasm has not changed and it spills over to when I am playing hockey, football or whatever.

If you have ever played basketball with or against me, you can attest to that. When someone on my team does something spectacular, I will always pump my fist and cheer. So what if it's a pick-up game? If you can't get somewhat excited about it, you're not having any fun. I play for the fun of it, and to me the game is a lot more fun when you win. I'm not going to hang myself if I lose, but it does make me teed off when I knew my team could still be playing.

Haigis Hoopla this year is a good example. The opposition for my team in the semifinals was a team comprised of four people I am very close to. Before the game started, I shook all of their hands and wished them luck, but when I stepped onto the court and my shots would fall, I let them know about it. I didn't want to show them up, it's just how I play the game. I nearly had my nose broken by one of them who hit me in the face with the basketball. He apologized immediately, while I just stared at him. During the game I wasn't happy about the incident and it further fueled my drive. He apologized again after the game and I just gave him a hug because I knew he didn't mean it, it was just part of the game.

I left it on the court and that's the most important thing — to keep it all in perspective. When we were playing, I was as intense as I could be, but when all was said and done, it was a game and I enjoyed myself. The intense feelings that I have spill over into the other aspects of my life as well, but it's when I try to alter those actions that I feel the most awkward.

I have to admit that when it comes to dealing with women, I attempt to become removed from that emotional side for fear they will feel I'm coming on too strong.

I think that is my single biggest problem with the opposite sex because in the classroom, at work, or on the basketball court, you can work as hard as you possibly can and at least get respected for it. When it comes to pursuing a woman, you more often than not shouldn't show a woman you're working 100 percent for her. Some play hard to get, while others love the attention and let you know it.

There are even the ones who are so hard to read that you don't know whether you should just forget about it because they think you're an idiot, or they are just too shy in those situations to let you know what is going on in their head. Sometimes those people make me want to let my emotions get the best of me, so I will just come right out and say, "Hey, what's the deal?"

I will let my emotions run freely because I don't feel people should have to censor how they really feel. Though I'm sorry to say it, sometimes I feel I must do it in relationships because I don't want to get hurt, but when I feel comfortable with something or someone, I'll make it readily apparent. I feel if you're excited about something then yell out to the world.

"Being a sports editor has been so much fun, but it also has kept me from people I used to hang around with a lot more. I hope to see each of you again before I leave, because I will miss you all. Either way I wish you all the best of luck in whatever you do."

Mass censorship

Tara Ruelle

"Censorship cannot be employed selectively; when anyone's freedom of speech is denied, everyone else's is threatened."
— Alan M. Dershowitz

"And stupid stuff, it makes us shout."
— line from the song "UMass" by the Pixies.

A few weeks ago I was sitting in on a friend's radio show and we got to talking about a guy he had met who had one of those crappy jobs you inevitably end up taking at one point or another to make your way through school. His job wasn't as nasty as shoveling out septic tanks or as tedious as telemarketing, but it wasn't the type of thing you'd want to do for the rest of your life, either.

One of us made a comment on the air along the lines of "That guy's job sucks." We didn't say that the guy sucked, we didn't say his mother sucked — if anything, we were sympathizing with a guy whose job entailed sitting alone in a barn on the outskirts of campus. But no sooner had we made our comment then the phone line lit up with a complaint from an irate caller who felt that we were being unfair to the guy.

"I think what you said about that guy is pretty disrespectful and you probably shouldn't be saying that."

And this is the stupid stuff at UMass that makes people shout. One of the only reasons why I am looking forward to getting away from here for good is to finally be liberated from a consolidation of people like this caller who feel it is their right to tell others what they should be saying and thinking.

Pretty much anything that is considered controversial that manages to find a way into this paper gets there only after the already overworked editors ask the questions "Will our office get stormed if we run this?" and "How can we cover our asses on this one?"

Two years ago the Collegian was heavily criticized for running a pro-life advertisement that clearly stated it did not reflect the view of the paper. Last year, people couldn't believe that the paper would run a blatantly anti-Semitic letter from a retired professor. Another racist letter from a member of the campus community never made it to the pages of the paper this semester.

A satirical piece I wrote on Amherst "townies" last year was greeted with a slew of letters asking, "How could the Collegian run this?" even though it explicitly states at the top of this page that the opinions expressed here are those of the individual writer.

No newspaper should be subjected to demands to suppress information. It's contrary to their only public purpose. As a society, we have created a cruel and twisted world, and for me, information has been the only defense I've had against the bitter truth that reality doesn't always have a happy ending.

But there remains an abundance of people in these parts who are brimming with dopey optimism and would rather not know that there are indeed racists, bigots and other wretched people thinking bad thoughts not just in this world, but right here in the "happy" valley. It is a lot easier to nix the thoughts and ideas of the wicked and mean than it is to actually deal with them.

Other denizens of the valley run around like the cast members of "The Simpsons," making a knee-jerk crisis out of every little issue before they've even bothered to take the time to get information on it. "If we don't like it, we're not gonna think about it! We're going to storm Mayor Quimby's office!"

The First Amendment is the only right you have that ensures the protection of all of your other rights. To attack that right in any shape or form is to attack your own freedom.

When I leave next week, the greatest advantage I take away from UMass is the ability to express myself and speak freely in a way that is drastically more effective than plastering my politics in the form of lame cliches on the bumper of my car. To me, that is worth the price of admission I paid to toil away here for eight semesters and five years.

And if there is anybody out there who wants to take that right away from me, I'd have to say that they suck.

Dave Copeland is now officially a townie.

You can be a pepper too

Tara Ruelle

In these last 70 allotted lines, I'm supposed to reflect on my experiences here at UMass. I guess I should focus on the two and a half years I spent as a Collegian columnist. What else can I say except that I feel empowered?

I have written in the past about the power we have as journalists with the voice we're given to express our ideas. I cannot stress enough the importance of having that voice heard, uncensored. Fully recognizing that power is the key. If you don't, you're the one who loses out.

I was lucky to have my opinion represented on this page and given access to others' views on what I spoke. This University's residents have an obligation to communicate and a responsibility to use this medium to its fullest potential. There is legislation underway now to further censor a journalist's ability to accurately report, so we must utilize it while we are able.

If this newspaper has an obvious flaw, it's that a fuller depiction of all its readership is not represented. But from what I've discovered, that's no one's fault but the readers themselves. As intimidating as it may be to enter the murky basement and subject yourself to the pens of the editors, it is essential and necessary. I had to be coerced by my roommate to submit my ideas to the butcher, but two years later I'm still standing.

The free flow of information and communication within the confines of this newspaper is the sole responsibility of the inhabitants on this campus. I gleaned the most from the feedback to my editorials and careful interpretation of my colleagues' work. I found that there is no set agenda for the coverage in the Collegian, it's simply what we have to work with. Please don't complain to me about the pages if you have no intention of making some changes.

My appeal to you students is simple: If you see a problem with your newspaper, use your power to change it; you are censoring your own ideas if you refuse to have them represented. Other than that, pay attention to what's going on around you. Though it may seem like a peaceful, sheltered existence here, you are still part of a bigger global community — don't lose sight of that fact. There is much more out there than chicken pucks and basketball games.

More importantly, and totally unrelated, I did get a lot out of my four years here. I'm sure I'll never again see a giant Planter's Peanut guy handing out free samples. I may never see a masked man speaking about love — not that I'll really miss him. I can look back on all of this, though, and realize that I had the opportunity to experience this University with all of it's "diversified" glory.

If I don't miss that, though, I will miss college life. I'll miss my meager existence living off of $20 a week plus recyclables. I'll even miss drinking beers and doing laundry simultaneously.

I'll take heart in knowing that I didn't waste my opportunity to speak to this campus in whatever small way. I did that. I wish I had done that sooner. I'm sure I won't soon have a chance to write about my naked guy stories, my fear of republican presidential candidates and my roommate's barn stories.

Basically, if I can do it, anyone can. I take personal issue with the letters that complain about the trivial topics on this editorial page. If you don't like it, come down and write your opinions. Keep all of this in mind the next time you find fault with this newspaper.

To quote an infamously unimportant commercial ad, "Just Do It." And to add to that notion, if you're not going to do it, don't bitch about your publication.

And the many thanks go to...

How do you sum up four years of college without sounding remotely cheesy or high school-ish? I mean there really isn't much of a difference between them, except that when you graduate from high school, you realize that you have four more years left to goof off, more or less.

But then what? You have a B.A., $21,000 in loans and the stark realization that you still don't have enough of anything to get anywhere without at least a Masters. So why don't they just make college last six years and get everything done in one fell swoop? Simply put, it would make too much sense.

Here are some thanks I'd like to offer up before I go. It's selfish of me, but this is also my last column.

• Thanks to my housemates. I never had a lot of friends that were girls because I find most girls to be stupid, annoying, self-serving bitches. You proved me wrong and for once, I have no trouble admitting it.

Tara MK Connely

• Thanks to "the boy" for keeping me amused and bringing back memories of pre-school. I too flunked sharing.

• Thanks to Anna, Nicole, Smith, for always providing me with material to rag on. Anytime I lose self-confidence I'll just look to your life for a quick pick me up.

• Thanks to anyone who had to deal with me on a Wednesday afternoon or a Sunday night. Hey, did I return your head after biting it off?

• Thanks to my Mom and Dad. Yesterday was the third anniversary of his death. He got me here and made it possible for me to graduate loan free... well, him and that scholarship. Thanks scholarship committee.

• Thanks to the Republican Club for harassing me last year when I wrote that stupid filler piece on that MTV AIDS special. During your monologue, I reorganized my address book. Guess why you were filed under A.

• Thanks to that girl in UPC who yelled at me for not supporting the Spring Concert. I'm glad selling yourselves to Magnavox paid off. I was at the Campus Pond Sunday. Where were you? Oh, and I did know about the battle of the bands thing and why you held it. The sponsors called me to be a judge. Sometimes it's OK to vent.

• Thanks to all the people who notice that their horoscope was the same twice in one week. You get an A plus for observation skills. Try the psychic hot-line. I heard they're far more accurate.

• Thanks for the people who keep stealing my cat Cecil and changing her collar for me. Did she tell you black was her color or did you just guess?

• Thanks for all of those people who ask me what I want to do after graduation. I'm now on Prozac and will be doing nicely once the depression has worn off.

Actually, I've decided to stay in the Happy Valley for a while. I'm getting that kind of sick of it, but lots of people who refuse to live in the real world just stay here. My boyfriend is also staying here, but that's because he is a freshman. I'm not robbing the cradle. He's 22, but for a while it did bother me. Now I'm just bothered by the fact that my Mom doesn't like him all that much. OK, she hates him and all because he broke my ankle when we were nine and didn't pay for the hospital bill. I ask you: when you were nine, could you pay for a $400 hospital bill? However, thanks to him I realize it's okay not to have a clue and that anything with nutritional value is worth eating.

I just saw an ad for the new Jetta that comes with a bike rack and Trek mountain bike. Isn't that nice, it's like a two- for-one deal for the insanely rich. Like they need a break. My brother is forever searching for the perfect car. He's 22, and so far he's had four cars. I'm 22, and so far I've owned no cars. He gets a little obsessive and Windexes the thing everyday. If you ever want to know where my brother is, follow the scent of Windex... honest.

Finally, for about four years people have been asking me incisively, "What does the MK stand for? Is it Mary Kate? Is it Mortal Kombat? Is it anything?!" Well, that question and, "Why isn't "Dilbert" in the paper anymore?" You know, when I tell you the answer I hope you don't feel let down like "Seinfeld" fans did with Kramer. However I can guarantee that anyone who placed bets on the names all lost because there is no way in hell you could have guessed.

A few lasting memories

Matt Audette

Alright I'll keep the sappiness to a bare minimum. Yes, I'm graduating, but I think I'll spare you all the B.S. about how much UMass meant to me and how you undergrads should relish your time here — it's a crock. This place really isn't that great. But I do have a few amusing anecdotes up my sleeve so I thought I might as well tell you a few for your reading enjoyment.

• One time, I was driving through the scenic roads of Hadley and I saw a car that had spun off the road and hit a telephone pole. While that may not be too funny, the fact that attached to the front of the car was a slightly bent license plate which read, "God Is My Co-Pilot" was hysterical. I'm definitely going to burn.

• OK, my most embarrassing moment during my time here: I was walking by the pond during the warmer months that we spend here on campus, and I thought I saw a buddy of mine sitting on the grass. I must have been feeling a momentous rush of testosterone because I ran and tackled him and we went rolling through the grass. Ends up it wasn't him, just some random stranger who looked slightly shocked, and then slightly pissed. If you are reading this, lawn boy, thank you for not kicking my ass.

• I once wrote a review of some lame Rush album. It was one of the first reviews I ever wrote for the paper and I was slightly nervous. I gave the album a better review than I felt it really deserved because I was afraid to be too harsh. Well, some psycho dude got my phone number and called me daily threatening to kill me and telling me how I didn't understand the deep, philosophical meaning behind the band's lyrics. I was terrified. I lived in fear for almost a week, wondering when this guy was going to bust down my door with his 1985 Power Windows T-shirt to impale me with a drumstick. Well, he eventually went away, but my pride never fully recovered. Psycho Rush boy, if you are reading this... that Rush album sucks in ways never previously imagined and Neil Peart deserves to be a garbage man.

• OK, I'll admit it. I love Galaga. I know it is not very cool to admit something like that (no, I am not one of those guys who is constantly in the Campus Center arcade), but I can't help it, it's become an addiction. I know that there are many other Galaga lovers at this University (there are the same initials on the high score list every day), so I would like to make a request on their behalf to whoever is in charge of the video games in the arcade: Please move the game away from VirtuaFighter 2. Those guys (you know the ones that are always there) are animals. Let me tell you, I have taken many an elbow to the ribs by one of those dudes who was getting just a little bit too into the game. My advice, guys: chill out. It is only a game. Repeat. It is only a game.

• My final farewell goes out to the members of the Science Fiction Club. You guys hang out everyday on the couches just outside of the Collegian. Why? Is there something magical about those couches. Is the Force strong there? I hate to dig into you folks, but one day I was walking by when I heard two people having an intense debate over whether the Millennium Falcon had air conditioning or not. Vulcans, if you are reading this, Science Fiction is not real. Repeat. Science Fiction is not real.

So that's it. It is all over. Thanks to those who were cool, and thanks to those who were not. It has definitely been an experience.

Oh yeah, and to the guy who came up to me and told me he had various articles of mine blown up on his wall. Thanks for the compliment but I just have to tell you one little thing.

Uh, dude — get a life.

Indie Boy was a Virtua champion.

GOODBYE SENIOR COLUMNISTS

Today's Opinion/Editorial page features many of the voices that have served to enlighten, amuse and enrage the UMass community over the course of the past few years.

Unfortunately, this edition marks the end of their illustrious Collegian careers. The Op/Ed page would like to take this opportunity to thank all of our retiring columnists, and to encourage you, the UMass community, to contribute to next semester's page.

If you are interested in writing columns for the Collegian in the future, come down to the office, or call 545-1491 and ask to speak with Mark McGrath.

Threshold questions; Guide enlightens

BEN MEZRICH
Threshold
Harper Collins

Every once in a while, we, as a society, are presented with a novel which through a fascinating plot is able to inject us with a certain scientific consciousness. That was the case with Jurassic Park, bringing to light the possible uses and misuses of genetic research. Similarly, first-time author Ben Mezrich brings us even closer to that subject with his scientific thriller, Threshold.

Threshold is the story of a 24-year-old medical student who, at the request of a female acquaintance, jumps into the investigation of her high-ranking father's death. The paper trail leads him into a state-of-the-art genetic research center where he comes face to face with what could be tomorrow's generic world.

What makes Threshold a horror is the startling topics which it opens up. What lies down the road for genetic research? Genetic warfare? Eugenics? Controlled evolution? The horror is in the fact that we don't know. This book is a must read not because of the answers, but the questions that spring from them.

LOUIS CASABIANCA
First Time Europe
Penguin

So, you think you want to go to Europe? As summer nears, thousands of Americans make that trip, many for the first time. Unfortunately, these European "virgins" can never be sure what to expect from the trip-planning process to the vacation itself.

Written specifically for the unexperienced traveller, First-Time Europe: Everything You Need To Know Before You Go, is by Louis CasaBianca, an experienced European traveler who has seen a lot and made the best of it. In his book, he presents what he has learned in a complete and organized format, with the purpose of making your trip a smooth one.

The book is divided into 10 chapters that cover subjects ranging from planning your trip to going home, with a lot of other concerns in between.

Brain Candy gives a sugar–high

Kids in the Hall bring their absurd comedy to the big screen

By Justin Daniel Smith
Collegian Staff

KIDS IN THE HALL: BRAIN CANDY
Directed by Kelly Makin with Kevin McDonald, Bruce McCulloch, Scott Thompson
Playing at Academy of Music

For the past decade or so, The Kids in the Hall have been arguably the funniest sketch comedians. After their now infamous show became defunct in 1994, The Kids began working on their first feature film. Usually stretching sketch comedy into a full-length movie ends up as a complete abomination, but luckily The Kids in the Hall are better than that.

Thematically, the plot for Brain Candy is absurd. Usually The Kids take the normal and make it absurd. But this time their blueprint begins so inane that it can only get better. And thankfully it does.

Pharmaceutical scientists create a drug, called Gleemonex, that makes people happy. The problem is that it is not well tested and the side affects are unknown. Fortunately, The Kids keep the plot as the subtext to their dark humor.

Almost as if they are the Monty Python of the '90s, each one of The Kids play several characters. Virtually every character is a Kid in one of their many guises.

Bruce McCulloch steals the show. His many faces include Grivo — a Danzig–esque rock star turned pop icon, Cisco — an hip advertising executive and Alice — a passive, self loathing female scientist. As Cancer Boy — a wheelchair ridden cancer patient that pops up at charity events, McCulloch gets dangerously close to crossing the line of decency. He makes you feel a bit demented for laughing at him.

In order to fully appreciate Brain Candy, you must be familiar with them and their humor. The Kids' humor is dark and often disturbing. Though the film never gets as funny as their show, Brain Candy won't disappoint Kids' fans. B–

Hold on to your white hats; Hootie's back for more

By Tara MK Connelly

HOOTIE & THE BLOWFISH
Fairweather Johnson
Atlantic

You can't stop Hootie, you can only hope to contain them — or at the very least keep them out of the recording studios. Spin was wrong, the worst band in the world isn't Deep Blue Something — it's Hootie & the Blowfish.

Fairweather Johnson is the band's sophomore effort and the only way they managed to avoid that second album slump was because it's almost impossible to sink lower than Cracked Rear View. Yeah, these bad boys of generic rock may have all the white cap and plaid wearing people happy, but originality has already been lost to them.

And that is precisely what this album lacks — originality with a big phat "O." Musically they are tight, but how can you possibly muff up material you've beaten to death already? So much material is reprocessed from Cracked Rear View it's beyond shameless. Is it possible for bands to rip off their own material and suck at it in the process? Don't believe me?

Listen to track four ("She Crawls Away"). Notice the line "When the sun goes down..." No, it's not your imagination, it's the same line from "Let Her Cry," except now the poor girl is groveling. "Old Man & Me" is carbon copy of "Hold My Hand." They don't even try to change the chords.

And everything follows pretty much the same pattern of genius. Everything is in perfect slow, two–stepping Hootie time with a splash of mandolin a la 10,000 Maniacs style ("Earth Stopped Cold at Dawn"). They even have a bad Natalie Merchant wanna–be crooning along with lead singer Darius Rucker.

Apparently Hootie thinks that an album full of songs about guys who can't hold relationships needs a humorous edge. So, they throw in a title track that has them doing a five second little '80s sounding "ditty" that is a cross between "Man Eater" and the theme song to Flashdance. You laugh because it's so stupid and then panic because you know it will

The three deans of Arts and Sciences and Nu Chapter of Phi Beta Kappa are pleased to announce new members elected from the Junior and Senior Classes. Phi Beta Kappa is the oldest and most prestigious American honor society in the Liberal Arts. It was founded at the College of William and Mary on December 5, 1776. Yale's chapter was formed in 1780, Harvard's in 1781. During the next century additional chapters of Phi Beta Kappa were added and in 1883 a national organization called the United Chapters of Phi Beta Kappa was created. At present, only 237 liberal arts colleges or universities have been accredited by the national organization and permitted to form chapters. In New England only six public institutions are so recognized.

Candidates do not apply for membership nor is application made on their behalf. They are nominated by the chapter's faculty members on the basis of their academic records as shown on their transcripts. Candidates must be majors in one of the three faculties of the College of Arts and Sciences and must satisfy certain grade point, foreign language and distribution requirements set by the national organization. Approximately 3% of Seniors with the strongest academic records are elected each year; one half of 1% of Juniors are selected.

Boyracer makes return to Valley

By Mike Burke
Collegian Staff

Well, those crazy Brits, Boyracer, are back in town. A month ago, the Leeds quartet made an explosive Valley debut, tearing through an endless stream of two minute pop wonders at the Iron Horse during the Loud Music Festival. Tomorrow night, they return for an encore performance at the Bay State Hotel with ace opening acts Tizzy and the Madelines.

Boyracer is the new torchbearer of Britain's fastest guitar pop band following the likes of Crass, the Buzzcocks and the Wedding Present. In concert the energy is at times overwhelming as the band rushes through songs in lightening fast speed. On record the band varies the sound a bit more, but the adrenaline is still there.

Two months ago, Boyracer released In Full Colour (Zero Hour) their sophomore full length. The album sees the band at a crossroads, mixing their old sound of loud–and–fast rules with a softer, more introspective side. The results are fabulous as the band races — and sometimes walks — through 20 songs in just 40 minutes.

Over the past two months, the band has kept right up with their frantic release schedule of seven inch singles and EPs. Recently the Racer 100 single was released commemorating the bands 100th song. Blackbean Records also just issued a one–sided 12–inch EP.

A pair of New England's best bands are set to open for Boyracer — Tizzy and the Madelines. Northampton's Tizzy have become the unofficial designated local opening act, with good reason, having done the duties for bands like Throwing Muses and Versus in the past. Their live show is a must see.

The Madelines are quickly becoming the pride and joy of the underground scene in Burlington Vt., the same scene that regrets the existence of a certain phat aquatic band. Recently the three year old band released their impressive debut CD Your Motives Kill Me on Sudden Shame, the hip label run by the Madelines' own Colin Clary. Besides the CD the band has released several seven inch singles. The Madelines begin their first tour of the northeast on May 18th. In the past they have shared the stage with a slew of excellent bands including Superchunk, Luna, Polvo, Grifters and Versus.

Boyracer, Tizzy and the Madelines perform at the Bay State Hotel on May 16 at 10 p.m. The show is 21+. Call the club at 584-8513 for more information.

Almodovar's direction makes Flower entrancing film

By Justin Daniel Smith
Collegian Staff

THE FLOWER OF MY SECRET
Directed by Pedro Almodovar with Marisa Paredes, Juan Echanove
Playing at Pleasant St. Theater

Director Pedro Almodovar has established himself as the most forefront Spanish film–maker since Luis Bunuel. His past films, such as Women on the Verge of a Nervous Breakdown and Kika, offered intelligent black humor that shocked American audiences. Grown up and toned down, The Flower of My Secret gives a new vision from the auteur, Almodovar.

Almodovar's latest suggests that he is heading towards the style of Rainer Werner Fassbinder. Like Fassbinder, Almodovar keeps the movie self reflective — at all times the viewer knows that they are watching a movie. His usual wild comedy is mellowed down almost to a melodrama, which Fassbinder was famous (or infamous) for.

The story is about another woman on the verge of a nervous breakdown. Leo (Marisa Paredes) is a trashy romance novelist whose husband is away at war. Under the pen name Amanda Gris, she has become one of Spain's most popular writers.

Her husband Paco is fighting in the war in Bosnia — whether he is there for utilitarian reasons or for selfish reasons (to avoid his spouse) is unclear. What is clear is that every second he is away from her, Leo thinks about him and how she wishes for his return.

On her own, Ruby has personal touch

By Matthew Leonard
Collegian Correspondent

Ruby is personal. Leslie Rankine's expressive project, formed with ex-Pigface collaborator and friend, Mark Walk, pushes the oft-cliched boundaries of music. Ruby's debut album, Salt Peter, snugly ties elements of indie, rock, soul, hip hop, blues and industrial though songs in which lead singer Rankine is straight-forward and angry.

After a stint as frontwoman for the industrial-punk outfit Silverfish, Rankine seeked independence through a more personally expressive musical experience. She found her home in the creative venture that became Ruby.

"I was totally pissed off with the whole [Silverfish] situation," she explains in her dense, Scottish accent.

She left the screaming, eraserhead persona for a softer, yet more dangerous cruon on Salt Peter. Her voice varies in both sound and style almost as often as Ruby's music, following organically textured computer grooves with angry, yet beautifully harrowing screams. Then she'll slip soft, stinging lines like, "If I could taste your salty head/And pick your dead hair from my eyes/Let you smell the sweet despise" underneath what she calls "big nasty guitars."

Lyrically, Ruby's songs travel through lands of sexual rappings and unequal relationships, stealing the power back through her words. On the soft, acoustic guitar backed "Heidi" she gently relays, "I can speak so softly, because I have so much power."

Leslie recently explained her songwriting in between a grueling spring touring schedule that brought her to Lupo's Heartbreak Hotel in Providence, R.I. two weeks ago.

"Basically, I write down whatever is going on in my head. I like to analyze people and the way men and women interact," she said, because, "people are screwed up and illogical."

Most of the songs on Ruby's debut album emanated from the months she spent locked up in a recording studio with Walk Salt Peter, released several months ago, though sluggish in the sales department, is a most impressive debut album from one of the most powerful women in today's alternative rock circuit.

Circus reaches for new heights

By Barbara Borst
Associated Press

MONTREAL — Without elephants, bearded ladies or ring masters, Cirque du Soleil has opened a new production that fortifies the troupe's tradition — redefining the circus.

"We have our glitter in another form," Gilles Ste-Croix, a vice president of the creative team, said before the recent world premiere of "Quidam."

During the 12 years and nine productions since Cirque du Soleil was founded here, director Franco Dragone has asked its acrobats, aerial daredevils and contortionists to be something more.

While not skimping on the drama of death-defying feats, they must also bring to life characters, feelings and elements of a simple story.

"This is what makes us different our theatrical approach," Ste-Croix said.

In "Quidam," a Latin word signifying a nameless passer-by, the cast appears under the big-top dressed as waiters, hobos, newsboys and schoolgirls, in subdued colors or in tatters. They pass through poignant moments, all the while celebrating the scope of human capabilities.

The story is impressionistic, not an attempt to wrap up the stunts in Mystic Pizza actress finds her way in

By Ric Leyva
Associated Press

NEW YORK — From the first, Lili Taylor trusted her instincts. "I always knew what I had to do," Taylor says. "I knew when to go to the front, you know what I mean? But I wasn't a showoff. I knew when to stay back, too."

Overflowing talent, enthusiasm and humility are her hallmarks, laid out in her auspicious 1988 debut with Julia Roberts in Mystic Pizza and built upon in the nearly 20 films she's done since.

Working with some of the biggest names in the business — and the smallest — Taylor has played mostly supporting roles, without complaint, recognizing early on that making it as an actress meant balancing her natural desire for the spotlight with inspired teamwork.

Now, her big payoff seems near.

Starring in I Shot Andy Warhol, Taylor claims center stage, showing off as a deranged, militant feminist writer-prostitute who appeared briefly in a Warhol movie before nearly killing him in 1968.

"It helps to accept that there's an intrinsic struggle," Taylor says. "I've had to fight hard and I'm still fighting hard because even respect doesn't get you a job. It just doesn't.

"There's a lot of corruption and soul-sickness in the movie industry that makes me not want to participate in the whole thing, but I love what I do, so I find a way," Taylor says, ending with a smile.

What she found in Valerie Solanas, a passionate but disturbed loner whose flashes of brilliance caught Warhol's eye, was the chance to vent for millions of women — then and now — stifled by male dominance.

"I identified with a lot of things," Taylor says, her scratchy voice picking up speed with each new thought. "Her anger. Her frustration at having a lot of potential and not having the means to express it. And also wanting women to shine. She really wanted women to shine."

Taylor was the darling of this year's Sundance Film Festival, where she appeared in three featured entries: Warhol, Girlstown and Cold Fever. For the first time, she was the focus of attention.

"What I realized at Sundance was that I didn't need it, I'd be fine without all that public recognition, but I also realized that it was nice, it was a very nice thing," she says, grinning shyly. "It's nice to be recognized."

Six degrees of Kevin Bacon extends all the way to the Iron Horse as he performs with his brothers as the aptly named Bacon Brothers tonight at 7:30 p.m.

One of the strongest aspects of the book is its budgeting advice. While Europe has the world to offer, not much comes cheap. For a two-month trip, you can expect to pay about $4,000 for airline tickets, Eurail passes, accommodation, food and admissions. If you wanted to go bare-bones, a month-long trip could be had for as low as $1,600.

One of the best chapters describes the "crime, safety and sleaze" of Europe. Topics covered range from train thieves to pickpockets. Tourists need to be very careful; thieves all over Europe make quite a living off of them. Bands of innocent looking local children can turn out to be highly trained and talented pickpockets. Be wary, they swarm. The author advises the use of a money belt, which can hold valuables like money and credit cards underneath your clothing, where it can only be reached by you, as a means of combatting the pickpocketing problem.

After reading the chapter on accommodations, you will have a leg up when it comes to using bidets and "straight-shots," the European versions of what we refer to as toilets. You will also find out why it is wise to bring a roll of toilet paper along. Make that a few rolls if you feel like making a killing in the bartering network. Surprisingly, other Americans, not Europeans, are the ones who will pay anything for the homesickness-relieving comfort of the downy soft tissue.

For those who like to "see it all," there are a number of other European attractions, like the red light districts of Amsterdam and Hamburg, in which prostitution and soft drug use are widespread (although not necessarily legal).

Whatever your tastes, Europe can be the trip of your life, as long as you know what you're doing. First Time Europe, in its clear and concise format, is a must for all of the European first-timers out there. When looking at the amount of time and money that can be saved, the relatively low price of this book could make it the bargain of the century.

a Madrid newspaper. Her employer, Angel (Juan Echanove) immediately falls for her, saying that he would do anything for her. The rest of the film deals with Lou and her quest to overcome her problems with Paco and establish an identity as her own person.

Almodovar keeps the audience separated from the characters by consistently having his camera outside of scenes. Scenes occur through windows, mirrors, fabric and anything else Almodovar could find to put between the characters and the camera.

The film is a light-hearted comedy. Almodovar makes you feel pompous for laughing with him, like you are part of some pretentious intelligentsia that looks down upon others. At times the film steers you in directions that you are not particularly willing to travel down, but after all Flower is an entertaining piece of cinema. B-

"Silly Little Pop Song" begins as a funky blues song that gives the illusion of potential listenability, but then heads straight for adult contemporary land at 100 mph. "Fool" has the boys getting a little daring. They take an Alice and Chains riff, throw in a little Darius does Eddie Vedder and you get mumbles, moans and unintelligible lyrics. Dutch artist featured in exhibit in D.C.

By Carl Hartman
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Jan Steen found subjects for his paintings in both the Bible and in taverns, and if he sometimes confused the two, that didn't seem to bother people in the pious, hard-drinking Netherlands of 350 years ago.

The National Gallery of Art is exhibiting 48 paintings — his first big American show. It follows one devoted to his more famous contemporary, Johannes Vermeer.

Vermeer, known for his calm and reflective painting, was seven years older than Steen and working up to be head of the painters' guild in his native Delft in the 1650s. Steen was running an unsuccessful brewery where he was known as his own best customer.

Steen had a reputation as a devotee of wine, women, song and long clay tobacco pipes — which were symbols of dissipation in the Holland of his day. His reputation is backed by some of his work on exhibit at the National Gallery: "Couple in a Bedroom," "A Woman at Her Toilet" and "Wine Is a Mucker."

His religious pictures are vivid and sensitive. Steen delighted in Delilah reaching for the scissors to cut Samson's strength-giving hair, and in faithless Bathsheba showing off a letter from King David. Bathsheba wears the long gown of a prosperous 17th-century lady — a red gown symbolizing passion. The king's letter begins provocatively Most beautiful Bathsheba — Because...

In at least six paintings, Steen depicted Christ's first miracle, turning water into wine for the wedding feast at Cana. In the picture at the National Gallery — curator Arthur A. Wheelock Jr. called it his favorite — Jesus wears a somber brownish robe.

Quietly blessing the water pots, he hardly stands out from the other guests. Steen portrays himself in the background with his glass raised, holding hands with a woman in a red dress.

a play. Ste-Croix says performers come together at an early stage in the show's development for workshops focused on its themes.

More than 50 artists from Canada, the United States, Russia, China, Austria, France and Switzerland will perform under the vast royal blue tent with vivid yellow stripes radiating from its pinnacle.

Aerial hoops, elevated hand balancing, Spanish webs, a cloud swing — these acrobatic feats are the skeleton of the show, Ste-Croix says, but only a skeleton until they are fleshed out with characterizations, original music and high-tech lighting.

Cirque du Soleil's founders were street performers who united in 1984 as a part of Montreal's 450th anniversary celebration of explorer Jacques Cartier. The Canadian and Quebec governments financed them for three years; now success brings private sponsors.

For athletes who have had to conform to strict competition rules, the circus can be liberating, he said. The emphasis is on originality, and technology can supplement where the human body reaches its limits.

Cirque du Soleil has no animals. That's not because its founders oppose circus tradition. It's a matter of style, and a way to offer more artists a chance to make a living.

This circus employs 225 performers and nearly 1,400 support staff for its four current shows: "Mystere" in Las Vegas, "Saltimbanco" in Europe, "Alegria" in Asia and "Quidam."

Some aspects of circus life today contrast sharply with the old days. While on tour Cirque du Soleil performers and staff live in apartments, not in caravans on site.

It takes six days to set up the tents, the kitchen, the track that supports aerial acts, the revolving stage, the comfortable seating, the generators, telephones and computer network.

But some aspects remain the same. Given the few weeks in any one location (except Las Vegas), social life centers around the circus.

"We're itinerant but not homeless," says Jacques Marois, associate producer. "Home is on site. We don't look at it as a tour. It's more a way of life."

NFL Most Valuable Player enters abuse program

By Arnie Stapleton
Associated Press

MILWAUKEE — Brett Favre, the NFL's Most Valuable Player and one of its brightest young stars, revealed yesterday he voluntarily entered the league's substance abuse program in February because of an addiction to painkillers.

The Green Bay Packers quarterback said he knew he had a problem after a seizure in the hospital following surgery Feb. 27 to remove bone chips from his left ankle.

Coach Mike Holmgren and general manager Ron Wolf refused to say whether the 26-year-old player would enter a drug treatment center. However, team doctor John Gray said he hopes Favre can rehabilitate himself under the league's care and be ready for training camp in late July.

Neither Favre nor any of the team's executives or doctors would elaborate on the treatment being given.

Speaking in a halting voice at a news conference in Green Bay, Favre read a statement but declined to answer questions. He left the auditorium at Lambeau Field with his fiancee, Deanna Tynes. "Throughout the last couple of years, in playing with pain and injuries and suffering numerous surgeries, I possibly became dependent on medication," Favre said. "The last surgery, being ankle surgery, I suffered a seizure in the hospital a couple of months back. Because of that I've sought help through the NFL.

"My main objective is getting better for myself and my family and to help the football team win," he said.

The team doctor stressed that any seizure is a serious medical condition.

"Although his life was not in danger at the time, I think it was sort of a wakeup call to say, 'Normal people don't have seizures,'" Gray said. "I think that woke him up a little bit and made him say, 'I need help.'"

Holmgren said Favre turned to league doctors in February and has met with them several times in the last two months but that because of the confidentiality of the league's program, he and Wolf only recently were told of Favre's dependency.

"We commend Brett Favre for recognizing the serious issues he faces and taking the necessary steps to deal with them," the NFL said in a statement. "The NFL's program affords players the opportunity to obtain professional medical treatment and counseling on a confidential basis in an effort to avoid any continuing substance abuse."

Under the NFL's substance abuse program, players are given drug tests while in treatment but the results are used for treatment, not disciplinary reasons.

Favre's drug dependency is yet another blow to the NFL, already besieged by franchise free agency, multimillion-dollar marketing lawsuits and drug problems.

Dallas Cowboys wide receiver Michael Irvin was indicted last month on felony cocaine and misdemeanor marijuana charges after a motel raid by police on March 4. Also, Pittsburgh Steelers running back Bam Morris faces two drug felony possession charges after police said they found cocaine and marijuana in his car after a traffic stop.

In college, Favre had surgery to remove part of his intestines following a car accident, then led Southern Mississippi to an upset of Alabama a month later.

Despite several severe injuries, Favre hasn't missed a start for the Packers since taking over for an injured Don Majkowski in the fourth week of the 1992 season for an NFL-best streak of 61 regular-season starts, plus seven more in the playoffs.

Favre led the Packers to the NFC championship game for the first time in 28 years last season. In addition to his MVP award, Favre also was chosen offensive player of the year and was named All-Pro. His 38 touchdowns last season were the most ever by an NFC passer and the third-most in NFL history behind Dan Marino's 48 in 1984 and 44 in 1986.

He said last month that he won't try to use last season to pressure the Packers into tearing up the five-year, $19 million contract he signed in 1994.

Before participating in a minicamp, he said he'd had a hectic offseason with appearances to receive some three dozen awards.

Lucas fired

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — John Lucas once joked that he demanded three titles when he took the job of rebuilding the Philadelphia 76ers because friends told him to ask for as many as he could get. Having already been dismissed as vice president of basketball operations and general manager, Lucas was fired as coach Monday, three weeks after the team completed the season with the second worst record in the NBA.

"We felt the best thing to do was move in a different direction," said Brad Greenberg, who last week was hired as general manager, replacing Lucas. Greenberg said he hoped to hire a new coach by the NBA draft June 26.

This season, Philadelphia was 18-64, better only than the expansion Vancouver Grizzlies. The 76ers set an NBA record for sustained futility by losing successively more games in each of the last six seasons.

Greenberg, a former Portland Trail Blazers executive, met with Lucas late last week. He said he decided to fire Lucas over the weekend.

"He did a fine job... but it's time to move on," Greenberg said. "This is a new organization right now."

Also dismissed were assistant coaches Ron Adams and Tom Thibodeau.

Lucas was 42-122 in his two seasons with Philadelphia. Asked if he thought Lucas was a good coach, Greenberg said, "I like John, and I think he did the best he could."

Lucas, 43, is a recovering alcohol and substance abuser who runs several counseling centers.

He did not return two calls to his suburban Philadelphia home seeking comment about his dismissal.

Lucas' future with the 76ers was in doubt even before the team's majority owners, Comcast Corp., bought the team from Harold Katz in March.

Katz hired Lucas in 1994 to try to revive a franchise that in 1985 was the NBA champion. When it became clear around January no turnaround was forthcoming, Katz not so discreetly began interviewing prospective coaching replacements.

Finally, Katz said Lucas would remain until the end of the season. Seven weeks later, Katz said the team for a reported $125 million to Comcast, Flyers owner Ed Snider and former 76ers conditioning coach Pat Croce.

Immediately, Croce said he would separate the roles of coach and general manager. Eventually, he said he would hire someone to run the basketball operations, and that person would decide whether Lucas would stay as coach.

Lucas came to the 76ers with a 94-49 record in his first NBA coaching stint with San Antonio in 1992-94. He also lost his job in San Antonio partly because of a change in ownership.

In Philadelphia, he didn't have David Robinson but the underachieving Shawn Bradley. He didn't have Dennis Rodman. In fact, he didn't have much of anything except for Clarence Weatherspoon and, last year, rookie Jerry Stackhouse.

Lucas felt he could make up for the lack of talent by giving second chances to talented but troubled players like Richard Dumas and Vernon Maxwell.

But the losses mounted. Lucas approved the November trade that sent Bradley to New Jersey for Derrick Coleman. That Bradley blossomed with the Nets while an overweight Coleman remained sidelined with a bad ankle helped speed Lucas' demise.

Greenberg, who helped induce P.J. Carlesimo to leave Seton Hall to coach the Trail Blazers, said he planned to consider college coaches, NBA assistants and former NBA coaches.

"I have a lot of names," he said. "I have a little hot list of names that would certainly be a lot shorter than that main list."

The team is retaining one of Lucas' assistants, former point guard Maurice Cheeks, who will help the 76ers prepare for the draft and possibly remain in the personnel department.

The 76ers expect to end up with one of the top picks in Saturday's NBA draft lottery, and Greenberg said he'd like to have the new coach on board in time to help decide on the selection.

Frazier injured in lawnmower mishap

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Former heavyweight champion Joe Frazier was hospitalized after cutting his toe with a lawn mower.

Frazier, 51, was listed in serious condition at Thomas Jefferson University Medical Center with a foot injury, a hospital spokeswoman said yesterday. She said other information about the fighter was withheld at the family's request.

His daughter, Natasha, said Frazier had just returned from a book tour and was cutting grass Sunday night at the property he owns in Chester County when he stumbled, apparently on a stone in the grass.

"It was only a slight injury. He's going to be able to do road work, and all of that wonderful stuff, but we're trying to make sure he gets some rest," she said. "He can leave the hospital whenever he wants to, but we took his clothes away to keep him there for awhile."

Frazier had 36 fights in his 11-year career and won the Olympic gold medal in 1964. But his most famous fight was March 8, 1971, when he defended his title with a unanimous decision over Muhammad Ali.

Ali, an undefeated former champion, had been exiled from the ring after he refused to register for the draft during the Vietnam War. Frazier scored a knockdown in the 15th round.

They fought twice more, with Ali winning both.

Frazier has been touring the country promoting his new book, "Smokin' Joe: the Autobiography," written with former boxing writer Phil Berger.

Pediatricians warn young athletes

CHICAGO (AP) — Thin, graceful gymnasts have too much in common with stocky, powerful wrestlers, say doctors who warn that many young athletes are endangering their health by succumbing to pressure to watch their weight.

Many athletes develop eating disorders and risk long-term health problems by resorting to overexercising, unhealthy dieting techniques, vomiting, fasting, taking diuretics or laxatives and other drugs, said a group of doctors in an article published yesterday.

"We have some evidence that in certain sports these practices are very prevalent," said Gregory Landry, a pediatrician at the University of Wisconsin Medical School and a consultant to the Committee on Sports Medicine and Fitness of the American Academy of Pediatrics.

The committee's report is published in this month's issue of Pediatrics, the academy's journal. The article was based on a series of earlier studies that the doctors said highlighted the problem.

For example, in one study of 257 high school wrestlers in Wisconsin, 36 percent had exhibited two or more behaviors related to bulimia.

The pressure for gymnasts to stay thin has traditionally been a problem, especially for girls and young women obsessed with the myth that their appeal and agility will wane as their bodies develop, said Kathy Kelly, a former gymnastics coach who now is an administrator for the U.S. women's gymnastics team.

"I don't think we point-blank told them in the past that if you do something stupid and try to shortcut this, if you have any eating disorder problems, you won't be successful in your sport, and that's the absolute worst thing," Kelly said.

Kelly said the situation has improved. This year's Olympic hopefuls have been counseled several times on proper nutrition and repeatedly examined by a doctor for nutrition-related problems, especially in their bones, she said.

But other athletes, such as wrestlers and youth football players, compete in divisions based on their weight. Players often need to shed pounds before an official weigh-in so they can avoid competing against bigger, stronger athletes.

Magic Johnson retires from the Lakers once again

By John Nadel
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Magic Johnson, saying he was really "ready to give it up" this time, retired from the NBA again. At age 36, chances are he won't change his mind.

Johnson, whose comeback began in triumph and ended in controversy, issued a statement yesterday announcing his retirement from the Los Angeles Lakers, saying it was time to return to his business interests.

"I was satisfied with my return to the NBA, although I would have hoped we would have gone further into the playoffs," he said in a statement issued by his agent, Lon Rosen. "But now, I am ready to give it up. It's time to move on.

"I am going out on my terms, something I couldn't say when I aborted a comeback in 1992."

Johnson, who turns 37 in August and would have been a free agent on July 1, first retired just before the start of the 1991-92 season after learning he had tested positive for the virus that causes AIDS.

The three-time league MVP decided to make a comeback before the 1992-93 season but quit again shortly before the start of the season when several players expressed concerns about playing with him.

After considering a comeback on several occasions since then, Johnson finally returned to the Lakers on Jan. 29, helping fuel a 20-12 surge that got the team into the playoffs as the Western Conference's fourth seed.

However, the Lakers were eliminated by the two-time defending NBA champion Houston Rockets 3-1 in a best-of-5 first-round playoff series.

Rosen said Johnson's decision to retire again "has nothing to do with his health."

The announcement by the player who led the Lakers to five NBA championships surprised the team, which was given no advance warning of the move.

"From the time he came to this team almost 17 years ago, Earvin Johnson has been a very special part of our lives," Lakers executive vice president of basketball operations Jerry West said in a statement.

"While this is a sad day, it's one that we always knew would come, and I would rather look at it remembering all the great moments he brought to this team and our fans. Obviously, we wish him the best in his future endeavors, and will look forward to having him around as he was the past 4 1/2 years before his comeback."

Johnson was around, all right. He coached the Lakers for the final 16 games of the 1993-94 season, going 5-11, and purchased a five percent ownership interest on June 27, 1994. He sold his stake back to owner Jerry Buss before returning as a player.

"We want what is best for Magic," Buss said in a statement. "We supported him in his return, and we support him again in his retirement. Despite the disappointment he and our organization felt during the playoffs, the special relationship Earvin continued to have with fans everywhere, myself included, had to make this past season a rewarding one for him."

Johnson played in 32 games for the Lakers this season, averaging 14.6 points, 6.9 assists and 5.7 rebounds.

After coming back, he was hampered by a calf injury that caused him to miss some playing time. While he was dominant at times, he looked his age at other times.

Nevertheless, he termed his comeback a success.

"The support generated throughout the league and from fans worldwide was tremendous and I want to thank everyone," Johnson said in his statement. "I also want to thank all Laker fans and the entire Laker organization, who has continually supported me...

"This team has a great future and I will be excited to sit courtside and root them on to a championship very soon. In announcing this decision now, I wanted to give the Lakers every advantage in planning their future and securing one of the much-talked about free agents this summer."

Only 10 days earlier, in a news conference after the Lakers were eliminated from the playoffs, Johnson reiterated his desire to play again next season.

"This is where I want to be, I'm a Laker," Johnson said at the time. "I'm looking at the Lakers as No. 1."

But he wasn't entirely happy with his role on the team, saying he hoped to see more action at point guard than power forward and hinting he would welcome offers from other teams.

"I don't know what I'm going to do," Johnson said following a team meeting on May 3. "As of today, I want to play next year. I can't go out like this, I don't want to. This is not my style, this is not what I came back for."

For whatever reason, that all changed in the ensuing 10 days. The 6-foot-9-inch Johnson leaves with the second-highest assist total in NBA history, behind Utah's John Stockton. In 906 regular-season games in his career, Johnson averaged 19.5 points, 7.2 rebounds and 11.2 assists.

Johnson said he will continue to direct his growing business interests, including his Magic Johnson Theatres and building-land development company, as well as playing exhibition games throughout the world.

Johnson's comeback was the talk of the NBA for a while as the Lakers won and appeared harmonious. In March, things started to go wrong.

Leading scorer Cedric Ceballos, whose playing time had diminished since Johnson's return, abruptly left the team for four days. Ceballos, who was off water skiing in Arizona, was stripped of his co-captaincy and returned after missing two games.

Then, on April 9, starting point guard Nick Van Exel bumped referee Ron Garretson in the fourth quarter of a game at Denver, drawing a seven-game suspension and $25,000 fine.

Johnson publicly criticized both his young teammates for their actions.

But five days later, Johnson himself bumped referee Scott Foster in the second quarter of a nationally televised game against Phoenix and was suspended for three games and fined $10,000. The Lakers entered the playoffs in chaos, and after losing the first game to the Rockets 87-83 on April 25, Johnson was critical of the way he was used by Lakers coach Del Harris.

Johnson scored 26 points in Game 2 on April 27 to lead the Lakers to a 104-94 victory but was mostly ineffective in Games 3 and 4.

In his final game, he had only eight points in 30 minutes and sat out much of the fourth quarter as the Lakers tried without success to catch the Rockets, who won a 102-94 decision.

After leading Michigan State to the NCAA championship as a sophomore in 1979, the Lakers made Johnson the first overall selection in the NBA draft.

He led the Lakers to five league championships in 12 seasons before his first retirement. The Lakers reached the NBA Finals in nine of those 12 years, the last time in 1991.

Following his initial retirement, he returned as a member of the U.S. Olympic basketball team, which cruised to a gold medal in Barcelona.

Bulls' Toni Kukoc wins NBA Sixth Man award

By Mike Nadel
Associated Press

CHICAGO — Toni Kukoc never wanted to be the sixth man for the Chicago Bulls. In fact, honor or no honor, he still doesn't.

"It's nice to win an award like this," Kukoc said yesterday after receiving the NBA Sixth Man award. "But I still want to be in the starting lineup."

Chicago Bulls coach Phil Jackson feels sparking the team off the bench is the ideal role for Kukoc, a fine offensive player who has defensive and rebounding deficiencies. The 6-foot-11 forward from Croatia said he never accepted the role and never will.

"Everything that Phil wants me to do, I will do," said Kukoc, who yesterday missed his third straight playoff game against the New York Knicks because of a severely sprained lower back. "But, myself, I will never agree and go, 'Yeah, I'm the sixth man. I can't go into the starting lineup.'

"Finally, by the end of the season, I did end up in the starting lineup. It gives me reason to believe that if I improve my game, one day I can be a starter."

Kukoc got into the starting lineup late in the season, first for an injured Scottie Pippen and then for a suspended Dennis Rodman. In his 20 starts, he averaged 17.8 points and the Bulls went 17-3. In 61 games as a reserve, Kukoc averaged 11.6 points.

The first Chicago player to win the award since its inception in 1983, Kukoc received 45 of a possible 113 votes from a panel of sports writers and broadcasters. Portland's Arvydas Sabonis was second with 24 votes and Jayson Williams of New Jersey finished third with 14.

Kukoc has become the fifth member of the Bulls honored since the end of their NBA record 72 win regular season. Jackson was chosen coach of the year, and Michael Jordan, Pippen and Rodman were named to the first All-Defensive team. Jordan is expected to be named MVP.

After starting all three games of the Bulls' first-round playoff sweep of the Miami Heat, Kukoc returned to the bench for the second-round series against the Knicks. Jackson wanted the more physical Rodman in the lineup.

Kukoc had only 13 points in the first two games against New York and then hurt his back in practice last Friday; he has been out since. Yesterday was the first day he spoke publicly about the injury.

"I tried to talk [trainer Chip Schaefer] and the coach into putting me in and trying to play, but it's not possible," said Kukoc, who took part in the team's morning shoot around but gave up hope of playing at least until Sunday. "I really feel much better than that first day. On a scale from 1 to 10, on that first day I felt 1, now I feel 5 1/2 or 6."

Jordan and Pippen also hurt their backs this postseason but kept playing, and Kukoc felt he was letting the team down.

"That's what I said, too," Kukoc said, "but my injury is obviously worse than theirs."

He was asked if he was worried that his shooting touch would suffer upon his return.

"It can't be worse than it was," said Kukoc, who shot 40 percent from 3-point range during the season but is just 1-for-24 in the playoffs. "So this can help me shoot better."

Denny McLain arraigned in Federal Court

DETROIT (AP) — The attorney for former Detroit Tigers pitcher Denny McLain said his client will show he is innocent of the alleged theft of $3 million from a pension fund. McLain, 52, was arraigned yesterday on federal charges of conspiracy, theft of pension plan money, mail fraud and money laundering. He was released on a $100,000 unsecured bond.

"Mr. McLain isn't going to respond anywhere except in the courtroom," said David DuMochel, McLain's attorney. "His position is that he didn't do anything wrong."

A former American League Most Valuable Player and Cy Young Award winner, McLain pitched for the Tigers from 1963-70, winning 31 games in 1968 and lead Detroit to a World Series title.

McLain, his former business partner and their financial adviser are accused of transferring more than $12 million of Peet Packing Co. pension plan money to Michigan National Bank, then converting $3 million of that for personal and company use.

DuMochel gave reporters at the federal courthouse a statement which included several assertions about McLain's role with Peet Packing. The statement, in part, said "Peet Packing was in serious financial difficulty long before Dennis McLain ever became involved... when the company began to run into serious cash flow problems removed himself from the payroll."

McLain's partner, Roger Smigiel, 44, of Rochester Hills and Jeffrey A. Egan, 35, of Bloomfield Hills pleaded innocent at their arraignment Monday to similar charges. They also are free on a $100,000 unsecured bond.

A pretrial conference for all three is scheduled for May 28. Smigiel's attorney, Thomas W. Cranmer, said his client's innocence will unfold in what he called a "complicated story." But Cranmer ended a meeting with reporters at the courthouse when he was asked why money went to the partners' personal use if they were trying to salvage the plant.

Walter Piszczatowski, Egan's attorney, predicted his client would be acquitted because there was no criminal intent.

Leading scorer Cedric Ceballos, whose playing time had diminished since Johnson's return, abruptly left the team for four days. Ceballos, who was off water skiing in Arizona, was stripped of his co-captaincy and returned after missing two games.

Then, on April 9, starting point guard Nick Van Exel bumped referee Ron Garretson in the fourth quarter of a game at Denver, drawing a seven-game suspension and $25,000 fine.

Johnson publicly criticized both his young teammates for their actions.

But five days later, Johnson himself bumped referee Scott Foster in the second quarter of a nationally televised game against Phoenix and was suspended for three games and fined $10,000. The Lakers entered the playoffs in chaos, and after losing the first game to the Rockets 87-83 on April 25, Johnson was critical of the way he was used by Lakers coach Del Harris.

Johnson scored 26 points in Game 2 on April 27 to lead the Lakers to a 104-94 victory but was mostly ineffective in Games 3 and 4.

In his final game, he had only eight points in 30 minutes and sat out much of the fourth quarter as the Lakers tried without success to catch the Rockets, who won a 102-94 decision.

After leading Michigan State to the NCAA championship as a sophomore in 1979, the Lakers made Johnson the first overall selection in the NBA draft.

He led the Lakers to five league championships in 12 seasons before his first retirement. The Lakers reached the NBA Finals in nine of those 12 years, the last time in 1991.

Following his initial retirement, he returned as a member of the U.S. Olympic basketball team, which cruised to a gold medal in Barcelona.

U.S. Attorney Saul A. Green announced the five-count indictment last week.

In it, he said McLain and Smigiel appointed themselves trustees of the Peet Packing retirement income plan two weeks after buying the company in January 1994. Egan formed two "shell corporations" in the meantime, Green said.

The $3 million was moved into and out of the shell corporations and returned to Peet Packing accounts, according to Green. The defendants two weeks later signed and back dated mortgage documents "in an attempt to make the money transfer look like a legitimate mortgage loan," Green said.

The money laundering charge carries a possible penalty of 20 years in prison and a fine of $500,000 or twice the value of the property involved, whichever is greater. The other counts are punishable by five years and $250,000 fines.

The pension fund is being administered by a board of trustees and is making payments to about 500 former employees. Mark Steckloff, an attorney for the pension fund, has said he plans to file a civil lawsuit seeking to recover money.

McLain and Smigiel have had several other brushes with the courts. McLain was sentenced to 23 years in federal prison for racketeering, extortion and drug charges, but was released in 1987 when an appeals court ruled he didn't get a fair trial. He served about two years.

GSS election winners announced

New president addresses day care issue for graduate students

By Michael Elliott
Collegian Staff

The Graduate Student Senate (GSS) has announced the winners of the spring election for the offices of president, vice president, treasurer and executive officer.

Deepika Marya, a doctoral candidate in the English department and current GSS treasurer, will serve the Senate next year as president.

Frances Young was elected vice president. Stefanie Ameres prevailed in the race for treasurer and Rosie Castañeda secured her spot as executive officer.

With the exception of the race for treasurer, none of the candidates were contested.

The official terms of office will begin June 1 and continue through academic year 1996-97. Marya, Young, Ameres and Castañeda ran in conjunction as an unofficial ticket.

The winning candidates received numerous endorsements from various Graduate Student Organizations and colleagues, including the India Students Association, coordinators of the Anti-Racism Coalition and the Forum on Developing Nations.

Marya campaigned on a number of issues, ranging from child care to affordable housing.

Additionally, Marya said that she intends to preserve "the autonomy of the Graduate Student Trust Fund (GSTF)."

The GSTF, amounting to approximately $320,000, finances graduate student activities and GSS operational expenses, similar to the undergraduate Student Activities Trust Fund.

"We want to maintain the strength of the fund," said Marya — consolidating its allocation powers in the GSS and not outside sources, such as the Administration.

Marya said that a primary concern for many graduate students is the accessibility of affordable child care. She added that the current facilities which exist at University are not adequate in meeting the demands of her constituents.

"The requests are for many, many more spaces than are available," Marya said.

Providing graduate students with low-cost, on-campus housing will, in addition, be on Marya's agenda for the fall.

Currently, space available at Lincoln Apartments and North Village, both managed by the University, does not offer a sufficient amount of inexpensive living options.

"There is clearly a need for more and more places," Marya said, "and prices need to be kept in check."

Elections were held last week, Tuesday through Thursday. Elections for leadership positions in the Graduate Employment Organization are to begin May 16.

Dole to increase focus on fall campaign

By John King
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Yielding to weeks of pressure from fellow Republicans, Bob Dole plans to step aside from day-to-day Senate management to focus full-time on his campaign against President Clinton, several GOP sources said yesterday.

Dole planned an announcement this afternoon, but there was some confusion late yesterday over exactly what he would announce. Two Republican sources said Dole planned to outright step down as Senate majority leader in a dramatic gesture to show his determination to focus on the fall campaign. Several other sources, however, said they did not believe Dole would formally relinquish his title as majority leader even as he ceded daily management of the Senate to Majority Whip Trent Lott and other GOP leadership deputies.

"The plan is to step down but I won't believe it until I see him speak the words," said one of the sources, all of whom spoke to The Associated Press on condition of anonymity.

Offering a somewhat different view, another prominent Republican said, "The idea is to disengage from the daily fights with Democrats in the Senate. You can come back and be leader when it suits your purpose, but otherwise get out of the muck and mire of the Senate."

To make his point, Dole was considering a quick trip out of Washington for a campaign rally tomorrow, with Illinois the most likely destination, according to sources.

Dole has steadfastly resisted advice that he step down — or at least aside — but has been pressured by campaign aides, senior GOP officials and several close associates in recent weeks as a series of polls has shown Clinton with a comfortable double-digit lead. Those advocating that Dole step down have told the senator one reason his campaign has languished is that Dole has been caught up in daily Senate battles over the minimum wage and other issues, wasting valuable time in framing a campaign against Clinton.

Several senior Dole campaign aides declined comment except to say that, as of yesterday evening, Dole had no public events on his schedule today. In the past, Dole has reacted angrily to press accounts quoting aides as saying he was about to relinquish his Senate duties.

AIDS committee warns of con artists

By Robin Estrin
Associated Press

BOSTON — Wearing her AIDS Action button and carrying a pledge sheet, the volunteer looked like the real thing. As she stood on a street corner soliciting donations for the AIDS pledge walk, she sounded quite convincing — even to the executive director of the group sponsoring the walk.

But the woman was pocketing the money.

The AIDS Action Committee warned the public yesterday to beware of con artists who are keeping the pledges for themselves.

Larry Kessler, executive director of AIDS Action, said contributors should donate money to people they know — friends, neighbors, co-workers. If you do give to a stranger, write a check to the AIDS Action Committee; never give cash.

Issuing a warning like this is a bit like cutting off your nose to spite your face, Kessler said. On the one hand, the organization doesn't want to dissuade people from soliciting donations to help fight AIDS. On the other hand, he said, the non-profit organization doesn't want to see people bilked out of their contributions.

"We don't want to discourage people from going around in their neighborhoods, but what happens, especially in the city, is you get people who find it's a great way to scam the public," Kessler said.

AIDS Action officials said it's hard to gauge how much money is being pocketed. It could be hundreds of dollars, possibly thousands.

Organizers expect the 40,000 participants in this year's 11th annual walk, scheduled for June 2, to raise $2.75 million for the organization and 29 other AIDS service groups in eastern Massachusetts.

Kessler said the con artists began to surface about four or five years ago, and the problem has gotten progressively worse. "They're trading on our good name," he said.

Kessler said his office has received complaints from people who were suspicious of solicitors seen all around Boston. The same problem has also occurred with the group's annual Dance-a-thon fund-raiser in November.

The con artists will often tell people that AIDS Action prefers cash donations even though the organization encourages checks, Kessler said. When confronted, the swindlers usually flee. Because AIDS Action pledge sheets are readily available in banks, supermarkets and other shops, scam artists can easily pose as legitimate.

"But just because they have a button on doesn't mean they are in any official capacity with us," Kessler said.

Kessler himself prodded a woman to move off a Boston street corner last year after finding her posing as an AIDS Action volunteer.

The cons are all but impossible to trace, he said.

Jan Platner, executive director of the Massachusetts Breast Cancer Coalition, said it would be difficult to find out if any similar schemes happened during their recent fund-raiser.

"I don't know how we would know unless someone came to complain," said Platner, whose organization raised about $90,000 on Saturday. "Besides warning people, there's not a heck of a lot you can do."

A spokeswoman for the state's Executive Office of Consumer Affairs said the office has fielded several calls from people who feared they had been conned.

"There's a breeding ground for abuse on the legitimate events," said Kim Hinden.

Officials with Project Bread, which sponsors the annual Walk for Hunger, said they were unaware of the problem.

About 40,000 walkers raised $2.8 million in the 20-mile walk on May 5.

'Coasters give ride of a lifetime as manufacturers break records

By Larry Gerber
Associated Press

VALENCIA, Calif. — Frightful new attractions are popping up across the country this summer, luring youngsters on high-speed joyrides and flouting the fundamental law of the land.

The law of gravity, that is.

A new roller coaster opening June 1 at Six Flags Magic Mountain is designed to break the 100 mph barrier for the first time. The ride, called Superman the Escape, propels riders from a standstill to 100 mph in seven seconds up a 415-foot tower, where they float in zero gravity until they drop backward.

That happens at 100 mph, too. Weightlessness lasts about 6.5 seconds, another record, the park says.

But Superman isn't the season's first superlative, and it won't be the last. Competition is pushing designers to make rides like Olympic athletes, faster, higher and — one hopes — stronger.

"We're in the roller coaster arms race," said Paul L. Ruben, whose job as North American editor of the trade magazine Park World has sent him aloft on 400 of the world's major coasters. "I've seen this occurring for 20 years or more. Every park likes to have bragging rights to the fastest, wildest ride for at least one year."

Las Vegas made its bid with The Big Shot and The High Roller, both atop the new 1,149-foot Stratosphere tower. The High Roller coaster tools around a track near the top of the tower.

Connoisseurs call the ride tame, the views spectacular.

Some people squeeze their eyes shut on The Big Shot. It shoots riders 160 feet up toward the top of tower at 45 mph, then drops them back to the 921-foot level.

"This is the most exciting thing I've ever done next to jumping out of an airplane," said Chuck Manuele, 64, of San Bruno. "The view is spectacular. I would recommend it to anybody."

Bruce Ratajczyk, 27, of Seattle pronounced the experience "awesome" and "just unbelievable" before rushing back for his third trip up yesterday.

Superman and Big Shot use new "Star Wars" military technology. Electromagnetic propulsion has already replaced chains and motors at rides in Mexico City, Kentucky Kingdom in Louisville and Wisconsin Dells. Other such rides are opening at Worlds of Fun in Kansas City, Mo.; Universal Studios Florida; and Dreamland, near Sydney, Australia, Ruben said.

Promoters in the hype-happy amusement business have been bragging about 100 mph coasters since the 1920s. But that was before radar guns and truth-in-advertising laws.

Actually, 82 mph is the record right now, claimed jointly by the Desperado at Buffalo Bill's Casino in Stateline, Nev., and the Steel Phantom in Kennywood, outside Pittsburgh.

The new tallest standup coaster, Mantis, debuted last week at Cedar Point in Sandusky, Ohio. It's the 12th at Cedar Point, which boasts the most roller coasters of any park in the world.

The world's loopiest roller coaster opened last year, Dragon Khan in Port Aventura near Barcelona, Spain, inverts riders eight times.

Superman is a "shuttle" coaster, meaning the cars cover the track forward, then backward. A new Japanese ride about to open at Fujiku Highlands in Yamanashi Prefecture is the highest and fastest of the "continuous-track" coasters — but because of the twists and turns, its speed will be nowhere near Superman's.

Providing the speed and the scares are electromagnet motors developed for the military, said Jim Blackie, head engineer at Magic Mountain, north of Los Angeles. The motors — white boxes spaced along the tracks — pull magnets on the cars, shooting them faster as they cross each one.

Scientists experimented with them to shoot satellites into orbit on tracks aiming skyward. On Superman, people are the payload. Blackie said he'll be getting the first crack at Superman. "I'm going to be the first person in the front seat of the first car," he said.

Scared? "Absolutely."

Mace release interrupts Farrakhan speech

BOSTON (AP) A police officer's can of Mace accidentally released in a crowded auditorium yesterday during a speech by Nation of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan, sending at least two people to the hospital.

The officer was standing in the back of William E. Reed Auditorium near Mohammed's Mosque No. 11 in Dorchester when, 90 minutes into Farrakhan's speech, the Mace can either caught on something or bumped something, Deputy Police Superintendent Bobbie Johnson said.

An unknown quantity of the chemical was sprayed. Johnson said the officer suffered a chemical burn from the Mace.

When people started complaining about burning eyes and throats, the hall was cleared and emergency medical technicians moved in to help. At least two people were taken to Boston City Hospital.

"During the middle of his conversation with the audience, a number of people started coughing, reeling over," one man told New England Cable News. "I stood up to see what was going on. I felt this burning sensation, this burning air went... through my throat into my lungs. It caused me to fold over. I had to go outside."

Farrakhan himself said from the podium that the discharge appeared to be accidental, but many people leaving the hall said they suspected the Mace had been sprayed deliberately to disrupt the often controversial leader's address.

"There's too many people coughing, and whatever that is, I don't wish to see you suffer. So what we'll do with your permission I will dismiss the meeting," Farrakhan told the audience of about 1,300.

The meeting was scheduled to resume at Mason Cathedral a few blocks away.

Farrakhan has been speaking to groups after returning from a tour of Africa and the Middle East, which included stops in Libya, Iraq, Iran and Sudan — all four on the U.S. government's list of nations that support terrorism.

Some news accounts said Muammar Gadhafi pledged $1 billion to Farrakhan's group, but after he left Libya, the country's government news agency said no donation was made. Farrakhan has said the money is coming and will be used to unleash black economic power around the United States.

Dwight Gooden pitches first no–hitter of career

By Tom Withers
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — Dwight Gooden, his career considered over after a drug ban last year and a rough start this season, pitched a no-hitter yesterday night as the New York Yankees defeated the Seattle Mariners 2-0.

Gooden (2-3), who returned to the major leagues after being banned for the final six weeks of the 1994 season and for all of 1995 after testing positive for cocaine, pitched the first no-hitter of his big league career.

He extended his hitless streak to 16 innings, struck out five and walked six. In his previous start, last Wednesday against Detroit, he got his first win in nearly two years. He called that victory "the sweetest of my career."

Mixing his fastball and curve, Gooden kept the Mariners off balance. The crowd was on its feet during the entire ninth, when Gooden zoomed in on the feat.

He walked leadoff Alex Rodriguez, then got help from first baseman Tino Martinez. The ex-Mariner, traded to New York last December, took Ken Griffey Jr.'s slow roller and dived to the bag just in time to beat Griffey.

Gooden then walked defending AL batting champion Edgar Martinez, and threw a wild pitch on his first pitch to former Yankee Jay Buhner.

Pitching coach Mel Stottlemyre paid a visit to the mound, and Gooden fanned Buhner on a 2-2 pitch.

Paul Sorrento then popped out on a 2-1 pitch. Even before the ball landed in the glove of shortstop Derek Jeter, Gooden raised both arms in the air in triumph.

Catcher Joe Girardi ran to the mound and mobbed Gooden. Fans threw debris from the upper deck. Gooden was carried toward the Yankee dugout on his teammates' shoulders as he gave them high-fives, then returned to the field to salute the fans.

Rockies 5, Reds 3

CINCINNATI (AP) — Dante Bichette's three-run homer, his first in 22 games, snapped Colorado's seven-game losing streak last night and gave the Rockies a 5-3 victory over the Cincinnati Reds. Bichette also had an RBI single and a sacrifice fly as the Rockies got their first victory on a road trip that started 0-7. It was the second-longest losing streak in franchise history. Colorado lost 13 in a row during its inaugural season of 1993.

Colorado's fourth win in 18 games at Riverfront Stadium came off Pete Schourek (4-2), who has been nearly unbeatable at home. The left-hander matched his career high with 10 strikeouts but faded in the eighth, losing for only the third time in his last 20 starts at home.

Schourek, making his second start since getting a cortisone shot in his tender pitching shoulder, walked Eric Young on four pitches with one out in the eighth and gave up a single to Ellis Burks. Bichette, who had not homered in 85 at-bats, hit his third of the season well over the left-field wall to snap a 2-all tie and send the Reds to their 11th loss in 18 games.

Steve Reed (1-1) allowed one unearned run over two innings to get the win in relief of Armando Reynoso, who allowed two runs over the first six. Bruce Ruffin pitched the ninth for his second save. Young, the Rockies' leadoff hitter, had two doubles and scored three runs to jump-start an offense batting just .194 on the road trip. The Rockies were no-hit by Florida's Al Leiter on Saturday night.

Young, who entered the game in a 1-for-20 slump, doubled and scored in each of his first two at-bats to give the Rockies only their fifth and sixth leads of the road trip. Young scored on Bichette's single in the first and on Bichette's sacrifice fly in the third.

Reynoso let the Reds tie both times. Eric Owens singled to open the bottom of the first and came around on Hal Morris' hit-and-run double just inside first base. Morris singled in the fourth, advanced on a balk and Barry Larkin's flyout, and scored on Eric Anthony's double just inside first base.

Reynoso helped himself by picking off Morris and Anthony off second base after their RBI doubles. The right-hander has picked off five runners this season and 25 since joining the Rockies in 1993.

Morris' sacrifice fly off Reed knocked in the Reds' final run in the eighth.

Notes: Umpires Tom Hallion and Jerry Crawford worked their first game at Riverfront Stadium since the season-opening series, when crew member John McSherry collapsed and died... Bichette did not go more than 15 games without a homer last season ... Reds right fielder Reggie Sanders expects to start a rehabilitation assignment Friday with Triple-A Indianapolis. Sanders has been disabled since April 22 with a tear around a disc in his lower back... Pitcher Jose Rijo, coming back from his second elbow operation in a year, plans to throw off a mound Friday.

Astros 6, Cubs 3

CHICAGO (AP) — Darryl Kile felt lucky to win his fifth straight decision.

"The whole game we battled, offensively and defensively," he said after yesterday's 6-3 win over the Chicago Cubs. "Every time I made a mistake, my defense got me out of trouble. If a run scored, the offense fought back. We played tough today."

Derek Bell hit a two-run homer as Houston stopped a four-game losing streak.

"That home run might be something that gets him going," Houston manager Terry Collins said.

Kile (5-2), whose winning streak has come entirely on the road, allowed three runs and six hits in eight innings. He walked six — one in each of his first six innings — and struck out five. "Darryl pitched good, but he wasn't as sharp as he can be," Collins said. "He's going to walk people, that's Darryl. The thing is, he's so confident he knows he can get the next guy out, he throws the same way with or without guys on base. He goes right after the next batter."

Kile can't explain the reason for his success on the road. "It's one of those fluky things," he said.

Todd Jones struck out the side for his seventh save.

Jaime Navarro (2-5) allowed six runs — five earned — and 10 hits in 6 2-3 innings. Chicago has lost seven of its last 10.

"Right now the black dot on this team is me," Navarro said. "I'm struggling right now. I've just got to have patience and see what happens. I've been through it like every pitcher."

With the score tied 3-3, Brian Hunter doubled leading off the seventh and scored when first baseman Mark Grace misplayed Craig Biggio's grounder for an error. Bell followed with his fifth homer, a drive onto Waveland Avenue behind left field.

James Mouton's RBI single put Houston ahead in the second, but Chicago tied it in the bottom half when Navarro grounded out. Luis Gonzalez scored from third as Leo Gomez got caught in a rundown between first and second but Scott Servais was thrown out by shortstop Ricky Gutierrez while Gomez still was in the rundown. Gutierrez' RBI single and Darryl Kile's sacrifice fly gave Houston a 3-1 lead in the fourth. Gomez singled in a run in the bottom half and tied the score with an RBI double in the sixth. Notes: Bell's homer was only the second allowed by Navarro in 66 innings this season... Gomez had been in an 0-for-11 slump.

Indians 5, Tigers 1

CLEVELAND (AP) — Charles Nagy became the American League's first six-game winner, leading the Cleveland Indians over the Detroit Tigers 5-1 last night.

Nagy (6-1) pitched a seven-hitter for his first complete game since last Sept. 13, striking out seven and walking two as he won his third straight decision. Six of the strikeouts came in the first four innings.

Manny Ramirez, Eddie Murray and Jim Thome homered off Greg Gohr (2-5) as Cleveland won for the 22nd time in 29 games. The Tigers lost for the 21st time in their last 25 games.

Ramirez' seventh homer put Cleveland ahead in the third. Two outs later, Kenny Lofton singled, stole second and scored on Julio Franco's double.

Cleveland made it 5-0 with a three-run fourth. Albert Belle singled, Murray followed with his 482nd career homer and Thome hit his fourth homer in four games, an opposite-field drive to left. Duane Singleton, called up earlier in the day from Class AAA Toledo, singled in Detroit's run with two outs in the fifth inning, his first RBI in the majors.

Notes: Nagy is 24-7 since August 1994... Belle has a 15-game hitting streak, matching his career high... Umpire Ted Hendry missed the game when his flight to Cleveland was delayed... Tigers third baseman Travis Fryman extended his errorless streak to 36 games... The Indians are 19-9 in games in which they have homered... The sellout crowd of 40,765 at Jacobs Field was the Indians' 65th in a row, tying the AL record set by the Baltimore Orioles between May 23, 1992, and April 20, 1993... The Indians are 99-35 (.739) in regular-season home games since Jacobs Field opened in 1994.

Marlins 11, Cardinals 5

MIAMI (AP) — Pinch-hitter Joe Orsulak's two-run single in the eighth inning broke a tie last night to help the Florida Marlins beat St. Louis 11-5, their franchise-record ninth consecutive victory.

The Marlins came from behind for the third consecutive game, scoring nine runs in their final two at-bats, including six in the eighth.

The winning streak is the longest in the majors this season. Florida won eight in a row last year.

Miami first baseman Greg Colbrunn gave away a run with an error, but he also had three RBIs, including a 475-foot solo homer to left field that sailed through a tunnel in the upper deck. It was his fourth homer of the year.

The game drew a crowd of 16,070. Despite the Marlins' winning streak, their attendance has declined in each of the past three games.

There were no confrontations or hit batsmen in the game, although one pitch sailed close to Gary Sheffield's head. The dugouts emptied in the sixth inning Monday night when Andy Benes hit the Marlins' Sheffield with a pitch.

With the score 5-5 and one out in the eighth, Terry Pendleton walked against Jeff Parrett (2-2) and took second on a wild pitch. Charles Johnson was intentionally walked, and Russ Morman walked to load the bases.

Orsulak went to the plate batting .170 and was just 1-for-14 as a pinch hitter. But with the infield drawn in, he singled up the middle against Rick Honeycutt.

Devon White followed with an RBI double, his third two-base hit of the game. Alex Arias drove in a run with a single, and two more runs scored on groundouts.

Terry Mathews (1-0) worked one inning and earned the victory despite giving up a game-tying homer to Ray Lankford.

Lankford also had an RBI triple. Teammate Ozzie Smith singled, scored and doubled home a run in just his fifth start of the year. Both starters went six innings. Florida rookie Kurt Miller, making his second start of the season, allowed six hits and three earned runs, while Donovan Osborne allowed six hits and two runs.

Notes: The Cardinals activated third baseman Gary Gaetti from the 15-day disabled list and optioned right-hander Rich Batchelor to Triple-A Louisville. Gaetti had been sidelined with a broken little left toe... Smith tied former Cardinals great Red Schoendienst for 118th place on baseball's career list with 1,223 runs scored... Sheffield, who has been hit on the left arm three times during the Marlins' homestand, will be fitted with a customized brace similar to the one worn by Barry Bonds... The game was the seventh in the majors for Miller, who spent time with the Marlins in 1994, but none of the Cardinals had faced him before... White became the third Florida player to hit three doubles in a nine-inning game.

Phillies 7, Giants 0

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Curt Schilling, in his first major-league start since last July, allowed five hits and struck out 10 over seven innings and the Philadelphia Phillies beat the San Francisco Giants 7-0 yesterday night.

Schilling (1-0), who had shoulder surgery in August, looked like the pitcher who had won 39 games for Philadelphia over the last four seasons.

With a fastball in the 90 mph range, the right-hander walked three, one intentional. He was taken out after throwing 101 pitches.

San Francisco, which finished with six hits, had its winning streak ended at four games.

Pete Incaviglia went 2-for-4, including his sixth homer of the season, and drove in three runs as the Phillies, who scored only 10 runs in their previous four games, tied a season high with six runs in the fifth.

The Phillies got their first hit off starter Osvaldo Fernandez (3-2) in the fourth, a two-out solo homer by Incaviglia. Philadelphia batted around in the fifth, chasing Fernandez. Kevin Jordan knocked in two runs with a double after first baseman Mark Carreon tried unsuccessfully to get the runner at third on Schilling's sacrifice bunt.

Incaviglia and rookie Glenn Murray followed with two-run singles and the Phillies had a 7-0 lead.

Schilling walked Stan Javier on five pitches to open the game and, after striking out Robby Thompson, walked Barry Bonds. But he struck out Matt Williams and Carreon to end the San Francisco threat.

The Giants came the closest to scoring in the seventh, when they had runners on second and third with two outs. Schilling ended the inning by striking out Thompson for the third time.

Notes: San Francisco shortstop Kim Batiste, assigned to Triple A Phoenix before Monday night's game, decided to accept the assignment... Bonds ended his career-high hitting streak at 14 games, going 0-for-1 with two walks. Mel Hall pinch hit for Bonds in the eighth... Philadelphia's Ricky Bottalico hasn't pitched in a save situation since May 3... The Phillies, who start a 10-game road trip Thursday, have enjoyed playing away from the Vet this season. They are 12-7 on the road and 6-11 at home... Incaviglia batted cleanup, and manager Jim Fregosi indicated he would stay there for awhile. "We needed somebody to drive the ball for us because we just haven't had any offense," Fregosi said... The Giants, who finish an eight-game road trip Wednesday, return home Friday for a nine-game homestand. San Francisco has played the fewest home games (15) in the National League.

Braves 7, Pirates 3

ATLANTA (AP) — John Smoltz, already the only seven-game winner in the majors, made it eight in a row yesterday night as the Atlanta Braves routed Pittsburgh 7-3, their ninth victory in 10 games. Fred McGriff and Javy Lopez both homered and drove in three runs for the Braves, who in addition to getting their usual stellar pitching have scored 70 runs during the 10-game streak.

Lopez had a career-high four hits for the second time in less than a week, equaling the mark he set last Friday at Philadelphia. Smoltz (8-1), moving another step closer to the first 20-win season of his career, has won eight straight decisions since losing his opening start. He allowed six hits over seven innings, striking out seven and walking two.

The Braves have averaged more than six runs per game in Smoltz's wins, but he usually has pitched well enough to win without that much offensive support. He started the day with the league's fourth-best ERA, 2.28.

After a run-scoring groundout by Pirates starter Paul Wagner (4-4) gave Pittsburgh a 1-0 lead in the third, Atlanta went ahead for good in the fourth with a two-out rally. McGriff and David Justice singled, Ryan Klesko walked and Lopez hit a two-run single to left.

The Braves broke it open the next inning. Marquis Grissom and Mark Lemke led off with singles and, after a groundout, McGriff hit his ninth homer of the year, a three-run drive over the center-field wall.

Atlanta knocked out Wagner in the sixth. Lopez led off with a homer and Grissom added an RBI single before the inning was over. Wagner, who began the season 3-0, lost for the fourth time in five starts, giving up 10 hits in only 5 1-3 innings.

The Pirates are on a similar plunge, having lost a season-high six straight and eight of their last nine.

Smoltz, who had retired the side in order in four of the first six innings and allowed just three hits, seemed to tire in the seventh. He gave up three hits and a walk, with two runs scoring on Jacob Brumfield's sacrifice fly and Al Martin's single.

Notes: The Pirates have struggled with runners in scoring position in their last nine games, going 13-of-66 (.197). They did break an 0-for-14 streak on Jason Kendall's infield single in the seventh... Lemke has seven hits in the past two games, following up a four-hit performance Monday by going 3-of-5... Grissom has hit safely in 13 of the past 14 games... Smoltz came in with a 4-8 record against the Pirates.

Harnisch suspended

NEW YORK (AP) — Pitcher Pete Harnisch of the New York Mets was suspended for eight games and coach Steve Swisher suspended for two games by National League president Leonard Coleman today for their parts in the brawl between the Mets and Chicago Cubs on Saturday.

Harnish appealed the suspension and remains eligible to play pending a hearing.

Swisher's suspension is effective immediately. Both the pitcher and coach also were fined undisclosed amounts. Fines also were imposed on John Franco, Paul Byrd, Bias Minor and Todd Hundley of the Mets and Scott Servais, Turk Wendell, Scott Bullett, Lee Gomez and Terry Adams of the Cubs.

The affair began when Hundley, batting in the first inning, was knocked down by Chicago pitcher Kevin Foster. When Foster came to bat, he was hit by a pitch thrown by Harnisch. When Harnisch came up in the fifth inning, Adams threw a pitch behind him. Harnisch and Servais then exchanged words and the Mets pitcher swung at the Chicago catcher, touching off a 16-minute brawl.

teams, they won just three of them; the 4–2 victory over UMass and a pair of wins over Notre Dame in the finals of the Big East tournament. UConn lost two this year to Princeton, and two of three to UMass, while not playing BU.

UConn makes its seventh NCAA appearance this year, most of any team in the northeast region, and appeared in the 1993 College World Series.

Boston University (34–8):

The Terriers are making their first–ever NCAA appearance this year, relying on the strong arm of senior pitcher Audrey West. In addition to not playing in any NCAA Tournament games, BU has not even played any games against NCAA Tournament selections this year, playing a non–conference schedule that is softer than a case of Charmin.

The Terriers will not be making their Totman Field debut this weekend though as they beat UMass 10–5 on April 2, 1994 in the only meeting ever between the schools. BU will be playing its first ever contests against UConn and Princeton this weekend.

Regardless of her team's soft schedule, West is a bonafide threat on the mound. The Oceanside, Calif. native boasts a 0.48 ERA to lead the nation, accompanying her solid 25–3 record. West has fanned 324 batters in 203.2 innings of work on the hill, a stupendous ratio. The senior has won her last 13 decisions.

Senior Dawn MacMillan holds team highs with five homers and 27 RBIs and a .537 slugging percentage, while junior Bridget Callaghan is tops on the Terrier squad with a .323 batting average.

Beth Iwamoto boasts a .996 fielding percentage at first base, making just one error with 235 putouts and 15 assists on the year.

BOSTON UNIVERSITY SPORTS INFORMATION
Beth Iwamoto is batting .310 and has driven in 26 RBI along with making only one error in 251 chances at first base (a .996 fielding percentage) for the BU Terriers.

Groff, Jones only drivers from CART

By Steve Herman
Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — The politics of Indy racing? Forget it. Mike Groff and Davy Jones, the only drivers in the May 26 Indianapolis 500 with teams also competing at Michigan, just want to drive. Sponsorship commitments are keeping both Walker Racing and Team Gallcs at Indianapolis, as well as the U.S. 500 at Michigan International Speedway. Everyone else in Championship Auto Racing Teams is honoring the Indy boycott.

"As a race car driver, we're all in this to race. When a good opportunity knocks, you have to go for it," said Groff, who qualified for his third start at Indianapolis.

"I feel very fortunate to have the opportunity to race with a team like Derrick Walker's. It's a first-class operation, and to be at the world's greatest race is a great situation," he said. Walker is fielding cars for Groff in Indianapolis and Robby Gordon in Michigan. Rick Galles has Jones at Indy and rookie Eddie Lawson at the U.S. 500.

Galles said his primary sponsor, Kokomo-based Delco Electronics, didn't demand he field an entry at Indy, but "they indicated it wouldn't hurt. They are going to have 6,000 people at the race and they have been a terrific sponsor, so if I can do something to help them, I will."

Walker's main sponsor is Valvoline, which ended its long association as fuel supplier for the Speedway earlier this year but still is a sponsor of the ABC telecast of the race.

"I know there's some different scenarios in the mix here this year," Groff said. "It's not all cut and dried, and I think there's a lot of questions on how things are going to come off. But I feel pretty confident with the package I have."

Groff's first start at Indy was in 1991, when he finished 24th. Driving for Walker in 1992, he qualified a backup car but gave up his seat to Scott Goodyear, the primary Walker driver, after Goodyear was bumped from the lineup.

Goodyear, in the car Groff qualified, then finished second to Al Unser Jr. by 43-thousandths of a second, the closest margin in Indy history.

The next year, he practiced briefly in a Rahal-Hogan car when Bobby Rahal was ill, and in 1994 he drove in the race as Rahal's teammate and finished 31st.

Jones, whose best finish was seventh in 1989, qualified on the outside of the front row next to pole-starter Scott Brayton and rookie Tony Stewart. Until this year, Jones had never qualified better than 28th in four previous races.

Muster in top form, drills Wiltschnig in first round

By Victor Simpson
Associated Press

ROME — Thomas Muster served up a broadside at his American rivals, accusing them of ducking clay court tournaments and saying Europeans were stupid for putting up with it.

After taking a week off from tennis, the world's No. 2-ranked player appeared in top form yesterday at the Italian Open.

The top-seeded Muster all but humiliated a fellow Austrian in a first-round match, rolling to a 6-3, 6-0 victory over Herbert Wiltschnig, the lowest ranked player in the tournament at No. 306, in just over an hour.

Then Muster fired blasts at the top Americans for failing to enter most of the European clay court tournaments, warming up to the subject when asked about prospects for the French Open, the only Grand Slam tournament played on clay.

Muster's rivalry with such American stars as Pete Sampras and Andre Agassi came to the forefront after the Austrian moved up to the No. 1 spot for several weeks this year. The Americans suggested he didn't deserve the top ranking because 11 of his 12 tournament victories last year came on clay.

Sampras, currently ranked No. 1, and Michael Chang were both last-minute withdrawals from the Italian Open. Sampras cited the recent death of his coach, Tim Gullikson, and Chang cited a chest muscle injury. Agassi pulled out of last week's German Open because of an injury, then turned down a wild-card invitation to play in Rome.

Minutewomen host Huskies in NCAA regional

By Fred Hurlbrink, Jr.
Collegian Staff

This weekend the Massachusetts softball team's season could come to an unsatisfying end, or it could start all over again.

The Minutewomen are on the verge of reaching the College World Series for the first time since 1992, and the only thing standing in their way — an NCAA regional — is right in their own backyard. UMass's Totman Field will be the site for this year's regional playoffs where the Minutewomen will occupy the No. 2 seed.

UMass, who played its way into the tournament by winning a pair of games against Northeast Conference Champion Marist College, will face arch rival Connecticut, the third seed in its first round match-up.

The Minutewomen and Huskies have crossed paths three times already this season. UMass took the first two in the series, but dropped the second game of a home double header. That UConn conquest halted the Minutewomen's streak of 23 games without a loss.

The first victory came at the NSCA Lead-Off Classic as Danielle Henderson won her first collegiate game in impressive fashion, keeping the Huskies off the scoreboard throughout, showing signs of things to come. Henderson's roommate Ashlie Hayes led the Minutewoman offense with a 2-for-3, three RBI effort as UMass cruised, 5-0.

Massachusetts' second win against the Huskies was just plain ugly. Henderson went the distance, but was not impressive allowing four walks and eight hits. UConn crossed the plate seven times, but only scored three earned runs. The balanced Minutewoman attack posted a six-run third inning to support their big gun and never fell behind, plating pinch runner Katie Kenderski in the bottom of the seventh on a wild pitch to win 8-7.

In the night cap, Liz Wagner pitched well, but got no help as she suffered from three outfield errors and the Huskies held on for a 4-2 victory.

Since that loss to Connecticut, the Minutewomen have only dropped two contests, both to the No. 24 Princeton Tigers who are the top seed in this weekend's regional action. The UMass offense was completely held in check in the double dip — a rare occurrence this spring.

Heating up just in time for Massachusetts' Atlantic 10 conference slate, Sam Cardenas has upped her average from the .220s to .349, having hit in 23 of her last 25 games. Cardenas leads the Minutewomen with 44 RBI, but despite her tremendous second-half performance, she was left off the All-Conference team.

Kim Gutridge was a Minutewoman who wasn't lacking attention from the A-10 this season. Massachusetts' first sacker was named the conference's Player of the Year after being named the Rookie of the Year last spring. The sophomore from La Mirada, Calif. hit .359 with 32 RBIs playing a very solid first base.

On the other hand, two UMass offensive forces that got practically no attention at all on the campaign were leftfielder Tracey Osier and backstop Kelly Buckley. Osier, hitting at the bottom of the order, was one of the team's leading hitters all season (.350) and broke her own team stolen base record. She has 23 on the year.

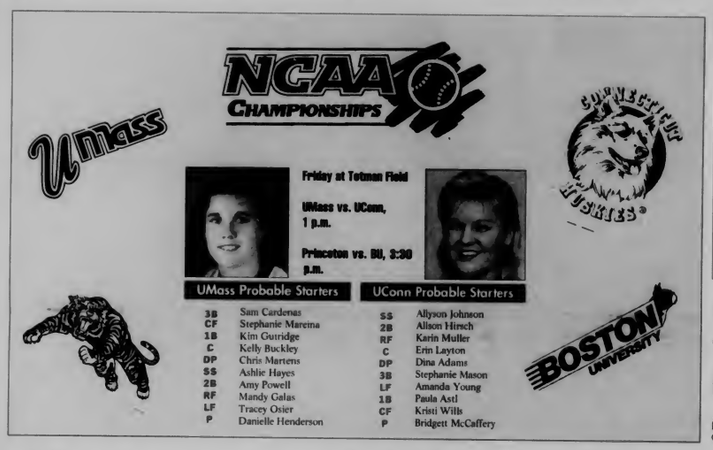
Buckley has been the clean-up hitter for the Minutewomen for most of the season, and has done her share of cleaning the base paths, driving in 31 runs while hitting at a .338 clip.

The two Minutewomen on the mound have been even more spectacular than their aluminum-wielding teammates. Henderson (22-6) was the A-10's top rookie and one of the nation's best pitchers recording the 13th best ERA (0.91) in the country, third among freshmen.

Wagner (14-7), bothered by a sore back, is questionable for the tournament but contributed mightily during the season posting a 1.08 ERA, putting her 22nd nationally. The junior from Sidney, N.Y. was the A-10's Pitcher of the Year.

CONNECTICUT ATHLETIC COMMUNICATIONS

The Massachusetts softball team faces off against Bridgett McCaffery (22-12, 1.01 ERA) and the UConn Huskies in the NCAAs starting Friday at Totman Field.



Minutemen await NCAA seedings

By Casey Kane
Collegian Staff

For the second straight year the Massachusetts baseball team will take its talent on the road in search of post-season glory.

By virtue of winning the Atlantic 10 Tournament, the Minutemen receive an automatic bid to the 1996 NCAA Regionals. UMass defeated Virginia Tech in two games (5-2 and 8-2) to take the A-10 crown.

With the addition of VaTech, along with three other schools to the Atlantic 10, the conference received an automatic bid into the NCAAs.

Prior to this season, the winner of the league tournament was left to compete in a play-in game for the chance to continue its season.

The NCAA announced the sites for the Regionals on Monday. Ron Maestri, chairman of the Division I baseball committee, listed the sites selected by the NCAA committee in a formal announcement in Overland Park, Kan.

Clemson University in Clemson, S.C., will be the site of the Atlantic Regional; the University of Texas will host the Central I Regional in Austin; Texas Tech in Lubbock, Texas, will host the Central II Regional; and the East Regional will be played at the University of Florida in Gainesville.

The West Regional will be played in Wichita, Kan. at Wichita State; the South I Regional will be hosted by the University of Alabama in Tuscaloosa; Louisiana State will be the site of the South II Regional; and Stanford University in Stanford, Calif. will host the West Regional.

The NCAAs will feature a 48-team field and the first-round pairings will be revealed in a live half-hour telecast on ESPN at 3 p.m. on Monday, May 20. The Regionals will begin May 25 and continue through May 26.

Tough competition ahead for UMass in tournament

By Leigh Torbin
Collegian Staff

They might be the fan favorites, but the Massachusetts Minutewomen will not be the sole team gracing Totman Field this weekend. UMass, the second seed in the region, will be accompanied by top-seeded Princeton, third-seeded Connecticut and fourth-seeded Boston University.

All four teams carry exceptional pitching staffs that are amongst the best in the nation. UMass, UConn and Princeton have all faced each other at least two times this year, all but one of the seven games played between the schools being settled by two runs or less.

The Terriers are the wildcard in the mix. While Princeton, UConn and UMass regularly play multiple times on an annual basis, BU has never faced either Princeton or UConn, while playing just one game against the Minutewomen, that coming on April 2, 1994.

Sam Cardenas

The following are capsule looks at UMass' three opponents:

No. 24 Princeton (44-6-1)

The Tigers enter this weekend's play as the only team in the bracket currently ranked in the NSCA Coaches' poll. From the northeast region, only Princeton and UMass have cracked the national rankings this year.

Princeton's run to the poll was punctuated by an NCAA record 37-game winning streak that spanned from March 20 to April 28. After falling 3-1 to the Minutewomen on March 3, the Tigers did not lose again until dropping a 3-1 decision at Brown, over a month and a half later.

The spell-binding array of off-speed breaking balls thrown by junior Maureen Davies have put the Tigers in the region's top spot. Davies has posted a 25-3 record this year, to accompany a 0.95 ERA, 14th best in the nation. Freshman Lynn Miller has come on strong of late for Princeton, posting an 11-2 mark with a 1.09 ERA, 23rd in the nation.

With Davies and Miller, winner of 11 in a row, Princeton joins UMass as the only schools to have two pitchers in the top 25 of the national ERA leaders.

There is no shortage of offensive production to accompany the strong pitching either. Junior Tara Christie has started all of Princeton's 51 games this year at shortstop and posted a .420 batting average, with 26 stolen bases.

Junior Mandy Pfeiffer holds team highs with four home runs and 35 RBI, with a .326 batting average.

A 1995 College World Series participant, the Tigers took two of three from UMass this season, all nailbiters. UMass took a 3-1 decision at of the NSCA Lead-Off Classic on March 3 in Columbus, Georgia, but fell 1-0 and 4-2 in a doubleheader on May 7 at Totman Field. UConn also was swept at home by Princeton this year, falling 2-0 and 5-4, while the Tigers and Terriers have never played.

Connecticut (36-20):

As evidenced by a nip-and-tuck doubleheader earlier this year, predicting a winner for a match-up between UConn and UMass is easier than pulling off a Five-card Charlie at a Foxwoods blackjack table.

The Minutewomen squeaked out an 8-7 win in the opener when Katie Kenderski scored on a wild pitch with two-out in the bottom of the seventh, while UConn edged UMass 4-2 in a close nightcap.

UConn's 36-20 record is deceiving as the team played 15 games against NCAA qualifying teams, most of any team in its bracket.

The brilliant pitching of junior Bridgett McCaffery has been a major factor in their success. McCaffery has thrown 221.1 of the team's 382.2 innings this year, with a 22-12 record and a 1.01 ERA. McCaffery has not enjoyed success against UMass this year though, allowing 10 runs, five earned in 8.1 innings of work with four strikeouts.

Junior Karin Muller has been crushing the ball this year, knocking eight homers and driving in a school-record 47 runs, while batting at a .324 clip. Freshman Allyson Johnson has been a mainstay at shortstop, starting every game and batting .350.

While the Huskies played 15 games against NCAA qualifying

Athletes are human; Harris–Lewis unbelievable

Around the Horn with Candice Flemming

It's about time that people stop ripping athletes who get into drug trouble. I'm not saying that I condone drug use, but athletes are human, they do make mistakes like the rest of us. But as soon as some athlete or manager is arrested for drug possession or accused of using drugs, people are quick to judge them.

It's come up again recently with the arrest of Butch Hobson. As soon as the story broke about Hobson, people everywhere wasted no time ripping into his character. "He used drugs? He's nothing but a loser, a bad person." But what people fail to realize is that even good people make bad choices.

According to a lot of people, Hobson is a stand-up guy. When he was the manager of the Red Sox, he was well- loved by his players. He's still innocent until proven guilty but no matter what happens, whether or not he does do drugs, his character should remain intact.

• While I'm on the subject, why in the world is Donna- Harris Lewis suing now, after nearly three years? What's the point? All it's going to do is create more negative publicity about a man who did so much for the Boston community. If more drug allegations surface, it shouldn't taint the memory of a great man.

• Hey, did you hear? Magic Johnson is retiring again. What is this, the 1,000th time? Sorry, but it's lost all of its magic.

• Isn't it funny how whenever the Red Sox sign or trade for a proven All-Star or big-name player, they become a huge bust as soon as they step into the Boston uniform? Matt Young, Jack Clark, Mark Whiten and now Heathcliff Slocumb are just a few that come to my mind.

• Some people still get more out of a college career than just basketball. With the announcement this week from Wake Forest junior Tim Duncan, there's still hope that high school players will actually attempt to major in something other than the NBA.

• What are Louisville's Jason Osbourne and LSU's Randy Livingston, among others, thinking entering the NBA draft? Osbourne never even played last year because he was academically ineligible and now he thinks that the year off has prepared him for the NBA? I won't be surprised if he doesn't even get drafted.

Livingston is another story.

This junior was never able to play a full year of college ball because of numerous knee injuries. He came out of high school as one of the best point guards in the country, some even thought he was better than Jason Kidd. But the injuries and the time away from the game have hindered his ability. Who knows, he might be an OK player in the NBA if drafted, but one full year of college experience couldn't hurt. It would give NBA teams a chance to see if he's even half the player he used to be.

I have a problem with Kobe Bryant and Jermaine O'Neal entering the draft as well. They're both great players but they're not ready for the rigors of the NBA. Last year's high schooler Kevin Garnett started a trend that doesn't seem to have an end in sight, and that's sad.

• It's NBA playoff time and the Bulls are the favorite to win the title once again. The only team that seems to pose a threat to Chicago is the Orlando Magic, who the Bulls will face in the Eastern Conference Finals.

The Bulls will have a hard time dealing with Shaquille O'Neal in the paint as Luc Longley just won't cut it. But besides the center position, Chicago has the advantage. The foursome of

THE YEAR IN SPORTS
The 1995-96 school year provided students, alumni and the commonwealth it represents plenty to cheer about. Overall the University of Massachusetts squads combined for two regular season titles, 10 conference tournament championships and two Final Four appearances, those by the men's basketketball team and the men's water polo team. The University also hosted the Women's Volleyball National Championship in December.
Of the all the losses there was one that doesn't show up in the stat sheet, but hurts more than all of them combined. The untimely death of water polo and swimming standout Greg Menton shocked everyone on campus and made us all realize that is more to sports than just victories and defeats. He may not be standing with us now, but spiritually he will be a part of us forever.
This academic year made us jump for joy, as well as brought tears to our eyes. Here's a chance to take one final trip through those memories in the 1995-1996 Collegian Year In Sports.

Minutemen made '95-'96 a season to remember

By Justin C. Smith
Collegian Sports

One historic year.

The year was shared by every member of the Massachusetts men's basketball team as it rolled to a 33-2 record, a record fifth straight Atlantic 10 tournament title and a school first trip to the final Four.

The 1995-96 season will be remembered as the year Marcus Camby won as much National Player of the Year hardware as there are Craftsman tools in the Do-It-Yourself department at Sears. But almost every Minutemen down the roster provided a classic moment that will be forever etched in the memories of each UMass fan.

Maybe the most important game of the season for the Minutemen didn't show up in the actual results for the season. Just two weeks before their showdown with pre- season number Kentucky, John Calipari's squad ran into a buzz saw known as the Converse All-Stars. Former Minuteman Derek Kellogg came back to his old stomping grounds and taught his old teammates a valuable lesson. No matter how talented you are, you can't afford to take anyone lightly.

The loss to the exhibition squad turned the team's question marks from whispers in an ear into screams through a megaphone. Camby shrugged after the Converse loss, "If I lose to these guys, then what are we going to do against Kentucky."

It anyone answered that question with, "Win", then they would have been resounding laughter in the room, but they also would have been correct. Camby showed his Player of the Year form against the Wildcats with a 32- point, nine - rebound, five- block performance in wrestling Rick Pitino's Cats into submission, 92-82 in the season opener.

UMass followed that with a win at the Franklin National Bank Classic tournament over Maryland and Florida before two of the more anticipated match up of the year.

Wake Forest, at that point in the season ranked 10th in the country, came to Amherst. That made the Demon Deacons the highest ranked team ever to play the Minutemen on campus. Doubling the excitement of the game was the match up of Camby and Wake's high-profile center, 6-foot-10 Tim Duncan, a pre season All-America selection. The nationally broadcast game was the showcase for the two unenviable NBA lottery picks.

The Minutemen prevailed 80-46 as Camby shut down his counterpart, holding Duncan to a measly 4-for-18 shooting and just nine points.

Just three days later John Calipari's squad took part in the first, in what promises to be a long line of match ups with Boston College, in the Commonwealth Classic. The game was held in the state capital, pitting the State U. against the city's media darling at the FleetCenter.

Trailing by 13 late in the first half, the Minutemen used a 17-1 run that bridged the first and second halves to take their first lead. Down the stretch with the game hanging it was senior co-captain Donta Bright that hit a three and a driving lay- up to pull out the victory for UMass.

As Christmas break approached, UMass participated in the Jimmy V. Classic, where it first watched A-10 sister school Temple knock off then top ranked Kansas. The Owls had given UMass a wondrous X-mas present, a shot at the top spot in the polls. They received the gift with gratitude and beat Georgia Tech and freshman phenom Stephon Marbury, to lay claim to No. 1.

The Maui Classic was next for the Minutemen and the next hurdle for the UMass squad was in the semifinals, as Marcus Camby went down with a leg injury in the first two minutes of the game and was unable to return. Tyrone Weeks stepped off the bench dropping home 16 points, as UMass moved on to the finals where it disposed of eventual national runner- up Syracuse, to enter 1996 still unbeaten.

Calipari said that if his team went 7-0 in their 11 non- conference games he would be happy, entering game 11 against Memphis his team was perfect and top- in the country. It kept on rolling, disposing of the third-ranked Tigers 63-61 in the Atlantic 10/Conference USA challenge.

Every great season usually comes when a team has to endure an unexpected happening and it binds it closer than ever. Jan 14 was the day that made the team came together like as it superstar Camby collapsed without warning just before taking the court against St. Bonaventure. The game against the Bonnies was played without its center in their coach, but Weeks again came up big for the Minutemen as UMass pressed on without its marquee player.

Bright scored his season high and Carmelo Travieso caught fire form behind the three- point arc, putting up his two biggest point totals of the season while their friend and teammate was still sidelined. And even though there were never any answers to the mysterious collapse the victories continued to pile up for the Minutemen.

Camby's return didn't rock the UMass boat a bit as his return Jan 27, ironically against the Bonnies, was a 25-point blowout where he blocked nine shots, tying a school record. Not only was he back, he was as good as ever. The unbeaten streak continued even with a huge scare at Xavier and a stiff test at Virginia Tech, until the perennial thorn in the Minutemen's side finally burst UMass' bubble.

Mike Jarvis and the George Washington Colonials came to the William D. Mullins Center for the second straight year and beat UMass, this time 86-76, ending the dreams of a perfect season for the Minutemen. They were now 26-1 and now sights could be set on the ultimate goal, a National Championship.

Calipari's crew finished the regular season with only the GW blemish, and breezed through the A-10 tournament finally ending its four game losing streak to Colonials and beat Temple for the fourth straight year in the finals as UMass entered Senior co-captain Dana Dingle surpassed Lou Roe this year for most game played by a Minuteman. In his career he played 136 games in a UMass uniform.

Senior co-captain Donta Bright set the A-10 record for consecutive free throws made with 40 during this season.

Camby taking it to the next level

By Candice Flemming
Collegian Sports

He entered Massachusetts three years ago with high expectations. He leaves now with even higher ones.

As he walked off the court after UMass' season-ending loss to Kentucky for the final time in a Minuteman uniform, Marcus Camby had tears in his eyes. He had done all he could, carrying UMass on his back throughout the entire 1995-96 season. But his dreams of capturing the National Championship came up short.

Now, his dreams are even loftier.

Instead of being the No. 1 overall recruit, he wants to be the No. 1 overall selection in the 1996 NBA draft. Instead of being the A-10 Freshman of the Year and A-10 Newcomer of the Year, he wants to be the NBA Rookie of the Year. Instead of helping to create a powerhouse on the college ranks, he wants to help build a powerhouse on the next level. Instead of trying to win a collegiate championship, he wants to win a NBA championship.

But this time, his dreams will be a little bit harder to attain.

Although he played center in college, he won't play there in the NBA as his lean 220-pound frame won't be able to take the daily pounding. It's unsure whether he'll play at the three spot or four spot either. UMass coach John Calipari has repeatedly stated that Camby will probably create a position. At 6-foot-11-inches, he runs the floor exceptionally well and is able to put the ball on the floor much like a guard, giving him a sizable advantage over most players his height.

"I coached in the ACC for nine years and went up against some of the greatest college players. I don't know if I've ever seen a college player that does all the things Marcus Camby does. He is a point guard in a 6-foot-11 body," Virginia Tech coach Bill Foster said.

Camby says he's up for the task of making the jump to the next level.

"I feel that I am ready to pursue my lifelong dream — to play in the NBA," he said. "I have spent the last three years at UMass preparing for the opportunity to play at the next level and I feel that I am ready for the challenge."

On the college level, Camby had no more challenges. He's pretty much accomplished all he can on this level.

• He averaged 15.1 points and 7.0 boards over his three years and ranks 10th all-time at UMass in scoring with 1,387 career points. His 675 points this past season was the second-highest single season total in school history, behind Julius Erving.

• He set the all-time UMass record for blocked shots with 336 and became only the fourth player in NCAA history to reach 500 during his junior year — joining Shaquille O'Neal, Tim Duncan and Rodney Blake. He also holds the career NCAA Tournament blocked shot record with 43.

• This season, he won all but one Player of the Year award after averaging 20.5 points, 8.2 rebounds and 3.9 blocks, and was named a first-team All-American, leading UMass to the first-ever Final Four in school history.

Had he came back for his senior season, he could have won all of those awards again.

Trying to figure out the highlight of his career is a daunting task.

How about his last second slam to win a game against George Washington his freshman season. Or his 32-point outburst against Maryland in the Minutemen's second-round NCAA loss that same year? His monster slam against Stanford in last year's NCAA tournament?

How about his 32-point, nine-rebound, five-block performance against Kentucky in the season opener? His out-dueling Tim Duncan in the two's head-to-head matchup?

Ask Camby what his favorite memory over his three years and you won't hear any of these personal achievements. It's all about TEAM to Marcus Camby. In his press conference on April 26, he said that his favorite memory was the team's win against Kentucky in the season opener. Not his 32-point, nine-rebound, five-block performance, but the team's victory.

But perhaps the most defining moment of his three years was the return after what occurred on Jan 14, 1996 — when he collapsed prior to a game at St. Bonaventure. Camby lay unconscious for 10 minutes and his future was in doubt. But after numerous tests a cause for the collapse wasn't, and still hasn't, been found. After missing four games, Camby made his return against the same Bonnies, scoring 19 points, grabbing seven boards and blocking nine shots tieing the school record.

He was back — and better than ever.

Now he'll try to do the same in the NBA as on June 26, he will be selected in the draft — unless he changes his mind and decides to come back for his senior year. He's not signing with an agent until after the draft and is keeping his options open — although the chances of him changing his mind appear slim-to-none.

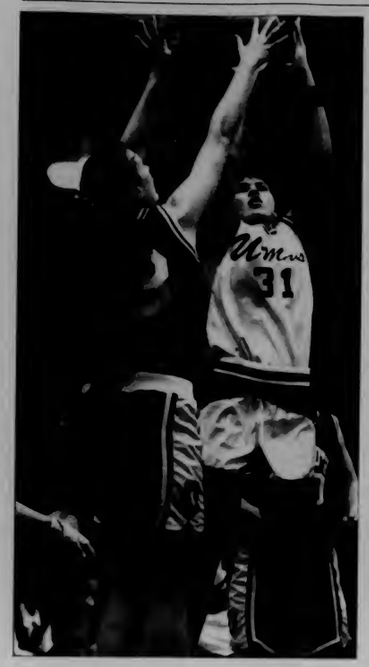
"Don't take from him that there's a chance that he's coming back," Calipari said. "It's one-in-a-million. If something happens that he has to come back he's leaving it open."

Not only did Camby leave his mark as one of the greatest UMass players of all-time, but he left his mark as an outstanding person as well.

"We're talking about a young man who will be a positive role model for youngsters," Calipari said. "The biggest thing is that he became our best player but was still down to earth and a nice person."

"This past season was incredible, but it was not about winning games and going to the Final Four that made it special, it was the fun we had together," Camby said. "I will never leave UMass in my heart. A big part of me will always be here."

After winning most every National Player of the Year award in 1995-96, Marcus Camby has decided to enter the NBA draft this year foregoing his final year of college eligibility.



Senior center Melissa Gurile was the major inside force for the Minutewomen as UMass women's basketball made its first trip ever to the NCAA Tournament.

Seniors key Minutewomen success

By Chris Stamm
Collegian Sports

Five years ago, the state of women's basketball at UMass was less than dismal. In their 1990-1991 campaign , the Minutewomen finished with a more than dismal 0-27 mark.

To say the squad has come a long way since those days would be a gross understatement.

This past season, coach Joanie O'Brien and the Minutewomen looked to improve upon the previous season's successes. Looking at the team's 19-11 best ever record, it seemed that UMass had a long road ahead of them. But with all five starters returning led by senior co-captains, center Melissa Gurile and forward Octavia Thomas, the team made Massachusetts women's hoop history.

Finishing with a new school best mark of 20-9, the '95-'96 season was highlighted with the club's first ever NCAA Tournament appearance. From the first tip-off at the pre- season National Women's Invitational, to the final whistle in Gampel Pavilion in the NCAA's, the Minutewomen proved that they are a force to be reckoned with.

The squad first saw action in the NWIT in Orono, Maine where they looked to improve upon its previous fourth place showing the year before. This time around, the Minutewomen took an early exit at the hands of national powerhouse Maine, 70-56.

The following week, O'Brien's squad returned to play its first game of the season in the William D. Mullins Center, as this was the first season the Minutewomen played all their home games in the hallowed home of UMass hoops. First up would be Amherst native Jamila Wideman and the No. 8 Stanford Cardinal. If there was one win which proved the team had brought its play up to another level, this was it. The Minutewomen dropped Stanford 65-56 before a record-setting crowd of 4,110.

"I was proud of the way they hung in," O'Brien said. "It might have been easy, when they started coming back, to give into it and we didn't. We stepped up and made plays when we needed it. That's what we've been missing in the past, and hopefully its a sign of things to come."

One of the biggest losses of the season, came not on the scoreboard, but in the trainer's room as sophomore forward Tez Krafi sat out the majority of the season after injuring her knee early on.

The Minutewomen carried over their early season success into conference play, finishing up the season 11-5 in the Atlantic 10. After suffering a nail-biting 68-66 loss at St. Bonaventure, UMass needed a win against Rhode Island in its final home game to secure the No. 2 seed in the A-10 east going into the conference tourney. Thomas led the way with 26 points and six boards, as the win not only gave the team an undefeated home record on the season, but on senior night, was indicative of the four women that were the corner stones of the program.

In her four years as center for the Minutewomen, Gurile started in each and every game. In addition to earning All- Conference honors all four years in Maroon and White, Gurile set the school record for blocks with 168 and had 13 career double-doubles. Finishing second in the A-10 in field goal percentage (55.6 percent), and blocks (1.58 bpg).

Thomas entered the record books notching her 851th board on Feb. 8 against Temple.

In the guard spot, Tricia Hopson prowess at point has been consistent in her four years at UMass. With 37 career starts she averaged 2.5 assists per game. Nicole Carter earned 23 starts and earned her career bests this past season in points (nine) and steals (three).

In the A-10 Tournament, the Minutewomen routed Virginia Tech and then fell to eventual conference champs, George Washington.

The season climaxed as it earned its first ever NCAA bid, receiving the No. 8 seed in the Mid-East region. The Minutewomen travelled to Gampell Pavilion in Storrs, Conn. to face the ninth-seeded Spartans of Michigan State. In a game of heart pounding pace, the Minutewomen were within seconds of facing regional hosts UConn in the next round, but fell in overtime 60-57.

At the end of the tournament, junior Crystal Carroll summed up all that had happened in the past season and all that will come in future years.

"The experience of coming to the tournament is one I won't forget for next year," Carroll said. "It's a good experience for the younger players also, to let them know what standards they have to play to and what's expected of them."

Senior Octavia Thomas was the leading scorer for the UMass women's basketball team in scoring more times than any other Minutewoman, as they made their first trip to the NCAA Tournament.

Hockey continuing to make strides

By Matt Vautour
Collegian Sports

In the building process for the Massachusetts hockey team, the 1995-1996 season was a big step in a positive direction.

How big?

At the end of the 1994-95 season, the Minutemen were ranked No. 41 out of 44 teams. Following this season, UMass jumped to No. 26. The 15-spot jump ties the Minutemen for the third biggest improvement in Division I hockey.

UMass moved up one spot in the Hockey East standings as well, from ninth to eighth in the conference. The Minutemen finished their season after getting swept by Boston University in the first round of the Hockey East Playoffs.

What may be most remembered in years to come will be the building of a rivalry and the fruits of that rivalry was the first-ever Alumni Cup.

This year in attempt to help foster the growing intensity between UMass and UMass-Lowell, the Alumni Cup was formed, to be presented to the winner of the best of three regular season series.

After both teams split the early season home-and-home meetings, the stage was set for the finale, a Feb. 10 contest at the William D. Mullins Center.

After the two teams were tied, 4-4, after regulation and overtime, the contest came down to a shootout.

After the two teams remained tied after one round of shooters, the shootout went to sudden death. Senior Sal Manganaro beat Lowell goalie Martin Fillion to give UMass the victory.

The Alumni Cup was hardly the only time the Minutemen were engaged in a shootout. In fact UMass led Hockey East in that category. The Minutemen competed in six shootouts during the season including four-in-a-row, compiling a 4-2 record in them overall.

The Minutemen came out of the gate with a strong start, winning their season opener from Army and sweeping Merrimack in a home-and-home set to open the season 3-0.

The strong play continued as the Minutemen dominated non-conference foes to move to 9-6 on Dec 17.

The second half of the season was a struggle for the Minutemen however, as the team skidded going 1-13-6 the rest of the way.

Offensively, the duo of Manganaro and junior Rob Bonneau led the way for the Minutemen. Manganaro, who was able to stay healty all year led the team with 23 goals and 23 assists, while Bonneau had 16 goals to go along with 30 assists. The duo's 92 combined points made the conference's third best one-two scoring punch. Warren Norris checked in for third in points with 20 goals and 20 assists.

Coach Joe Mallen was pleased the way Norris finished his season.

"I'm looking at the broad picture and Warren's going to be a key guy for us next year," he said.

On the blue-line the sophomore trio of Brad Norton, Tom O'Connor, and Mike Gaffney saw considerable minutes as UMass will return an experienced unit to the blueline next year.

Sophomore Brian Regan picked up his sophomore year right where he left off his freshman campaign. In 27 games he went 7-16-4, with a 4.50 goals against average.

Farewells — Seven Massachusetts seniors donned the Minuteman uniform for the final time this season. Forwards Manganaro, John Jacques, Blair Wagar, and Mike Evans, defensemen Jaynen Rissling, Dale Hooper, and goalie Dave Kilduff all hung up their skates.

A look ahead — The team will bring in two talented forwards next year in Jeff Blanchard and Nathan Sell. Blanchard has drawn considerable attention because he is the nephew of former Boston Bruin great Bobby Orr.

Defenseman Dean Stork will also be in the lineup for the Minutemen after sitting out last season due to academic requirements.

Milestones — The Minutemen beat three teams, in Merrimack, Princeton and Lowell that they had struggled previously against. Regan broke the UMass single season record for saves with 802. He needs only 125 to become the career leader as well...Bonneau's 30 assists are a UMass Div. 1 single season record...In the first ever East Senior All-Star game, Manganaro scored two goals for the Hockey East squad that fell 11-9 to the ECAC team.

Sophomore goaltender Brian Regan once again was the backstop for the Minutemen as he improved on a stellar freshman season with a 4.50 goals against average, while he was the winning netminder in seven games this season. UMass won only six games in its first full season in Division I.

Even with the frightful weather outside, UMass' winter teams were still red hot

By Fred Hurlbrink, Jr.
Collegian Sports

Not even the mountains of snow that blanketed the Massachusetts campus could keep the Valley from being Happy this winter.

The UMass sports scene was for the most part anything but dreary as championships, milestones and records were splashed all over the back page of the Collegian.

The most noticeable, publicized and popular team on campus this winter was John Calipari's men's basketball team. Here's a look at them, and the other teams that laid it all on the table this winter.

• Where to begin? The men's basketball team won the Atlantic 10 regular season and tournament title for the fifth straight season, falling just once in the conference, that to nemesis George Washington who halted the Minutemen's 26-game winning streak. They were the No. 1 team in the country for most of the season earning the top seed in the East region of the NCAA tournament. Consensus Player of the Year Marcus Camby led the Minutemen to the Final Four where they lost to Kentucky. Edgar Padilla (honorable mention All-American) and Carmelo Travieso established themselves as one of the best backcourts in the country.

• Joanie O'Brien's women's basketball squad made school history by securing the program's first ever NCAA tournament bid this winter. The Minutewomen went to overtime before Michigan State was able to knock them from the tournament. Senior standouts Octavia Thomas and Melissa Gurile put up spectacular numbers while trudging through one of the tougher schedules in the country. The Minutewomen hosted national power Stanford the day after Thanksgiving and came away with one of the biggest wins of the winter.

• The quickly rebuilding hockey program made more strides this season as they found their way into the Hockey East playoffs for the first time. Getting the eighth seed, the Minutemen were quickly, and rudely, eliminated by Boston University. Joe Mallen's charges won the inaugural Alumni Cup, winning a three-game series with fellow state school, UMass-Lowell.

• On March 2, the men's gymnastics team captured their eighth consecutive New England championship while junior Gabe Columbus took home the all-around title. Senior co- captain Steve Goldman scored consistently all season including notching two first place performances at the New England meet. Freshmen performers Brad LeClair and Phil Leiberman were among the team's top scorers all year, preparing to take the place of Goldman et al.

• UMass's Atlantic 10 dominance was in effect in women's gymnastics as well, as Dave Kuzara's corps hosted and won the A-10 Championships. In addition to winning the conference title, the Minutewomen swept the post-season awards. Kuzara was named the A-10 coach of the year while Denise Johnson earned Freshman of the Year honors. Tara Swartz (A-10 Gymnast of the Year) and Lianne Laing were veteran standouts.

• Led by fantastic freshman Tom Toye, the men's indoor track team logged a best-ever third place finish at the A-10 meet this season. Toye broke Kevin Walter's school record in the 200m dash with a time of 22.36 at the St. Valentine Invitational in Boston. The squad's leading sprinter went on to break that mark twice more in the winter season. Senior captain Marc LeFebvre was another consistent scorer for coach Ken O'Brien's team.

• Thanks to a slew of top performances, the women's indoor track team won their first ever Atlantic 10 championship becoming only the second team in conference history to win both the cross country and track championships in the same year. Sophomore Rebecca Donaghue won two events at the A-10 meet and provisionally qualified for the NCAA meet in the mile. Julie LaFrenier was named A-10 co-coach of the year.

• The men's swimming team suffered through a tragic season as one of the best swimmers, and persons, in school history, Greg Menton died after collapsing at a meet at Dartmouth (N.H.) College. Despite the shocking loss, the Minutemen pulled together to win the A-10 meet and place second at New England's. Junior Sean Anderson, one of the Minutemen's best performers, took fourth place in individual scoring at NEs.

• Senior Sarah Baker was a consistent first place finisher in the 50- and 100-yard freestyles helping a young women's swimming squad grab third place at the A-10s and second place at the New England meet. Baker won the New England individual title in the 50-yard freestyle while youngsters Kerrin McCarthy (soph., 200-yard back), Irrina Kossenko (soph., 200-yard butterfly) and Julie Alexander (fresh., 200-yard breast), all of whom performed well all season, notched third place finishes.

• The woeful winter weather couldn't thwart the season of success had by all sports teams on the UMass campus as they brought home four A-10 titles among other regional and national honors.

The snow has melted by now, but there's still talk about Camby going to the NBA or all the sports' new recruits or Rebecca Donaghue running in NCAAs. Sports is admittedly the life blood of the campus and this winter the success particularly kept it pumping.

Junior Tara Swartz led the UMass women's Gynastics team to their first ever Atlantic 10 title. Swartz also made the NCAA Regionals in individual comeptition.

Minutemen gain Final Four berth, lose a friend

■ Menton personified a student–athlete with his competitive edge and spirit

It's extremely difficult for me to define who Greg Menton was and what exactly he meant to his friends, teammates and coaches here at the University. I envy any person who can properly put into words how great Greg was, and in many ways still is.

His athletic prowess was surpassed by his ferocious intensity which was in turn surpassed by his easy-going, approachable, good-natured personality.

I feel almost fake writing such a personal tribute to a man that I never met, but you can't help but know by hearing what other people say that he was a tremendous individual.

"When you think about Greg, he was totally committed to make everyone better in swimming, water polo or otherwise," coach Russ Yarworth said. "It just felt good to be around him."

Greg was a huge part of the program; he always showed the importance of hard work and discipline — he never missed a practice." 1995 water polo co-captain Luis Limardo said. "I think that discipline is the best thing that Greg taught me.

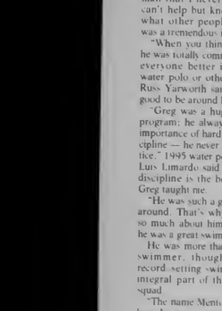
"He was such a great guy to be around. That's why people care so much about him, not because he was a great swimmer."

He was more than just a great swimmer, though; he was a record-setting swimmer and an integral part of the water polo squad.

"The name Menton immediately grabs your attention when you look at the swimming record board," Yarworth said.

Greg went into his junior year already owning two UMass sprint records in the 100-yard backstroke (51.83 seconds) and the 100-yard butterfly (50.14). He is also a member of two school-best relay teams: the 200-yard free relay (1:23.18) and the 200-yard medley relay (1:33.71).

In contrast to being the standout performer on the swimming and diving team, Greg's water polo performances were often over-shadowed.



Greg Menton

His 71 points (40 goals, one 2-pt. goal, 29 assists) ranked him fourth on the team, but the real measure of his value to the team was the dirty work that he did. In 1995 he set a team record for steals with 63; he won 82 swim-offs for the Minutemen and his aggressive play earned him the dubious distinction of leading the team in fouls.

Greg ended his water polo career at UMass as the club's all-time leader in shooting percentage (.559) and is in the top 10 in nine career categories, not to mention five single-season lists.

His impact on the aquatics program was immense, but his impact on the people in the program and in his life was far greater.

"I don't think it was his athletic achievements that attracted most people to Greg," diver Justin Murphy said. "It was his love of what he was doing and his love of life."

"He loved what he did. Every time he was in a race he gave it 100 percent. He was so intense," senior swimmer and tri-captain Dave LaPorte said.

"He never just thought about himself; he was always there for us," Yarworth said. "Greg was a sweet, sincere young man. He knew how to live. He was a special kind and special and talented athlete, but his impact on the UMass community was more than athletic achievement. He was a dedicated teammate, a true friend and a tremendous representative of the university."

Earlier this spring, Greg's water polo No. 6 was retired in an emotional ceremony in Boyden Gym. He became the first player to be so honored in the history of UMass aquatics.

"[Seeing the banner in the future] will be inspirational," Yarworth said. "It will be bittersweet, thinking about what could have been, but we'll do what Greg would want us to do. We'll be champions."

Men's water polo push No.1 in Semis

By Fred Hurlbrink, Jr.
Collegian Sports

The Massachusetts men's water polo team had one of the most phenomenal seasons in Eastern water polo history as they made the first water polo Final Four appearance ever by any team this side of the Rockies — this side of the California border for that matter.

The Minutemen won the Eastern Championship for an unprecedented third consecutive season; they very nearly upset the top club in the country to reach the National Championship match; one of the team's co-captain's was named Eastern Player of the Year; the coach won the Eastern Water Polo Association Coach of the Year award for the second time in three years; they went undefeated in the EWPA North regular season; two players were named All–Americans.

Third straight Eastern Championship: After falling, 10–8, to Queens College in the EWPA North Division playoffs, the Minutemen took the third seed into the Championships held in Annapolis, Md. at the home pool of rival Navy. The Mavs squad faced off with the Midshipmen to earn a berth against Queens in the final. The Minutemen played their most complete game of the year, beat Navy for the first time on the season and prepared to exact revenge on Queens. The final was all Minutemen as they rode a 12-7 victory into the National Final Four.

National Semi-final: The Minutemen went out to Palo Alto, Calif. to face Cal-Berkley, the No. 1 team in the country. Knowing that they would have to play the best game of their collective lives, they put on a valiant effort, but fell a few crucial minutes short of playing for the National title as the Bears pulled away, 10-6. Despite not winning a game in the tournament, Luis Limardo was named to All-Tournament first team.

Eastern Player of the Year: Luis Limardo scored almost at will during the 1995 season establishing himself as one of the best players in UMass history. For the second year in a row he was the primary scoring threat (112 goals, 29 assists) for the Minuteman attack, demolishing opponents with his dangerous scoring prowess. In his final campaign, Limardo set a new Minuteman record for career goals with 306. He also stands second on the all-time point list (402) and third in career assists (95).

Coach of the Year: Russ Yarworth guided his charges to a Top 15 national ranking, a 28-7 overall record and an undefeated (9-0) conference campaign. Yarworth has a special relationship with his team which enhances his tremendous coaching abilities.

Undefeated in the EWPA North: The powerful Minuteman attack outscored their conference competition by a whopping 109 goals (178-69) in their nine EWPA games, blasting their way to a top seed in the North Division tourney.

All-Americans: Luis Limardo and Alex Mujica were honored this winter by being named to the national water polo All-American team. Limardo was named to the third team. Mujica earned an honorable mention. Mujica was the best goal tender in the East, extending his career saves mark (743) and setting the quarters played in goal record (314).

Luis Limardo was the main scoring threat for the Minutemen this season and his 112 goals on the season brought him All America third team honors.

1995-96 brought some memorable victories

This was a year with so many memorable wins and outstanding performances by UMass teams that will always standout. There were an abundance of triumphs that will be remembered, but we have compiled, in no particular order, what we feel are the top 10 victories of UMass squads this past academic year.

Men's hoop beating Kentucky in the Great Eight — The Minutemen were substantial underdogs to the pre-season number one team in the nation, and soundly disposed of the Wildcats 92-82. UMass never trailed during the game and got stellar performances from Marcus Camby who poured in 32 points, nine rebounds, and five blocks along with the backcourt of Edgar Padilla (14 points, six assists) and Carmelo Travieso (10 points) who played 39-plus minutes. It would be the first of 26 straight wins for John Calipari's squad.

Women's soccer eliminating Hartford 2-1 in double overtime — As she had done time and time before, Rachel LeDuc scored the big goal in the big game. After the Hawks had tied the game with just 51 seconds left in regulation, the senior co-captain put home the game winner with just 1:4 seconds left in the second overtime to advance to the second round of the NCAA tournament. Erin Lynch lofted a cross to the top of the box and LeDuc beat Danielle Rotundi to the ball and headed a slow roller to the far corner that just had enough steam to cross the goal line for the winner just before the time expired.

Men's soccer knocks off BU, 2-1 — The Terriers strode into Amherst on the heels of a 1994 season that saw them go 19-0-1 in the regular season. Laden with international players, Boston University was expected to run rampant, but coach Sam Koch's squad played brilliantly and pulled off the tremendous upset. A pair of second half Mike Butler goals gave UMass the lead and an unbelievable save by Eric Gruber on a penalty kick with 2:51 to play sealed the thriller.

Women's gymnastics captures first ever Atlantic 10 Title — This was clearly the biggest season in the history of the program, and winning the A-10 title at Curry Hicks Cage, no less, was the major highlight. A-10 Coach of the Year Dave Kuzara coached a team led by Tara Swartz, A-10 Gymnast of the Year, Denise Johnson, A-10 Freshman of the Year, Lianne Laing and J.J. Tolhurst. Next season, UMass hopes to take it a step or two further, and aim for at least the Regional Championship, if not The Big One.

Hockey wins Alumni Cup in shootout — The third-year program picked up its first hardware in its short history. The Alumni Cup, the trophy for the winner of the yearly three game set between UMass and UMass-Lowell.

After the two teams were tied 4-4 at the end of regulation and overtime with the series tied at 1-1, the title would come down to a shootout. After each team had scored four times in the shootout, Sal Mangiaratti beat Lowell goalie Martin Fillion to give UMass the win.

A-10 titles in cross-country and track — Going into the Atlantic 10 Championships, neither the men's nor the women's cross country teams were favored to win the A-10s. But with impressive performances from several runners, the men captured their first title, and the women came away with their third. For the men, Matt Behl, Mike Maceiko and Jon Way were named All Conference; while the same honors were garnered by Rebecca Donaghue, Jen Waeger, and Katie Grimsley.

During the indoor track and field season, the Minutewomen runners continued their A-10 dominance, easily defeating all opponents. UMass was led by Donaghue, Rosey Bryan, Anya Forrest, and Christie Dutton.

Men's hoop pounding Georgetown in the Elite Eight — The Hoyas were the to be the road block which would keep the Minutemen from their first ever trip to the Final Four. UMass came out of the blocks quickly and kept their strangle hold on Allen Iverson and Co. as they thrashed the Hoyas by 24 points. It was Carmelo Travieso who put the defensive clamps on the All American, do-everything guard as Camby led the offense with 22 points. The win punched the Minutemen's ticket to the Meadowlands.

Women's hoop downs No. 8 Stanford — In Stanford's eyes this game was just a chance to let junior point gurad Jamila Wideman play in front of her home town. The Cardinal didn't count on UMass giving them a scare.

Tez Kraft led the way for the Minutemen with 14 points in only sixteen minutes of action, as the Minutewomen shutdown a late Stanford charge to come away with the 65-56 upset win.

Water Polo beating Queens to make the Final Four — After having Queens College bounce them from the No. 1 seed in the Eastern Championships by virtue of a 10-8 upset win in the North Division playoffs, the Minutemen were on a mission to meet Queens in the final and avenge that loss.

In order to get to the final, UMass had to beat the Midshipmen of Navy for the first time all season. The Minutemen jumped out to a 7-1 lead and cruised to their predestined final match-up with Queens. Top gun Luis Limardo and freshman Gabriel Marrero led the squad with two goals apiece and UMass had their vengeance as they were headed to the NCAA Water Polo Final Four.

Baseball wins Beanpot — The UMass baseball team proved it's the No. 1 team in New England in its first ever Beanpot appearance. In game one, the Minutemen dismantled the Harvard Crimson 13-2 at Fenway Park. The win was highlighted by Nate Murphy's three-run blast into the bullpen.

In the championship game, UMass edged out a tough Northeastern squad 1-0. Scott Barnsby pitched an impressive complete game, while senior left fielder Rain Jette handled the Green Monster with flair, notching a key assist off the wall in the ninth to perserve a scoreless, then scored the winning run in the bottom of the ninth.

The women's soccer team celebrates Rachel LeDuc's game winning goal with 1.4 seconds remaining in the second overtime.

Juniors were behind UMass success all year

By Leigh Torbin
Collegian Sports

Generally, after two years of apprenticeship, a coach expects juniors to raise their play to the next level. No longer will excuses for inexperience or un-battle-tested nerves suffice as it is time for the players to prove themselves worthy.

This past year, nearly every team on this campus had at least one junior who did just that.

Starting in the fall, the women's soccer team was impenetrable through the midfield because of Rebecca Myers, Amy Powell, Julie Magid and Sandy Shimogaki, all juniors, who clogged that section of the field and formed part of the backbone of a 14-4-2 NCAA team.

Perhaps the most solid junior contributions to Jim Rudy's squad came out of the back though, where Erin Lynch won her second consecutive A-10 Player of the Year award and was named All-America.

The men's side saw Dave Siljanovski bolster the UMass attack with his uncanny passing and freekick skills. One of the nation's leaders in assists, Siljanovski also proved to have a strong nose for the goal despite his short height.

The men's water polo team became the first eastern team to ever advance to the Final Four, and the standout play of the late junior Greg Menton was a big reason why. Menton helped lead the team both in and out of the pool and was a crucial component of its success.

Kyle Rothenberger continued to exhibit her knack for scoring crucial goals this year, leading UMass in many games, its contest against Boston College in particular. The All American, All-Conference selection is an alternate on the United States National Team.

The men's cross country team won its first ever A-10 title this fall on the heels of Matt Behl and Mike Maceiko, who traded places throughout the season as the team's No. 1 and 2 runners.

Giza Rivera and Dionne Nash led the volleyball team to the NIVC for the second straight year, with Nash breaking the 1,000 kill plateau in the process.

Then on the gridiron, one could find Frank Alessio, who led the Yankee Conference in rushing and occasionally made fans wonder who this Rene guy was. Alessio's 337-yard effort at BU highlighted a brilliant season. Lest we forget punter, turned defensive back, turned linebacker Justin Reimer, who led the YanCon in both tackles and solo tackles, making the All-New England and All-YanCon first teams.

Turn to JUNIORS, page 7

Kyle Rothenberger was the driving force behind the Minutewomen attack as she was once again named to the A-10 field hockey first team.

... as well as agonizing defeats along the way

Chris Grande and the men's lacrosse team were 30 seconds away from beating Syracuse for the first time in 15 years.

Along with the thrill of UMass victories also came some agonizing defeats for the University's teams. The efforts that these squads gave were exemplary, it was just that it was not represented with a win. These five losses all hurt more than just any other defeat.

Men's hoop loses to Kentucky in the Final Four — The quest for a National Championship was cut short by Rick Pitino's squad. The Minutemen came out strong, but after a Wildcat run to end the first half, UMass had to play catch up the rest of the way. From Marcus Camby to Giddel Padilla, everyone contributed to cutting a double digit deficit to two, but they just couldn't get over the hump. The team ended a magnificent season at 35-2, but falling short of the ultimate left a sour taste in its mouth.

Men's lacrosse falls to Syracuse in overtime — With 30 seconds remaining it looked as if 15 years of frustration would come to an end as UMass was up two on the defending national champs. However the Orangemen were resilient talling twice, once with six seconds remaining, to send the game to sudden death where Rob Kavosit closed out the incredible comeback by beating John Kasselakis just 44 seconds into overtime. It ruined what possibly was the Minutemen's best performance of the year.

Hockey loses a heartbreaker to No. 6 Vermont in overtime — UMass had a tremendous upset at hand, scraping to go to overtime against the eventual national semi-finalists. After playing a spirited 64:45 of hockey, the team's hopes collapsed under an overtime defensive breakdown, allowing the Catamounts to score a the game-winner with just under five seconds showing on the clock. A win that could have validated a strong first half of their season, literally slipped through the Minutemen's fingers.

George Washington ruins Minutemen's bid for perfect season — No one expected their perfect season to end in the William D. Mullins Center, then again no expected them to be undefeated on February 24th, either. Once against it was the perpetual thorn in the Minutemen's side, Mike Jarvis and his Colonials who ended their dream of an undefeated season. They now have the only two opposing victories since UMass moved into its 9,493 capacity building. It also marked the fourth straight time that GW had beaten the Minutemen overall.

Women's hoop goes down to Michigan St. in first round of NCAAs — In its first ever NCAA Tourney appearance, the Minutewomen travelled to nearby UConn and the Gampel Pavilion. In a close fought game, UMass eventually fell in OT 60-57. With 2:22 to go in regulation the Minutewomen held a 49-47 advantage. Crystal Carroll fouled Spartan Zereth Gray who sank two from the charity stripe to tie the game. With seconds remaining, Melissa Gurile blocked a Michigan State shot and sent the game to extra minutes. Much of the same followed in the extra session, but the Spartans broke away in the final seconds.

Ingoglia making run for Canadian border

Rene Ingoglia, the greatest running back in Massachusetts football history, signed a two-year contract with the Montreal Alouettes of the CFL last Thursday. He reports to camp in two weeks, and the season starts in late June.

"Hopefully, this will be a two year stint," Ingoglia said.

I talked to Rene Ingoglia less than four days before the NFL Draft a couple of weekends back. The reason I spoke with him was because there was a chance he would be drafted. If he wasn't drafted, free agency would be a possibility. In fact, Rene thought he would be was a sure invite to an NFL camp and that he would know his destination by 10 p.m. on that Sunday night. He thought there would be about 20 teams looking to take a shot at him.

He thought.

But as the draft came and went, he wasn't drafted. When the draft was over, and the NFL teams were scurrying to grab the others for their camps, he wasn't called. The phone was ringing, but the persons on the other line were not the ones he wanted to hear. His agent, telling him the disappointing on-goings. Curious reporters, like me, looking to see which NFL city was going to welcome the former UMass star.

Rene woke up the next morning wondering where his career was going. The next two weeks were spent in limbo. His career hadn't even started yet, but already it was giving him problems. These two weeks were supposed to be of anxiety, but not as to if he was going to get a professional football contract.

It was supposed to be where that chance would be given.

An NFL team had to take a chance on Rene Ingoglia. I mean, he did rush for over 4,600 yards and scored some 50 touchdowns in college. He did run a 4.4, 40 at an individual workout, benchpressed 225 pounds 23 times, jumped 39 inches off the ground, broad-jumped 10 feet.

Nope.

Unfortunately there were many other running backs in higher demand as they were drafted in the seven rounds of drafting. Unfortunately, there was that inevitable, "Hell, he did all that on the Division I-AA level."

Unfortunately, those NFL teams just don't know Rene.

Around here, we know he'll do anything a coach asks of him. He'll run. He'll block. He'll catch passes. He'll block kicks. He'll return kicks. He'll block for kicks. He'll be a spot back. And he'll do it all with a tenacity that cannot be expressed on a scouting report. The way he attacks the game of football cannot be measured, timed, or weighed by any old scout.

Andrew Bryce

All that a guy like Rene needs is a chance. Give him a chance to show that he will run through a wall for you and prepare to make plans for the carpenter to come repair the damage shortly after. You've heard about the Notre Dame–caliber high school back who suffered the knee injury his senior year, before venturing on to an outstanding career at UMass. You've heard about the natural tailback being converted to fullback for the sake of the team.

Unfortunately, the NFL didn't.

So Rene Ingoglia is now a member of the Montreal Alouettes. He'll play in the eight-team Canadian League, the minors of the NFL. He'll make less than an NFL minimum wage, but, as he terms it, "a good first job salary." He said a couple of NFL teams did end up calling him, interested in his services. But by then, Rene had already brainstormed. He had weighed his options.

"I was invited to a couple of NFL camps. We decided I had a good chance of starting for the Alouettes by going up there for two years," Ingoglia said.

If he went to the NFL camp he was invited to, he faced the possibility of being cut at any time, maybe even before he had a chance to prove himself on the field. By going to Montreal, he'll be able to showcase his talent, and that tenacity of his, amidst all of the scouts searching for NFL talent. And going to the CFL team will give him something that and NFL team can't offer him at this point and time.

Stability.

"If you get cut for any reason, you're left out in the water," Ingoglia said. "Now, I have the chance to produce and do well for the next couple of years."

His plan is just that. Two years. Or shorter, hopefully. Rene is using this as a springboard. His dreams consist of the NFL. The disappointment of the last two weeks can't even squelch that.

Let's hope that Rene makes it. Not just because he's a UMass alum, or because he works so hard. If you know him, you know what I'm getting at. He's a class act, one of the friendlier guys I have encountered in interviewing athletes. As much passion as he has for the game of football, he treats people with an equal amount of respect. Win or loss, good game or bad game, drafted or not drafted, Rene Ingoglia treats you the same way, regardless.

Bonne chance, Rene.

Donaghue a force behind Minutewomen success

By Casey Kane
Collegian Sports

For the Massachusetts women's cross country team there was one woman this year who was the epitomized the word success. That woman was sophomore Rebecca Donaghue.

Donaghue became a catalyst for the Minutewomen's success this year, crossing the line as the first UMass runner in every meet.

Her finishes on the year included a 12th place time of 18:06 at the prestigious Paul Short Invitational, which helped UMass to a seventh place team finish and a second place 17:52 at the New England Championships, to help the Minutewomen to second overall.

On Oct. 28, Donaghue was instrumental in leading the Minutewomen to an Atlantic 10 title. She battled rival Sue Yaagielski of St. Joseph's throughout the race, finishing second in a time of 17:38. Yaagielski won the race in 17:29.

For her efforts, Donaghue was rewarded with All-Atlantic 10 honors.

"Everyone ran well, it was a total team effort," Donaghue said. "When we won A-10s it was the greatest feeling. It was incredible."

Two weeks later at the ECAC Championships in Boston, the sophomore clocked a personal record time of 17:28, more than 20 seconds better than the time she ran at NEs on the same Franklin Park course three weeks earlier. With that time, Donaghue placed 11th, a finish good enough to qualify her for the NCAA Championships.

"I was absolutely ecstatic with Rebecca's performance," Massachusetts coach Julie LaFreniere said. "I knew she had that kind of performance in her."

Donaghue became the first Minutewomen ever to compete in the NCAAs in cross country. Travelling to Ames, Iowa in mid-November, she toed the line with some of the best talent in collegiate racing.

"I was really happy, but still kind of surprised," Donaghue said. "It's such an honor."

At the NCAAs, Donaghue got the chance to compete with the nation's elite harriers. Finishing with a time of 18:08, she placed 50th, out of 183 runners.

While Donaghue has always had a competitive spirit, she has not always been so fond of distance running. When she was in the fourth grade, Donaghue entered her first organized race, a one-mile fun run. After beating the neighborhood boys in countless sprints, she figured the race wouldn't be a problem.

"I ran that first race, and even thought it was only a mile, I hated it," she said. "I told myself I would never run distance again, and I was only in fourth grade."

Intending to keep her pledge to never run distance, Donaghue tried out for the soccer team. When she got cut, she gave running a second chance.

At Nashoba Regional High School, Donaghue rewrote the record books, setting new course marks at Nashoba, Groton, and Lunenburg high schools. She was awarded the Eve Ingalls Memorial District MVP and the Nashoba Athlete of the Year award in her senior year.

Impressed by what she saw out of Donaghue, LaFreniere recruited the harrier for the UMass program.

"I knew she was talented when I was recruiting her," LaFreniere said. "I knew that she would be an excellent college runner, and I really wanted her as part of my program.

"There's a fire in her eyes when she gun goes off," she continued.

Donaghue has worked and trained diligently to reach the level she is at.

"You have to like to train at this level, and Rebecca does," assistant track coach Jim Giroux said. "In high school you compete so much more often, you can afford to not

Minutewomen continue their excellence

By Candice Flemming
Collegian Sports

One way to describe the 1995 women's soccer season is typical.

Typical that the Minutewomen advanced to the NCAAs. Typical that the Minutewomen won the Atlantic 10 title. Typical that coach Jim Rudy won his second A-10 Coach of the Year award. Typical that junior defender Erin Lynch won Player of the Year honors for the second year in a row. Typical that senior forward Rachel LeDuc scored game-winning goals. Typical that sophomore keeper Danielle Dion had her share of shutouts. Typical that a freshman stepped it up on defense. Typical that the UMass defense was one of the best in the country. Typical that the Minutewomen received solid offensive output from various players. Typical that the UMass bench came through whenever called upon.

Typical because year in and year out, the UMass women's soccer program is typically one of the best programs in the Northeast Region and the country.

• Since 1982, UMass has been a fixture in the NCAAs, advancing to the tourney 12 times.

• In each of the A-10's three year's of existence, UMass has been crowned the champion.

• Since becoming UMass' head coach in 1988, Rudy has never had a losing season and has won two of the last three A-10 coach of the year honors. In the Minutewomen's season opening win against St. Bonaventure, he picked up his 100th career victory at UMass, adding to his impressive overall record of 187-52-23.

"As a coach I try and create an environment and do the things necessary to teach these kids so they can be educated by the game," Rudy said.

• In her three year's of starting in the backfield, Erin Lynch has established herself as one of the premier defenders in the nation, earning first team All American honors this year. Winning back-to-back A-10 Player of the Year honors as a defender, is a true testament to her greatness. She finished third on the team in points (17) on four goals and nine assists.

"She's got the complete package. She's in the top five [in the country]. I've got no questions about that," Rudy said.

• As a freshman, Rachel LeDuc was the last person on the bench. Four years later, she leaves as UMass' all-time leader in single-season points (46), goals (18), game-winning goals (8), and the career leader in points (95) and goals (35, tying April Kater). Her biggest game-winner came this season against Hartford in the first round of the NCAAs, when she scored with 1.4 seconds left to propel UMass into the second round.

"There will be no one else like [Rachel LeDuc] again — for certain," Rudy said.

• Danielle Dion stormed onto the scene as a freshman last season, finishing with eight shutouts and 87 saves. She backed that up with an equally solid sophomore campaign which saw her have nine shutouts and 84 saves.

"She allows us to be fairly relaxed in the back because we know there's not going to be too many softies going in," Rudy said.

• In 1993 it was Lynch. Last year it was Erica Iverson. This season it was Amanda Thompson who stepped up defenstively as a freshman. As Lynch and Iverson did before her, she came in and started right away, playing with unmatched confidence.

"She's a very experienced, composed, reliable player who fit in very quickly," Rudy said.

• The definite strength of the '95 squad, Dion, Lynch, Iverson, Thompson and Nikki Ahrenholz allowed only 0.71 goals per match this season.

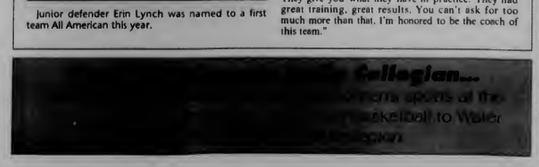
"I feel lucky to play with players that are that great. We work together well," Ahrenholz said during the season. "Most of the time [Rudy] doesn't even name us personally, it's just the back four."

• Juniors Rebecca Myers (eight goals, nine assists), Amy Powell (four goals, five assists), Julie Magid (one goal, seven assists) and Sandy Shimogaki (one goal, four assists) controlled the midfield solidly while freshman Karin Johnson finished with two goals and six assists.

• Every member of the bench, from Polly Hackathorn, Liz Rutherford and Tina Lightning, to Sara Hill, Vicki Linton, Meghan Brennan and Camilla Therp, produced when needed. Rutherford finished with two goals, three assists; Lightning with one goal, three assists; and Hackathorn finished with a goal and an assist in her final season.

"We had a great season. I think this is probably the finest team I've coached. They play for each other and fight hard. This [was] a fantastic group of kids. I have no complaints," Rudy said. "This [was] a great team. They give you what they have in practice. They had great training, great results. You can't ask for too much more than that. I'm honored to be the coach of this team."

Junior defender Erin Lynch was named to a first team All American this year.



Autumn sports teams started year making competition fall to their knees

By Chris Stamm
Collegian Staff

As the autumn leaves fell, so too did opponents and Massachusetts school records.

UMass finished the fall season with four conference championships, in women's soccer, men's and women's cross country and men's water polo as athletes like Rene Ingoglia and Frank Alessio wreaked havoc on the record books. Here's a wrap of what took place.

When women's soccer coach Jim Rudy earned his 100th career win in the season opener against St. Bonaventure, the Minutewomen could sense that this would be a season of success.

Finishing with an overall record of 14-4-2, 8-1 in the Atlantic 10, UMass proved to be a contender as it played the vast majority of the season with a top 10 national ranking, climbing as high as the No. 6 spot in the country.

In the post season, the Minutewomen walked away with the A-10 Championship title with two impressive shutouts. In the semifinal round, UMass downed George Washington 2-0, as a prelude to its 6-0 annihilation of A-10 newcomer Xavier in the tourney finals.

Perhaps one of the most exciting victories in UMass history came in the gut-wrenching 2-1 double overtime win over Hartford in the first round of the NCAA's. In the final seconds, senior captain Rachel LeDuc headed a cross inside the 18-yard box in the pouring rain to advance the Minutewomen. In the second round, UMass would end its season in a 3-0 loss at the hands of UConn once again.

Men's Soccer

The men's soccer team finished out a solid fall season with an overall record of 14-4-2, 8-2-1 in the A-10. The Minutemen earned a landmark win as they beat national powerhouse Boston University (the No. 1 ranked team in the '94 season) in a 2-1 win at home on Garber Field. The following week, UMass travelled to California to beat the No. 20 Dons of San Francisco. Rounding out the roadtrip, the Minutemen tied coach Sam Koch's former team Stanford.

Football

Looking back on UMass' '95 campaign on the gridiron, one name stands out. Rene Ingoglia.

In addition to being the Minutemen's key offensive weapon, Ingoglia also earned the team honor or re-writing the record books breaking seven all-time UMass records before signing a CFL contract this spring. Ingoglia earned the all-time UMas record for career rushing with an impressive 3,978 career yards. Ingoglia earned top honors in: career TD's (43), single season receptions by a freshman (10), career rushing yards in a game (113.7 yards/game) and single game rushing yards with 313, to name a few. However, this last mark didn't stand long, as teammate Frank Alesslo shatterred Ingoglia's record rushing for 337 yards in a 28-23 win over Northeastern. Ingoglia and Alessio combined with freshman Matt Jordan for one the most potent running game in the Yankee Conference.

The team met with mixed success UMass finished the season with a 6-5 mark. The Minutemen dropped its home opener 21-7 against former UMass coach Jim Reid and his Richmond Spiders. It's most impressive win came at the hands of Holy Cross, as they shutout the Crusaders 51-0.

Men's Water Polo

UMass finished the regular season undefeated in the Easter Water Polo Association 9-0, 19-2 overall. Brian Stahl finished the season as the Minutemen's leading scorer with 93 points while Luis Limardo did his part tallying 69 goals while notching 21 assists.

After earning their third straight EWPA Championship, the Minutemen advanced to the NCAA Final Four, the first team from the east to advance that far.

Later in the year, the UMass com-

Counting back the days for a graduating sports writer

Exactly twelve hundred eighty eight days ago, I saw my name in the print of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian for the very first time. You probably didn't see it because I was a freshman toolbox writing an NBA column, and who listens to freshman toolboxes? And if you did read the article while mowing on the D.C. food on that November day of our first year of college, you probably don't remember that I picked the Knicks to win the East.

Of course, they didn't win the East.

Some twelve hundred days ago, I covered my first sporting event. It was a University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics meet, and all I can remember is not having a clue as to what I was doing. But, then again, I can also remember thinking I was cool despite being clueless. I was going to get my name in print for the first time. All you clowns were going to read it. I was going to spark a campus-wide interest for gymnastics. I was going to make Steve Christensen out to be bigger than Harper Williams.

Of course, it didn't quite happen that way.

Approximately eighty hundred-sixty six days ago, I became an associate sports editor under the honorable Arthur Stapleton Jr. From there, I learned how to lay out a sports page, manage a staff, help the writers, and everything else which you can currently find listed on my resume that hasn't gotten me a job yet. I was the man. I was a hard ass. Everyone loved me, but no one screwed with me. I was the best associate sports editor to ever hit this damn campus.

Of course. I'm lying to make friends again.

About six hundred twenty days ago, I officially became the co-sports editor along with a guy whose beard was used at night as his living room carpet. I had so many ideas to incorporate to the page, and worked my butt off to utilize them. The sports page was the absolute best thing any college newspaper had ever seen. It was all because of me. I was the sole responsibility for the Collegian sports page being up to par with the Boston Globe.

Of course, that wasn't quite how it went.

And, as of today, the 14th of May in the year 1996, it has been thirteen hundred fifty two days since I arrived on the University of Massachusetts campus. Alright, so I can't make predictions. Yeah, I couldn't bring gymnastics appeal to that of basketball with my articles, and unfortunately, then-standout gymnast Steve Christensen never became as well-known as Harper Williams. As for me, no, I didn't reach immortality with my sports editor positions. And no, I wasn't even planning on doing this back in high school.

I just did this for the fun of it. I did this for the love of sports, for the excitement of seeing my name in print. I did this to stay busy after class (er, at times during class).

People will have a place in my permanent memory. Thorr Bjorn will stick out in my mind. You can't get much nicer than big Thorr. Mike Hodges is another just a nice guy to deal with when covering football. Bill Strick is the man, just ask anyone who's had to deal with him on work with him. Though John Calipari might get much of the credit for putting the UMass Athletic Department on the map, and deservedly so, Bob Marcum was the absolute perfect fit when hired as A.D. my freshman year. Another very friendly man that Bob Marcum.

Rigo was fun to watch, even if he wasn't in the game. Mark Milton was an unbelievable lacrosse player, even though I didn't have a clue about the game when I saw him play here my freshman year. Interviewing Calipari for the first time that same year was exciting, even though my hand shook like a madman as I held my tape recorder.

I've crossed paths with well known sports figures. I got to talk to Rick Pitino on his car phone. I asked Bill Parcells a couple of questions at a Pats press conference. I chased, and successfully caught, Jerry Tarkanian in the Mullins Center parking lot for an interview. I had a short conversation with Bill Cosby at the 1995 A-10 tournament. I shook hands and interviewed Shaquille O'Neal and Anfernee Hardaway.

Certain things seemed like they occurred just yesterday. How when I lived on the same floor as Lou Roe and he used to borrow my shampoo. How I was in West Virginia last season when the Minutemen came back from an 18-point deficit to win in overtime, and afterwards, was pelted by a cup thrown by an angry WVU fan as I interviewed the players after the game. How I was there when Rene Ingoglia ran for an amazing 313 yards in one game to set a Yankee Conference record, and I was there when Frank Alessio broke it this year with an equally amazing 337-yard effort.

I'll never forget when my friend Greg and I ran onto the court during Midnight Madness at the Cage my freshman year, and Jeff Meyer ran back to the locker room to get me a piece of tape for my ripped sign. I sat at a Minuteman basketball practice and talked hoops with Dick Vitale for a half hour. John Chaney was a great interview, and earned my respect even after his tirade here two years back. We all got scratched before the 1995 UMass-GW game because President Clinton was in attendance.

The list goes on and on. Many of these places I've been, Andrew Bryce was one of the many unknown faces in the crowd. Many things have happened where the others won't remember that particular time with Andrew Bryce. Many of these people, they won't remember. Andrew Bryce lending his Peri Plus or Andrew Bryce talking to them on their car phone. But one thing's for damn sure.

Andrew Bryce will. And that's all that matters.

Andrew Bryce is now a Collegian columnist emeritus.

Something great to live your life around

"Sports. They demonstrate the scope of human possibility, which is unlimited. The inconceivable is conceived, and then it is important."

I wish I knew whom to correctly attribute that quote to. I either heard it or read somewhere, and jotted down because it just sounded right.

For me it symbolized what I do and why I do it. The unlimited scope of human possibility... that mouthful basically means that anything can happen. On any given day anybody can beat anybody and you don't know who will be the hero. A chance at greatness is a great thing to live your life around...

It was 5 p.m. and two friends and I as well as about 15 other people were waiting outside to get into the basketball game.

If 5 p.m. doesn't seem particularly early to you, it was when you realize that the game started at midnight! It was of course Jan. 26, 1993, the final game in the legendary Curry Hicks Cage, better known as the Final Rage.

We stood for hours chanting UMass cheers, singing drinking songs and begging for them to open the doors and relieve us from the sub freezing temperatures.

When the doors finally opened, the atmosphere was unmatched. The noise shook the old building like never before.

When the Class of 1996 leaves the Happy Valley, the Cage will be something UMass students will have just heard stories about. The program had grown too big for the Cage's cozy confines, but it was hard to not wish that the atmosphere created in that building couldn't last forever. For some of us it will.

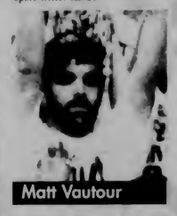
Other than my beard, if I have legacy at the Collegian (which I doubt) it will be for my love of covering field hockey.

In watching this game, that so few others even understand the rules to, I found something pure, something that is right about sports, in a time when there is so much controversy that surrounds it.

In field hockey, there are no high paid coaches, no television contracts, no hype, just a team of women going out there playing their hearts out for the game they love.

At UMass it is more than that too. The players take the field to honor a tradition, hoping to live up to the standards of the players who have worn the jersey before them. The pride alone is reason to respect UMass field hockey.

It was at a field hockey game, that I realized how great being a sportswriter can be.



Matt Vautour

When the Minutewomen upset No. 1 North Carolina last fall and the team flooded the field, you couldn't help but be excited. I still believe that if the selection committee hadn't snubbed them, that UMass could have won the 1994 National Title.

But the best thing about covering them was the people. The athletes involved were so talented, but yet so humble and down to earth. It was really refreshing.

So when Homecoming '96 rolls around this fall, no offense to football, but I'll be at the field hockey game.

Roll UMass.

Sometime within the next 10 years, the Massachusetts hockey team is going to make it to the Final Four. As a reporter that has covered this team for the three years since its inception, I'm sorry that I won't still be around to cover them in the years to come, because the future of this program is a bright one.

As I head into the proverbial real world, people ask me what media member I would most like to emmulate. While I'd admire a lot of people, the answer would have to be Steve Buckley. It's not because he's a former Collegian sports writer, or that he writes for the Boston Herald and works for WEEI and ESPN2.

It is because that in addition to having made it big time in the Boston media market, he is still a helluva nice guy.

I can't help but wish there was a reputable professional lacrosse league. A place where college superstars could continue to display their talents. Someone like Dennis Kelly hasn't even hit his athletic peak, yet his career as a player is basically over.

Since Dick Garber gave up the reins of the UMass program, the University has searched for someone to match his class, his commitment and his ability to coach. In Greg Cannella, it has come pretty damn close.

To wrap up, I've done a lot of things for this newspaper, and have even been fortunate enough to spend a year as it's Editor-in-Chief, but in my heart, I've always been a sports guy.

There's just something about being in the middle of everything and having all access when the buzzer sounds. I'm making it my career, because I can't think of a better way to earn a living than going to games.

Remember my name. I hope you'll see it again somewhere down the road.

Finally, throughout four years here I've had people tell me that my work at the Collegian would be good experience. While others said it would be a great line on a resume and that it would be a great way to start my career. Those may all be true, but it my heart they don't matter at all.

I did it because I loved it.

A year with outstanding individual efforts

Even though it normally is the team which wins games instead of the individual, at times extraordinary efforts are given that seem to bring a particular athlete to another level. These single-handed performances were examples of intestinal fortitude and sheer will.

Frank Alessio sets Yankee Conference single game rushing record — The man just loves turf. So when it came time to play on the artificial turf Nickerson Field this past season against Yankee Conference foe Boston University, Alessio took to the turbo boosters. On just 21 carries, Alessio chartered 337 yards, a YanCon record. Quick math will tell you he averaged 16 yards per carry. The record stayed in the UMass football family, as he broke Rene Ingoglia's 313-yard record set two years ago.

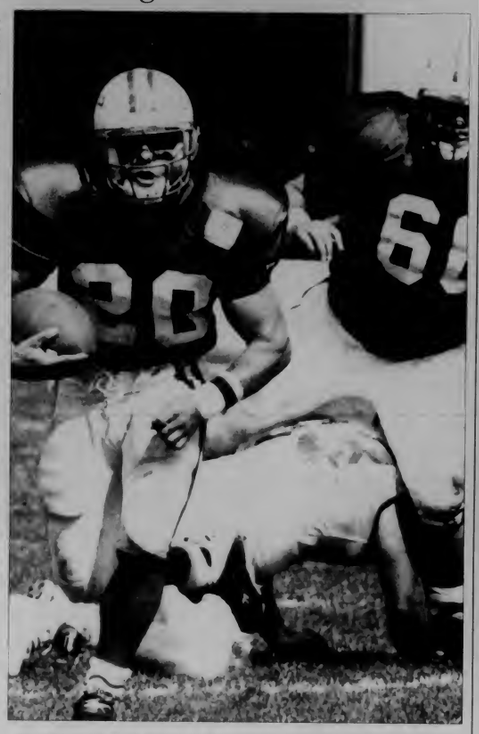
Marcus Camby serves notice in opener — Against Kentucky in the season opening great Eight tournament, the 6-foot-11 center took advantage of the Wildcats in the low post. On the offensive end Camby was a monster by knocking down 11 of 16 shots and grabbing nine boards, while on the defensive end he blocks five shots and altered countless others. His clutch free throws down the stretch preserved the Minutemen's 92-82 upset of the pre-season top-ranked team.

Scott Barsby pitches masterpiece in the Beanpot Championship game — The sophomore righthander gave up only four hits while dishing out a career-high 11 strikeouts, a far cry from his previous mark of four. In addition, Barnsby did not allow a single walk in the Minutemen's 1-0 win over Northeastern in its first ever Beanpot Tournament Championship. With all the excitement of playing in Fenway Park and pressure of performing well in a tournament, some thought should be a "Boston only" affair. Barnsby stepped up and earned the win in the historic event.

Carmelo Travieso clutch treys against Pitsburgh — With the Minutemen's perfect season hanging in the balance and their superstar Camby registering his fourth straight DNP, the streak shooting guard caught fire behind the three point arc. Travieso nailed seven of 14 from downtown, including one from the seat of his pants, helping rally UMass from a 12-point deficit in the first half to get to overtime where the Minutemen prevailed 79-71. Travieso finished with a game high 27.

Luis Limardo netting 12 against Richmond — The water polo team's top sniper broke his own record by tickling the twine 12 times in a 25-13 thrashing of the lowly Spiders. In that same game, Limardo also broke his own team marks for points (13) and attempts (18). Limardo's effort in that game helped John Luviano to set the UMass single-season record for assists with eight.

Danielle Henderson's no-hitter in the NCAA play-in game — When the freshman took to the mound for game one of an NCAA play-in series against Marist College, good things were expected, but a no-hitter that was just an error away from a perfect game exceeded even the loftiest expectations. Henderson blew fastballs past Marist batters, which mixed with the debut of her knuckleball proved nearly lethal. Perhaps more impressive was that Henderson was called upon to pitch the second game just a half-an-hour later, and struck out eight in a complete-game four-hit shutout.



The UMass football ground game single game record was shattered this passed season with frank Alessio's 337 yard game, which included three touchdowns of more than 70 yards.

like the training schedule. But in college, it's a whole different ballgame."

"Rebecca is solid as a rock," LaFreniere said. "She is an athlete and a half, something many people don't realize because cross country is not a big headliner.

"And what I think is even more unpressive than her dedication to her sport, is the fact that she has a heart of gold," she continued. "Nowadays, it's really unusual when a star athlete is as modest and unassuming as Rebecca. In a day and age when we're so used to stars having big heads and huge egos, she's a refreshing change."

Only a sophomore, Donaghue has a bright future ahead of her in the world of collegiate running. Both LaFreniere and men's cross country coach, Ken O'Brien believe the success Donaghue achieved this year is just the tip of the iceberg.

"I call her the baby-face assassin, because she just attacks," O'Brien said.

"She takes no prisoners," LaFreniere said.

Sophomore Rebbecca Donaghue ran away from the competition leading UMass cross country to their third A-10 title in five years. Individually, Donaghue placed 50th in the country at the NCAA Nationals.

■ juniors

Winter set in upon us and, well, you know what happened thanks to juniors Marcus Camby, Carmelo Travieso and Edgar Padilla. There's no need to elaborate here.

The women's team also had a strong all-junior backcourt as Beth Kuzmeski and Sabriya Mitchell led the Minutewomen to their first ever NCAA Tournament appearance, with an at-large bid and an eight-seed.

The hockey team was fueled by a variety of juniors, none more potent though than Rob Bonneau, who tied for the team-lead with 46 points, and led the squad with 30 assists. Warren Norris also proved to be a valuable asset, with solid play and strong face off skills.

Leading the women's gymnastics team to their first A-10 championship was junior Tara Swartz who was named the conference's Gymnast of the Year. Swartz set a school-record with her 9.950 in the uneven bars against Bridgeport and was the team's lone qualifier at the NCAA Eastern Regionals.

The men got strong efforts from juniors Gabe Columbus and Ruslan Shupak as they had a solid season. Columbus posted season-bests in the All-Around and horizontal bar, while Shupak was solid in the vault and floor exercise.

The women's track and field team won its first A-10 title, led in the sprints and hurdles by Anya Forrest.

Spring slowly crept into the Pioneer Valley, but men's lacrosse attackman Brendan Glass was anything but slow in his rise up the scoring charts. Glass netted 33 goals this year, placing him amongst the nation's leaders in goals-per-game, and became only the fourth junior in the school's illustrious lacrosse history to net 100 career goals.

After not pitching in either of her first two seasons, Liz Wagner fought off her nagging back injuries to win the A-10's Pitcher of the Year award, leading the league with a 1.10 ERA overall which put her amongst the national leaders.

Baseball rolled to first place in the A-10 East thanks to the play of Nate Murphy in centerfield and at the plate where he led the team in home runs, the slick fielding and consistent batting of All A-10 first teamer Brad Gorrie at shortstop, and talented pitching duo of Jason Bennett and Steve Levy.

The women's lacrosse team got off to a slow start, but picked up speed after Michelle Warrington was moved from a defensive midfield position to a more offensive one. There was a marked improvement in the team's overall play with the slight change.

munity was struck by the loss of water polo and swimming stand out Greg Menton. Menton was the fastest swimmer on coach Russ Yarworth's water polo squad winnning every game starting swim off.

Volleyball

The past fall proved to be a landmark season for the Massachusetts volleyball team. Coach Bonnie Kenny and the Minutewomen finished the season 24-10 overall, 15-5 in the A-10. In pre-season play, UMass swept the field of the Hofstra/Spalding Invitational before taking second place in the annual UMass Invitational losing to Syracuse in the final round as captain Giza Rivera and freshman Michelle Paciorek were named to the All-Tournament squad.

The Minutewomen also played the first ever volleyball game in the William D. Mullins Center as they hosted UConn (and lost) in preparation for the NCAA Tournament which was hosted in the Mullins. UMass closed out its season winning 12 of its last 13 games before losing to URI 3-0 in the A-10 Tournament in the Curry Hicks Cage.

Field Hockey

The Minutewomen finished out the season with a mark of 9-11 after playing a rigorous schedule filled with nationally ranked opponents.

Kyle Rothenberger carried UMass throughout the season and took home All-America honors. Senior Streya Valla battled through a season plagued by injuries to help carry the team.

Men's Cross Country

The UMass harriers were the third team to earn an A-10 Championship title. The Minutemen beat the second place team by 18 points, as Matt Behl and Mike Macieko were the first two runners across the line for Massachusetts. In addition, UMass took fifth place in the IC Invitational at Franklin Park in Boston and fourth place in regionals.

Women's Cross Country

The women's cross country squad teamed up with the men's for dual A-10 Championships. The Minutewomen edged out conference powerhouse St. Joseph's 46-49 as Rebecca Donaghue crossed the tape in second place with a time of 17:38, just nine seconds off pace of the first place runner. Jen Waeger took fourth place overall finishing in 18:13 as Katie Greenia took tenth overall with a time of 18:45.

The team took fifth place in ECAC's as Donaghue's first place showing earned her a spot in the NCAA's where she finished in 50th place.

Women's Tennis

The Minutewomen earned the New England Championship title. At the beginning of the season, coach Judy Dixon had some doubts about the maturity level of her squad as she had only two returning upperclassmen. Regardless, the UMass squad finished the year with an 8-1 record and used the off season to prepare for the A-10 Championships which they would host in the spring.

Men's Tennis

The Minutemen finished their season with a record of 8-1. Freshman Todd Cheney finished with a final fall record of of 6-2. Fellow freshman Jason Blind finished out the season undefeated.

A pleasant addition to the squad was foreign exchange student Gregor Rummel. After losing his first match of the season, Rummel didn't drop a match the rest of the way with a final count of 7-1. Senior co-captains Justin Lynn and Darren Tow will need to fill in the gap for No. 5 singles player Ankur Batshyu, who had to withdraw from the University the week before the final match of the season due to medical problems.

"We've taken a giant step," said UMass coach Judy Dixon, "We've had some things really go our way. Gregor Rummel coming on this team we something that was unexpected, and he made a huge difference."

the NCAAs as the nation's top seed.

Central Florida was the first step along the way for the Minutemen. The Golden Knights hung around for a half before being blown out, by among other things Edgar Padilla's quick hands, in the second half. In the second round a perky Brevin Knight wouldn't let his Stanford team roll over until a 10-foot Bright jumper finally put the Cardinal to rest.

On to Georgia and a defensive masterpiece against Arkansas that ended shortly after it started as the Minutemen trap broke the back of the Razorbacks early and the freshman laden squad in the Sweet Sixteen.

The Elite Eight was rumored to be the final stop for the UMass express, as they were pitted against Allen Iverson and Georgetown. That couldn't have been further from the truth as the Minutemen put the clamps on the Hoya scoring machine and were never threatened after halftime. UMass advanced with the 86-62 dismantling of John Thompson's bunch the stage was set for a highly anticipated rematch with Kentucky in the Final Four.

It was in the Meadowlands where the top two teams in the land all year met in what was billed as the actual National Championship. A valiant second half run led by Camby and Giddel Padilla, cut a double digit Wildcat lead to three with five minutes to play, but UMass could not get any closer and the unprecedented ride finally stopped at the hands of Pitino and his eventual champions.

Even though 1995-96 went by without a national title for the Minutemen, the 35 wins were still tops in the country and the season overall will be the one which all other UMass hoop teams will be measured against.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian wishes to thank its faithful readers and advertisers for another successful year as New England's largest daily college newspaper.

No matter where we are sports will always touch us

Just so far removed from the day I'm 18, posted the final story of my illustrious career in the Collegian on her bulletin board. Knowing that stories I wrote, were touching both people that I knew, and ones I probably never will, meant the world to me. It was a sense of purpose to shine light on things I felt were important and to get the whole story out to the public.

I was fortunate enough to get a chance at greatness, and I would like to think I'm on my way there.

If there is one thing in the world that I feel transcends everyone, it is the world of sports. No matter what part of this or any country one might travel to, athletics and the spirit of competition can always be found. It's inbedded within human nature that we strive to do one better than the opposition and covering that strife is what I find so appealing. The clashing of powerhouses, cinderella stories and outrageous events that make the sporting world what it is today brings out a joy in myself that now I can put down on paper, hopefully for all to enjoy through my words.

But no matter how many game stories, side bars and columns I write could ever describe to Mr./Mrs. Joe Q. Public what it means to know these people first hand. All athletes are human, that is something that I needed to become a reporter to figure out, even though I have played sports since I have been able to walk. Whether it was Nikki Ahrenholz forgetting about her interview with me, or Mike Jarvis discussing Philadelphia cuisine in the hotel elevator before the A-10 semifinals, they are just like you and me.

I wish everyone would realize that they are just as human as the rest of us.

When Rachel LeDuc scored in double overtime to knock off Hartford, I've never wanted to run onto a field more and celebrate with the team. I was so lucky to have done that game on the radio, because had I not, there would be no reason for me to have yelled as loud as I did. Not only did the goal send her team to the second round of the tournament but broke the single season goal mark at UMass.

My hand still hurts from punching the press table when Rigo Nunez drew the Hagrant foul against St. Joe's to send that game into overtime and clinch the regular season A-10 title, as everyone in the Pioneer Valley could be heard shouting, "Rigo! Rigo!"

In a program that was starting form scratch, the women's lacrosse team is lucky enough to have had Michelle Warrington come to

Justin C. Smith

UMass and play for the Minutewomen. She's just one of the women on that underappreciated that will some day remembered for making that team yet another success story on this campus.

What these people all have in common is that they walked on to programs and made a large impact, even though their chances of having any fame or fortune equalling the hard work and long hours put in seemed minascule when their college careers started. They are success stories in every sense of the phrase and I envy them because they got to live out their dreams by extending their athletic careers. All walk-ons should feel as fortunate as they do, though their accomplishments on the field may pale in comparison, just by making an attempt and wearing a varsity letter, they deserve similar accolades.

I would like to send thanks to the many people on this campus who made the experience of writing for this paper as pleasureable as it has been. First and foremost to Bill Strickland & Co. in Boyden who made doing everything this year so much easier, even though we couldn't always reciprocate. Coaches — Rudy, I promise to never again ask a question where the answer I get is just, "Yes." Mallen — When do we get to see the Alumni Cup anyway? Cannella — now let me get it straight, it's "control possession, convert on offense and not give up tranisition chances," right? Oh, and coach Cal I really am sorry I picked Georgetown in my NCAA pool.

To AG, we did so many game on the radio together I feel like you'll be cheating on me when you call the Falcons next year — BP, I told you that there was nothing to worry about. From Presidential Apts. to the clincher at Fenway to JQA to Delano's to Atlanta, we did it together. — El Torbino, the seats may have only been balcony, but the times spent together were promanade, all the way. — Candice, I owe you more than anyone will ever know, because I trusted you and you came through for me. I can never thank you enough. Rock on! — Bryce, I have never laughed harder than when you and Tim White night edited together, "With your bad breath, onion rings!"— MattyV, I would have never seen all I saw without you by my side to help me get where I am today. Our Alumni Cup call together was simply awesome. And by the way how was the back staircase?

In my time here, I have always thrown myself into to this so it may be printed as well as I could make it. I may not have always succeeded, but the Collegian and everyone I have associated with here, will forever be a part of me.

In his heart, Justin C. Smith always will be a Collegian Columnist.

Learning it's about more than just sports

When I first came down to write for the Collegian as a sophomore, I wasn't sure of what it would lead to. I wasn't entirely sure if I wanted to be a sports-writer for the rest of my life. But now three years later, I'm pretty sure this is the profession I want to have, and the experiences I've had as a Collegian writer have been some of the best of my life.

At first, just covering a game was exciting, but as I wrote more and more, it got better — NCAA women's soccer games... A-10 women's hoop tourney... National Women's Invitational Tournament... NCAA softball games... numerous road trips to various parts of the country to cover the No. 1 men's hoop team... March Madness.

Never in my wildest dreams did I expect to actually cover the NCAA tournament, let alone the Final Four. After years of watching the Final Four on television, never, ever did I expect to see UMass in it. Never. And I certainly never expected to actually be able to watch it happen in person on press row with the likes of Mike Lupica or Bob Ryan.

It was a helluva ride, and sometimes I still can't believe I was even a part of it. Who knows if I'll ever be able to cover an event like that again. But if I'm stuck at some weekly newspaper out in the middle of nowhere 20 years from now, I'll still be able to say I covered the first Minuteman team to advance to the Final Four — and the first time is usually always remembered the most. Being on the court after the Minutemen advanced to the Final Four was a feeling I'll never forget.

I've experienced a lot over these past four years, but perhaps what I'll remember most from my time at UMass is what I've learned — mainly that there is a lot more to life than sports, although I haven't always felt that way.

I used to eat, sleep and breath sports. I was a typical jock who could always be found on some field playing ball or inside somewhere watching a game on television. Sports were my life. I often thought I wouldn't want to live if I never was able to play a sport or even watch one again. I was all about staying home on a Friday or Saturday night to watch a Red Sox game or a Bulls playoff win, instead of going out. But now, it's just not the same for me.

Sure, I still love sports. I still get a rush seeing a last-second win twomen's soccer against Hartford. NCAA first round, Rachel LeDuc scores with 1:4 seconds left, are you serious? It's still unbelievable to me) or seeing Michael Jordan defy gravity (can you say the best of all-time? I thought you could), but it just doesn't hold the same meaning for me anymore. Working at a nursing home for the past seven years has taught me a lot more about life than some stupid game.

It's hard to cheer for some greedy bastard making millions of dollars a year who only cares about his statistics. Head-butting referees? Sitting out the last seconds of a game because the play wasn't designed for you? What's up with that? I have more important things on my mind now than caring about whether or not the Bulls are going to win their fourth championship (a given).

Candice Flemming

I've had the pleasure of interacting with a lot of outstanding coaches at UMass, but two of them stick out in my mind.

• Jim Rudy. Never have I met a coach who loved soccer so much. Out of all the teams I covered, the women's soccer beat was probably my favorite, I loved it. You and your team brought my love for the game of soccer back, after being away from it for many years. Your program continues to be one of the best in the country year-in and year-out. Bring home that national championship next season — wherever I end up, I'll be rooting for you.

• Joanie O'Brien. Just from covering your team and watching some of your tough practices, I learned more than I ever did in four years of playing high school ball. What you have done with that program is amazing, you guys are on your way. I just have one request though, take care of those damn Huskies next year.

Thanks...

— to the media relations staff, especially Bill Strickland, I really respect the job that all of you do. Thanks always for helping us do our job better.

— To my staff, thanks for putting up with me. I'll miss all of you, well most of ya. — To BP, the next time you witness a clincher at Fenway, I damn well better be with you. — To El Torbino, even though you aggravated me a helluva a lot these past two years, I've always thought you were an outstanding writer, even for a puckhead. — To Mr. NBA: DC, I'm sorry your Knicks suck so bad, but you could always become a Bulls fan. — To Justin, you've been my associate from the start and you've always worked extremely hard, this Year in Sports Issue rocks. We've had our quarrels, but I've always respected your opinion and appreciated all the work you've done for me, even if you are a Twinkie. — To Matt and Bryce, I wish both of your asses good luck in finding jobs, and thanks for the guidance you've given me over the years. — To the two future editors, Stamm [Warmm] and Casey [the junior rocker], good luck. I hope you're able to accomplish all the goals you set. I know you two are capable of continuing the "storied" tradition of the Collegian sports page.

As I leave this hell-hole, I only have three things to say:

• Dolores O'Riordan rocks. Yeah, I've always wanted to write that in one of my stories, but I've never been able to find a story that related to her or The Cranberries. I guess I should start writing for Arts — ya right.

• Scully... Mulder... I just like the sound of that.

• Rock.

Candice Flemming was a Collegian Columnist who rocked.

Carmelo Travieso not only was the Minutemen's best threat behind the three point arc, but shut down the likes of Stephon Marbury (above) and Alan Iverson during the Minutemen's 35-2 campaign.

UMass faces

Frank Alessio football — Wound up third–team All Yankee Conference after leading the league in rushing with 1,276 yards on 161 carries. He rushed for 337 of them on a record–setting afternoon against BU, carrying the ball just 21 times.

Sarah Baker women's swimming — One of the fastest sprint swimmers all–time at UMass. She was a consistent first place finisher in the 50 and 100 yard freestyle events. Led the team to a 2nd place finish at the New England's and to a third place finish in the A–10 Championships.

Rob Bonneau hockey — Set the UMass Div. I single season assist record with 30 to go along with 16 goals. He teamed up with Manganaro as the third best one–two punch in Hockey East.

Donta Bright men's hoop — the senior co–captain was an intrigal part of the Minutemen's run to the final four earning All A–10 second team honors. Bright set a school record with 40 straight free throw attempts made.

Sam Cardenas softball — Maybe the most dangerous lead–off hitter in the Atlantic 10, nobody hits the ball with more authority than Cardenas. She finished the regular season with a .333 batting average and 39 RBIs.

Muchie Dagliere baseball — The second baseman was one of the most consistent forces for the Minutemen. He led the Atlantic 10 in batting three straight weeks, and was the A–10 Player of the Week in April. Only a sophomore, Dagliere led the team in batting average (.434), and was named first team All–Atlantic 10.

Dana Dingle men's hoop — Often the most overlooked player on the Minuteman squad, this senior became UMass' all–time games played leader with 137 in his four–year career. An All–A–10 Third Team selection this season, Dingle also scored the 1,000 point of his career in a NCAA game against Central Florida.

Brendan Glass men's lacrosse — The junior attackman continued to add to his status as one of the top attackmen in the nation with 33 goals on the season. He became only the fourth UMass junior to surpass the 100 career goal plateau (102).

Jessica Griffth women's swim/water polo — A strong contributor all year in the 100 and 200 yard breatstroke events and medley relays. An excellent goalie, playing the position for only her second year at any level. Set new single game saves record with 12 against Princeton in Eastern Championships.

Melissa Gurlie women's hoop — Gurlied tag–teamed with fellow co–captain Octavia Thomas for a record breaking year. In her four year tenure as a Minutewoman Gurlie started in every single game. A four year All– Conference honoree, she set the record for blocks with 168.

Kim Gutridge softball — Followed up winning the A– 10 Rookie of the Year award her freshman year by winning the A–10 Player of the Year trophy her sophomore season. Gutridge's sure–handed fielding at first base was instrumental in leading her team to its second consecutive NCAA Regional appearance.

Danielle Henderson softball — The freshman pitcher took charge as the postseason arrived for the softball team, being named the Most Outstanding performer of the Atlantic 10 Tournament. She followed that up with a no–hitter against Marist in the NCAA play–in.

John Kasselakis men's lacrosse — The sophomore first–year starter played like a veteran between the pipes for the Minutemen. He was thoroughout the year and frequently brilliant in net

Dennis Kelly men's lacrosse — The senior long stick midfielder continued to prove that he is one of the top defensive players in the nation. He regularly drew the coverage assignment on the opposing team's top player and he consistently shut them down.

Rachel LeDuc women's soccer — This senior was one of the premier clutch players in UMass history, scoring 12 game–winning goals in her career tying a UMass record. But perhaps her biggest goal came in overtime against Hartford in the first round of the NCAAs, when she scored with 1:4 seconds left advancing UMass.

Marc LeFeberve men's track — A consistent performer for coach Ken O'Brien, Marc has lead the throwing corps on the Massachusetts squad. He owns the fourth best shot put throw in UMass history and has also showed tremendous talent in the discus.

Luis Limardo men's water polo — Will leave UMass as one of the most prolific scorers in men's water polo history. In the Minutemen's most succesful season ever, Limardo, a co–captain, was named Eastern Player of the Year and a third team All–American.

Erin Lynch women's soccer — A first team All American defender, Lynch was the anchor of the Minutewomen back line which allowed a mere .75 goals per game. The junior three–year starter was also named A–10 player of the year for the second year in a row.

Sal Maganaro hockey — The senior right wing led the Minutemen in goals with 23 in his final collegiate season and proved to be the heart of the Minuteman team

Alex Mujica men's water polo — Mujica was one of the best goal keepers in the East this past season. Was named an honorable mention All–American. Mujica is the all–time UMass record holder in saves and quarters played in goal

Nate Murphy baseball — Pre–Season A–10 Player of the Year, Murphy is one of the team's leading sluggers. Throughout the season, his presence in center field has led many UMass baseball fans to believe that if a ball was hit anywhere between either 370 foot sign, its as good as an automatic out.

Rebecca Myers women's soccer — This aggressive junior continued to establish herself as one of the premier midfieiders in the nation, finishing with 25 points on eight goals and nine assists. For her career she has 30 goals, 24 assists and 84 total points.

Edgar Padilla men's hoop — Often called by UMass coach John Calipari, the best point guard he's ever coached, this junior filled Derek Kellogg's shoes nicely, along the way becoming UMass' all–time leader for steals in a game (12), a season (108) and a career (184).

Brian Regan hockey — The goaltender was much better than his numbers, helping to spark the quickly improving UMass hockey team. He finished with seven wins and a goals against average of 4.50.

Justin Reimer, football — Led the Yankee Conference in total tackles (150) and solo tackles (95, a UMass record) last season. For his efforts named to both All New England and YanCon first teams in his first season at outside linebacker.

Giza Rivera volleyball — When this Puerto Rican native was sidelined for a few weeks with an injury, the Minutewomen were a different team. The junior outside hitter still managed to lead her team in kills, however, and always served as the go–to–gal in crunch time.

Kyle Rothenberger field hockey — The junior midfielder was the on–field leader and clutch player for the Minutewomen. Was named to the Atlantic 10, All– Conference team.

Dave Siljanovski men's soccer — The junior was instrumental to the men's soccer team, which enjoyed one of its most successful seasons ever, advancing to the A–10 title game. Siljanovski placed second in the nation in assists through the regular season.

Tara Swartz women's gym — This junior jelped lead her squad to the Atlantic 10 Championship. The Minutewomen's most consistent performer was named the A–10 Gymnast of the Year on a team in the hunt for the national championship in the near future.

Liesl Sitton women's tennis — The cornerstone in rebuilding the UMass tennis program. She played at No. 1 singles all fours years in compiling a 72–13 record, and led the team to their first ever New England title in the fall, and to fourth place finishes the past two Springs at A–10's.

Octavia Thomas women's hoop — The senior co– captain combined with co–captain Melissa Gurile to form one of the most powerful front courts in the A–10. Thomas set the school record in rebounds with 851. She led her team to a school record 20 win season and its first ever NCAA Tournament appearence.

Tom Toye men's track — This freshman sprinter took his competition by storm in the winter season setting a mens indoor record in the 200m with a time of . He provides tremendous depth sprinting corps as he competes in the 400m event as well as various relays.

Carmelo Travieso men's hoop — This junior established himself as one of the premier shooting guards in the country and helped form one of the best backcourts with Padilla. He finished as the third–leading scorer on the team and was UMass top three–point threat, hitting 104 on the season.

Jen Waeger cross country — This senior was instrumental in guiding UMass to the Atlantic 10 title. After taking antibiotics for three weeks, Waeger battled pain and fatigue throughout the A–10 Championships to take fourth place over and second for the Minutewomen with a time of 18:13.

Liz Wagner softball — After not pitching in either of her first two years due to back injuries, Wagner proved to be well worth the wait in 1996, being named the A–10 Pitcher of the Year for posting a 14–7 mark with a 1.08 ERA.

Michelle Warrington women's lacrosse — The junior walk–on has been a leader from the midfield position. A stalwart at both ends of the field, she complemented her defense by potting 17 goals and helping on five others. Also takes the majority of face–offs for the Minutewomen.

Misty eyed memories

Five in Philadelphia
(l to r) Dan Welch, Mike Corey, Justin C. Smith, Greg Corey and Brian Perillo followed the team to the City of Brotherly Love to cover the Minutemen's fifth straight Atlantic 10 tournament title.

Reflecting back on the year gone by, many a moment in the professional, as well as our own personal, world of sports have brought a tear to our eyes. So as is custom the Collegian sports staff shares its misty–eyed memories.

Free agent signings

Luke Meredith — When you think about the year in sports, most people would mention Cal Ripken, Northwestern, the Bulls winning 70 and, of course, our beloved team's journey to the Meadowlands. But for me, my most lasting memory occurred on a scorchingly hot day last July 4th. I worked at a sports camp in the Berkshires over the summer and I took my under–11 all star baseball team to our rival camp for a game. The other team had kids 2–3 years older than mine, but my boys played as hard as any pro team I've ever seen. They rallied from a 7–2 deficit to get within 1 run with two outs in the top of the 7th, and had the bases loaded. In their quest to win, the other team put its starting pitcher (who was like 6–foot–2 and had a beard at 13, I swear) back in the game and he struck out my best player. This is illegal in Little League, but my boys handled the scandal with class and grace that belied their age. There were a lot of tears shed on the bus ride home, but I've never been prouder of a group of human beings in my entire life. And if they had looked closely, they would have seen their coach a little misty–eyed as well.

Steve Reich — Frank Vogt choking by missing two free throws, but getting the rebound and putting it in, for a last second victory advancing my intramural basketball team into the next round of playoffs.

Mike Nam — I'll always remember the Rainbow Classic over winter break sitting with my friend from Syracuse at his house until the wee hours of the morning watching our beloved Minutemen thrash the Orange.

There was also my team's classic co–rec softball run where we finished 4–2–2, only playing one game which we lost. It was great to finally play one.

Meeting the members of One–by–One was special. They are a group that met here at UMass, children of Holocaust survivors and children of Nazi soldiers and officers.

Oh, it was nice getting my name in the paper too.

Jen Ryder — My first experience with UMass basketball will always be remembered. Midnight Madness at the Mullins Center. Fans are crazy and there I am, at the shootout. Sean McDonough announcing as I'm hitting the three, just beating the buzzer, the crowd cheering me on.

Okay, of course there are some memorable sports moments out there. Rachel LeDuc's winning goal against Hartford. My first hockey game ever where Sal Manganaro scored the winning goal with less than a minute less against Merrimack. Oh yeah, and then there's the basketball team. Final Four. A–10 champs again. National Player and Coach of the Year.

I'll never forget the time when my friend and I met Marcus Camby. We were in JQA and just happened to be on his floor. He walked out of his room and I said "Hey Marcus." He walked to the trash room, came back and my friend says, "Hey, are you Marcus Camby?" Of course he answers yes and she asks another question, which to this day I still can't believe she asked. "Gee, you're pretty tall. How tall are you?" At this point I begin to walk down the hall pretending not to be with her. Marcus answers 6–foot–11 or something and she says bye as I head for the stairs.

For all the seniors bidding us farewell, buenos suerte. Candice — thanks for helping me to get Nolan Richardson's autograph, even though he said he didn't have time when his game wasn't for five hours. Matt — every time I was at something basketball related you were there. Nice showing at the Mullins Center for the Final Four game. Justin — someday my team will beat you up in Sylvan. Water polo season is over.

Signed to long term contracts

Steven Grant — 57 seconds left. Intramural Basketball. Last game of the season, playing against the only team that had managed to beat us so far. We're down by three (47– 44?). I drive the lane, get fouled, and the ball goes in. So now its 47–46, and I have a chance to tie it with a free throw. So I focus on the rim, think about how the great ones make this shot, dribble the ball a couple times, and launch a brick. Man, it wasn't even close. So they get the ball, and score the next four points on free throws because we're trying to foul to stop the clock. 51–46.

About 15 seconds left. Looking grim. A kid on my team misses a 10–footer, so I grab the board and put it in. Heh–heh. 51–48. We quickly foul. So now there's seven seconds left, and they're at the foul line, up three. He misses the first. Okay there's still hope. He misses the second. Yes! They get the rebound. Dough! The clock's ticking. The kid who grabbed the rebound told my friend Tammy that I sucked after we played them the first game. Grrrrrr. He turns around to run out the clock. My majesty comes from behind, steals the ball, and races toward that three–point line. I get there, stop, fake, watch a guy fly past me, and shoot. Swish. Times up. We win in overtime.

Ohwhattafeelin. (By the way, I didn't mention the other team only played with four guys in overtime (because they had an exam) because the ending might not have sounded as good.)

Thanks Candice, Justin, Matt, Bryce, etc. I respect all the time you guys have put in the past couple of years, and wish you all the best. And if you ever need someone to hurt someone for you...

Mike Corey — There is no doubt that my best memory from this second semester, was when I had the pleasure of filling in for our wonderful sports editor Candice (Thank You) to go to the men's basketball Atlantic 10 Championships in Philadelphia. I went down with four seniors, and besides riding "hump" on most of the trip, and making a few freshman mistakes ('77), I had a great time. Along with Juice from the Collegian, and Greg, BP, and Dan from WMUA radio we did it all. We toured the city from the "Rocky" steps, to Independence Hall, the Liberty Bell, Veterans Memorial stadium, and the Spectrum.

The games were exciting, meeting Bill Cosby was great, and chilling with the media, cheerleaders, and the AD in our Hotel bar after the games was definitely some good times (Yes!). And oh yeah, who could forget getting a picture at the Hooters restaurant with the waitresses. Let it ring! Along with plundering the "Streets of Philadelphia", watching the way bums ask for money, helping people with their cars, running into them ourselves, and having some good ol' Philly cheesesteaks, this was a trip that will never be forgotten.

Tooling on some fat boys in the media basketball game was rad, and watching the Minutemen loft up their fifth consecutive A–10 trophy was awesome. Thanks guys for making it an outstanding trip.

And thanks to all the seniors from the Collegian and WMUA radio for making this a fantastic year. You guys have been great, and I appreciated all you did for myself and everyone else. Good luck to each and everyone of you, you all deserve the very best.

Jay Warner — The University and the men's swim teams dedication to the memory of Greg Menton.

Leigh Torbin — Oh, the sights and sounds of the semester. The Temple softball team requesting and line dancing to Shania Twain's "Any Man of Mine," during a rain delay. All those hockey ties. Yeah, and that Final Four thing was pretty cool too.

But for the next two years, I might not see another road–trip quite as perfectly messed up as that hip, happening Saturday night in Orono. Between losing the game, Hurricane Fatpig, the blackout at the game, the blackout in the whole county, the candlelit bar, the bouncer who took his job way too seriously, the lounge singer who only knew "Runaround," by Blues Traveler and then the incessant fire alarm. Of course it didn't become truly perfect until 5 a.m. when we found out the tough was that we'd left the lights on in the room. Bangor's own Stephen King couldn't have made it any worse.

Collegian sayonaras: Bryce, I might never meet a funnier human being. I guess comedy's all down–hill from here...oh, and what about that $10k? — BP. The Diehard, keep the faith, the Sox shall overcome someday. — Candice, you always wanted the best for this paper, and thought that involved large orange balls, while I wanted the best for it, but I thought first of black rubber disks. Contrary to public opinion I never despised you although it often seemed like it, for as the great Dylan said "we always did feel the same, we just saw it from a different point of view."

Juice and Matty, I won't say farewell to two great friends and pucktheads, because I know you will be here for the Army hockey game next year, and if not, I will find you, kick your ass, and buy you a beer because I'll be able to do that in this country then.

Fred Hurlbrink, Jr. — I have two: (1) Giddel Padilla. Here's a guy who was interviewed for the basketball preview magazine by one of the Collegian's newest sports staffers...me...and he came off the bench in the National Semi–final game and nearly pulled the Minutemen out of the fire and into the National Championship with one of the most gutsy performances I've ever witnessed. I was so proud. (2) Greg Menton. When I was watching the 11 p.m. news one night over winter break, my ears perked up when I heard "UMass." As the report of Greg's sudden death went on, I could barely hold myself together. I had yet to meet him, but from talking with coach Yarworth and other members of the water polo team, I knew he was special, and I, as a reporter was losing something too.

Here's one little "misty" memory, anyway. Driving to the Campus Center during a rain delay of the Atlantic 10 Softball tournament, Leigh Torbin, my brilliant softball beat partner, saw Amy Powell, a senior second sacker on the softball team, and thought it would be nice to pull over and see if she needed a ride anywhere. So, he pulled to the curb and consequently hit a deep pot hole filled with rain water that nearly drenched Amy — she didn't want the ride.

Casey Kane — Even with all the memories that came from watching this year's hoop team, there is one that will always stick out. When Giddel Padilla was called upon to play in the national semi–final game against Kentucky I'm pretty sure everyone watching in the Mullins Center said, "Giddel? He's putting Giddel in?" For me, it was the first time I spoke in the second half (I take hoop very seriously).

Giddel made everyone in Mullins, the Meadowlands, and the nation realize that he deserved to be there on that court.

When I attended the Greg Menton number retirement ceremony, one person stood out. Men's water polo and swim coach Russ Yarworth presented Menton's brother Stephen with Greg's warm–up suit. After stoically accepting the suit, Stephen went to his seat on the bleachers, clutched the jacket to his chest and cried openly. Seeing his outpouring of emotion made me realize how special love is and how precious life is. It made me not just misty–eyed, it made me cry.

And finally, the baseball team. These guys are great, every one of them. And seeing them win the baseball Beanpot Tournament the first year they were in it, at Fenway Park, was incredible. Ryan Jette playing the wall with ease, Scott Barnsby's pitcher's duel with Northeastern, Nate Murphy's home–run (at Fenway!) against Harvard. And how can I leave out a guy named Muchie? I really enjoyed getting to talk to the baseball guys. As the first player I interviewed on a regular basis to remember my name, you will always have a special place in my heart, Ryan Jette.

Some quick personal mentions: to Coaches O'Brien (Ken), LaFreniere, the other O'Brien (Joanie), and Stone: thank you for making my first year the Collegian so enjoyable. To the media relations staff, thank you for making my first year at the Collegian so easy.

Stamm — This ship is ours to sail now, Candice — I guess I now claim the top–ranking sports–woman position. Who taught me how to do this stuff? You did alright! I learned it from watching you! Rock! Justin — You are the best roommate I never officially had. Matt — Thank you. For everything, thank you.

Chris Stamm — My Misty–eyed memory inevitably involves an NCAA hoop game, however, one that I actually attended. The Minutewomen's three point, overtime loss to Michigan State was a true heart pounder. Sitting in Gampel Pavilion at UConn with a capacity crowd, following a game that was fought closely the whole way, it was UMass hoops at its best. In the final OT minutes, the game could have gone either way. Add to this the prospect of playing national powerhouse UConn with a win, it seemed to be an appropriate ending to a record–setting season. While a win would have been nice, it was the message behind the appearance that seemed more important. UMass women's hoop was a national force to reckon with.

Seniors — Best of luck next year doing what ever it is you decide to do.

Case — Next year, we take the reigns, I can't wait.

Moving up to the Front Office

Brian Perillo — It's been a blast.

(That one line lead is for you, Matty.) Every semester when writing my "Misty–eyed memory," I try to do something different from everyone else and stay away from UMass basketball. However, this year, in my final memory, I must finally conform.

Covering the team this year, and taking road trips to Maryland, D.C., Philly, Atlanta, and finally into my back yard in East Rutherford, has been the pinnacle of my collegiate career. I'll never forget signing a waiver form so that Mike Corey could get into a bar in the City of Brotherly Love. Or how 'bout packing into a car for a grueling 18–hour overnight drive to Atlanta, only to have all 1,080 minutes of drive time become worthwhile when I saw the Minutemen put on those "UMass Final Four" caps for the first time.

I'd like to thank UMass coaches Bonnie Kenny, Joanie O'Brien and Megan Donnelly, as well as their respective teams for making it a pleasure to cover them over the last two years. Thanks also go out to the unheralded media relations staff, who made that job so much easier.

As for goodbyes to my fellow seniors, Bryce — I still say you never said Jim Lonborg. — Candice — Rock on, Sorry I talked the whole time when we met Coach O'Brien.— Juice — Words that will conjure up an image for you: "Take me out to the Ballgame," and thanks for so often, "Taking one for the team." — Matty (sans beard) — Hope they were able to clean the rugs in Philly, and as for the Sox...someday (Maybe if they bring back Dewey.) — And finally, Laura, who always seemed to be there when my best memories of this past year occurred.

Ted Kottler — Sometimes, the difference between winning and losing is indeterminable. Of course, in the NCAA basketball tournament, you can tell you've lost because you won't play any more games. UMass lost its last game of the season, but the National Semifinal against Kentucky, which I attended, remains an incomparable contest. I'm an emotional fan, but I was pretty much spent when the second half got started. And then came the revival. And the re–revival. The 'Cats may have had nine lives, but you couldn't keep track of UMass' total. I'd been planning to attend the 1996 Final Four for years, since it was the first for many seasons in the northeast. And to have UMass in it and playing in such a special game, well, it was worth the implied value of my tickets. Plus, getting to see Steve Fisher and Bill Frieder chat below the stands was one heck of a juxtapostion.

Andrew Bryce — Seeing my girlfriend leave for Spain — oh, I'm sorry, you mean a misty–eyed memory about sports. Let's see... seeing Rene Ingoglia, Breon Parker and Mike Hodges after the last football game of the season at UConn could have turned into a misty moment, but I was successful to remain as an objective reporter. It was great to not see Marcus Camby cry at his press conference, since it was a time of celebration more than reflection. I was not sad at the Minutemen making the Final Four for the same reason as the Camby bit.

So, a round of beers go out to Grizzly Vautour, Perillo, Candice, Justin and Teddy K. We seniors have spent too many an hour in that cauldron, but who knows, we may actually get some sort of paying job. If you need a job at the Seekonk Star, tell me and I'll see what I can do. BP — I said Lonborg, but you were too busy thinking about Laura. Vautour — you hairy bastard, best of luck in the future. Candice — stay loud and obnoxious. You too, Justin, and best wishes to the both of you, may each of your lives be prosperous. Teddy K — when the hell are you leaving this joint? If you're leaving now, God Bless you, Inus Bruno and Milt Cole, and hope that you continue to hate everything in sight.

Oh yeah, Greg and Tim — you guys don't know your asses from your elbows when it comes to sports, but I had to mention your here anyway. We'll be seeing each other post–Collegian, so I'm not shedding a tear for you pansies.

By the way, I'll bet that round of beers that Vautour weeps about something involving the field hockey team.

Matt Vautour — It's hard to be sentimental about just one semester, when four years of memories are all welled up into the lump in my throat. I will warmly remember Megan Donnelly's speech at the field hockey banquet as she summed up the true meaning of pride, and the field hockey team giving me a card to thank me for three years of coverage, I was touched.

I will officially resign my title as the senior member of the UMass hockey media to turn that honor over to my friend Brock Hines. I'll still watch this program from a far however. There is a lot of winning in the future for it.

I will remember sadly sitting in Rafters, when plans for an NCAA men's lacrosse tournament fell through the floor. That team deserved better, but my memory of the program will go far beyond tournaments and wins and losses. This was a helluva bunch of guys, good at what they did, but not egotistical about it.

What may have touched me most this semester, however was the ceremony to honor Greg Menton. The vision of his brother clutching Greg's warmup suit to his chest as he cried, will be with me always. I hope that people remember him and that his spirit will live on.

Quick run through the thank you's. To coaches O'Brien, Hixon, Malfen, Garber, Donnelly, Calipari, and Cannella, and the media relations staff. Thanks for making my job easy. To Thorr Bjorn, Mike Jenkins and Kathy Boyd, I guess nice people can finish first.

Finally to everybody that I've worked with in the Campus Center basement: I love you. A lot of who I am in the future will come from who I've been these past four years, and those four years have been spent in the Collegian.

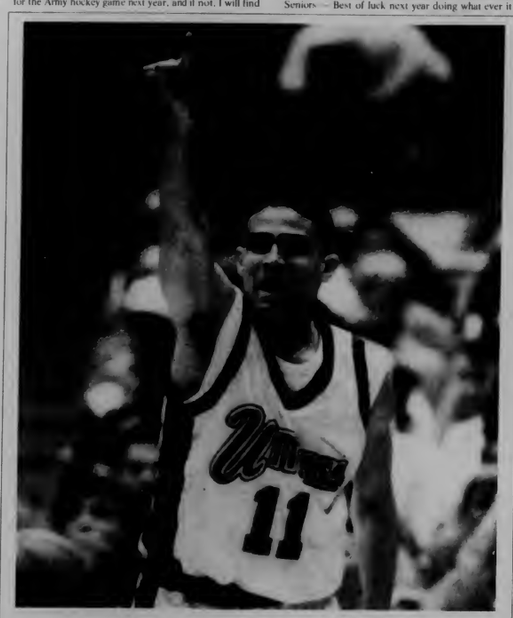
Candice J. Flemming — My best memory of the year was seeing the men's basketball team beat Georgetown to advance to the first Final Four in school history. There I was, trying to act professional sitting on press row, but my emotions were getting the best of me. When there were five minutes left and I knew UMass was going to win, I got teary–eyed and just said forget it. I didn't know if I would ever be in the situation again so I just decided to enjoy myself. As I and two of my co–workers were walking to the post–game press conference, hugging and high–fiving each other, a New England Cable News person was watching us curiously. I said "We're students." And he replied, "Hey, I think you should enjoy it."

I sure did.

Justin C. Smith — Standing on the floor of the Georgia Dome with those 15 guys hupping around at Center Court will forever be with me, it was such a thrill to be a part of this history making basketball season. Hoop wasn't the only highlight though as I was able to also be a part of the NCAA double overtime women's soccer game against Hartford and the Alumni Cup win over Lowell.

But if one moment over this passed year brought tears to my eyes it was watching the men's lacrosse team come off of the Carrier Dome field. Never have I seen 35 men work as one to achieve their ultimate goal and have the rug pulled out from under them. Guys, tourney or no tourney you have so much to be proud of, and made my last beat as great as could be. Thank you.

To next year's bosses, Stamm & Casey — You know what has to be done, I know you can do it, so have fun and make us all proud.



Memories of the Meadowlands
Giddel Padilla came off of the bench to give all UMass fans a thrill as well as his team a spark in the Minutemen's Final Four tilt with Kentucky.

Simpson Impresses Oxford

OXFORD, England (AP) — Britain's verdict on O.J. Simpson: Guilty or innocent, he's smooth.

Simpson left today from a four-day British tour meant to polish his image internationally, pronouncing himself happy with his reception before an Oxford debating society.

"I'm happy with myself. I have a certain peace and things will work out. They always do," he told reporters at Heathrow Airport before boarding a flight that arrived in New York this afternoon.

In New York, Simpson was upbeat about the trip.

"People were terrific there," he said. "They are better informed than most of the pundits in the United States as far as the facts of my case are concerned."

On Tuesday night, Simpson impressed an Oxford crowd with confident protestations of innocence in the slaying his ex-wife Nicole and her friend Ron Goldman. But his decision to ban network television crews from the event meant virtually no one else saw the show.

Speaking at the Oxford Union debating society, he talked racial injustice in America and calmly fielded questions from students crammed into the 120-year-old chamber lined with oak, stained glass and busts of English statesmen.

Mike Kelsen, a 27-year-old Philadelphia native studying Middle Eastern history, said he previously had been certain that Simpson was guilty.

"Now I'm convinced he's either innocent or the devil, because that was an incredible performance," Kelsen said.

Clinton announces money for police

WASHINGTON (AP) — Continuing his anti-crime campaign, President Clinton today announced $604 million in grants for hiring nearly 9,000 police officers "to make the streets of America safer."

The grants, Clinton said, would be used to hire 8,646 fulltime and 472 part-time officers in more than 2,500 locations.

Clinton announced the extra money in a conference call with a dozen mayors, including four from the politically key states of California, Florida and New Jersey.

The officers primarily would be used in community policing programs, which Clinton credited with helping reduce the nation's crime rate over the past four years.

"I know you'll do a lot with these additional officers to make the streets of America safer," Clinton said.

The grants were issued during a week in which Clinton ha focused on law enforcement.

Later, Clinton addressed an annual memorial service on the steps of the U.S. Capitol for 161 police officers slain in the line of duty.

"Police risk everything, and what do we owe them for it?" Clinton said. "Well, when police are walking down the street, they ought to feel like every law-abiding citizen is walking with them.

When they catch a violent criminal, they should feel confident they will be punished promptly and severely. When they enter danger, they should not have to worry that they will be easily outgunned."

"They should always know the fight against crime is a national commitment," Clinton said. "That is what I have tried to bring to our country."

Monday, Clinton announced efforts to crack down on street gangs and tighten penalties for juvenile crime. Also, he has voiced support for the death penalty and his campaign has issued ads that promote Clinton's support for the Brady Bill handgun control law and a ban on assault weapons.

The grants were issued under the Community Oriented Policing Services program, or COPS, created under the Clinton-pushed crime bill approved by Congress two years ago.

UMass offers resources for student well-being

By Daniel Sullivan
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts has over 26,000 students, faculty and staff on campus. The school has its own post office, mailing zip-code, over 50 living accommodations and a police department. The campus is its own city — hence, the people living within it need to keep safety in mind.

The Department of Public Safety, housed in Dickinson Hall, is the center for police officers. The building is behind the W.E.B. DuBois Library, adjacent to the tennis courts.

A 24-hour hotline is available for anyone needing police assistance. The police emergency numbers are 5-3111 and 911. The general number to contact the police is 5-2121.

The campus has over 72 emergency help phones located at various areas. To access the phone, press the emergency button, and a police dispatcher is automatically alerted. The officer is sent to the location of the phone without a need to dial or have a conversation.

An Escort Service for students is also offered by the police department. Currently, two vans are available for riding transportation. The vans are available for operation between 7 p.m. and 3 a.m. all week, and can be accessed by calling 5-2123. Students must specify the building in which they currently are, and the dispatcher will designate a pickup point.

A walking escort is also available to students. A team of trained students accompany the person wanting an escort. This service is available between 5 p.m. to 3 a.m. all week. The police receive 15,000 to 20,000 requests a year for an escort. The walking escort can also be accessed by calling 5-2123 with the same procedures as the riding escort.

"We encourage that students use the walking escort to reduce the backlog on the riding escort," said Lawrence Holmes, the deputy chief of security at Public Safety.

Students are advised to report any crimes which they witness. An unreported crime means less police protection, according to a soon-to-be published guide for students' safety.

"Safety and security is everyone's responsibility," Holmes said. "Working together we can prevent crime. Community solutions to community problems."

The Everywoman's Center has two offices to help students in various means for counselling in issues ranging from rape to violence against women. The 24-hour hotline for an issue in relation with sexual violence is 5-0800.

The Center is located at Wilder Hall, behind Morrill Science Building, near Franklin Dining Hall and at Nelson House at the entrance of Fraternity and Sorority Park. The phone number for the Everywoman's Center at Wilder Hall is 5-0883.

"Everywoman's Center has a comprehensive rape crises services," said Carol Wallace, the director of the Everywoman's Center.

The center provides workshops for numerous facets of violence against women, she said.

"We have workshops ranging from self esteem, healthy relationships, date rape, and dating violence [and more] — all related to violence against women," Wallace said.

The center works closely with Public Safety, University Health Services and the Dean of Students office, she said.

"We offer intervention, peer counseling, court and medical advocacy," Wallace added.

Potential jobs for incoming UM students

By Anastasia Kudrez
Collegian Staff

One of harsher realities of college is that of its expenses, as students entering the University of Massachusetts will soon find their wallets empty and their savings accounts depleted.

Fortunately, a wide variety of employment opportunities are available to students this fall. From student-run businesses to work study placements, plenty is available at the beginning of each semester.

A walk through the Campus Center and the Student Union Building provides a range of possibilities. Here are just a few of the jobs available and places to consider.

• The University Store prefers work-study, but will hire all students. Marcy Schwartz, the trade book manager, said students should come at the beginning of the semester to apply. The University store hires over 100 students, including those returning. She also recommended students apply to the Munchie Store in the Student Union and the Textbook Annex, located behind the parking garage.

• The Bluewall, the Coffee Shop and the Hatch prefer work study, but will hire all students. Ron Perrault, the operations manager of Food Services in the Campus Center and the Student Union, said many students will be hired this fall. At the Student Government Association looks to freshmen

By Michael Elliott
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts has traditionally been a focal point of student activism in the Northeast. This is due, in part to an immensely active and comprehensive Student Government Association (SGA).

Currently, the SGA is seeking the involvement of incoming students to advocate issues ranging from the quality of food provided by Dining Services to diversity on campus and the state budget.

The SGA primarily consists of three branches, the executive, the legislative and the judiciary.

In addition, it encompasses a lobbying arm, the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy and a student elected member of the University's governing body, the Board of Trustees. Senior Sean Carter will serve as the Amherst campus Student Trustee beginning in July.

The President and Cabinet

The executive branch consists of the President and the Cabinet. Senior Maurice Caston has been serving as President since March 1996, and anticipates a active semester for the fall.

"You will see changes in the cost of the University, the quality of food and in advising services," Caston said. "The student voice will be heard in Whitmore."

The Undergraduate Senate

The legislative branch consists of the Senate, and the offices of the Speaker and Associate Speaker.

The Senate consists of over seventy members which represent on and off-campus residential areas for all undergraduates. Students can become a Senator via elections in the fall. Most Residential Halls are afforded one Senate seat. At-large residential seats are also available.

In addition, Asian American, Latin American, African American and Native American (ALANA) students can be appointed to the Senate as a member of the ALANA caucus.

This past year, the Senate embarked on major legislative initiatives which increased the amount of funds provided by the University to student activities, as well as addressing concerns students have for on-campus safety.

"We have a lot of momentum going into next year," said SGA Senate Speaker Brian Tirrell. "But, we need people to get involved."

The Administration is, by mandate of the Board of Trustees, required to respond either for or against all SGA legislative enactments within 20 days.

"We have quite a bit of power and leverage. We can mobilize students if the administration does not respond," Tirrell said.

"You will see changes in the cost of the University, the quality of food and in advising services. The student voice will be heard in Whitmore."
–New SGA president Maurice Caston

While a extensive apparatus exits within SGA to deal with administrators and legislators at the State House in Boston, on a formal level, civil disobedience has been used effectively in the past to advance student demands.

The most significant work of the Senate is the allocation of the Student Activities Trust Fund (SATF) budget. For academic year 1996-97, the Senate allocated $1.7 to Registered Student Organizations (RSOs), student businesses and agencies.

All students contribute to the SATF through the student activities fee which appears on their semester bill.

"If students care how their money is spent, they should get involved in SGA," Tirrell said.

The Student Judiciary

Matters of dispute within the SGA and its related agencies, such as RSOs, can be settled by the Student Judiciary, which consist of seven Justices, a Associate Justice and a Chief Justice.

All student organizations and the SGA are bound by the SGA Constitution and by-laws to adhere to all Judiciary rulings.

Incoming students can reach the SGA at (413) 545-0341, or visit their office at 420 Student Union Building, during the summer.

SCERA hears student voices

By Jonathan Liberty
Collegian Staff

Creating a platform for the voice of student concerns and student self-empowerment is the role of the Student Center For Education and Research Advocacy (SCERA).

"Our grass roots approach empowers students to take action on their own," said SCERA Director Marc Kenen.

The mission of SCERA is to serve as the research and advocacy arm of the Student Government Association (SGA). SCERA assists the SGA in order to maximize the University's resources to meet the self-identified needs of the students.

"We only focus on well-supported student issues," Kenen said. "We understand that student concerns not only need to be heard, but also acted upon."

The three main purposes of SCERA are advocacy, training and research.

Within the SCERA model for advocacy, the first step is to identify issues of concern to the student body. Policy proposals are then developed concerning these issues. Students are edu-

ALANA options abound

By Lisa Chiu

Incoming freshmen at the University of Massachusetts may be surprised to find that only 17-percent of the total student population consists of students of color.

"I felt like I needed to connect with people somehow, it was hard to find people to meet. It didn't hit me that there were so few students of color, until I finally got here," said Cecilia Gorospe, now a junior, reflecting on her initial reaction to UMass.

Students of color are referred to as ALANA students at UMass — meaning Asian American, Latin American, African American and Native American.

There are many areas in which students of color can get involved. Such avenues include, the Office of ALANA Affairs, Academic Support Programs, Registered Student Organizations (RSOs) and Special Interest Residential Programs.

The Office of ALANA Affairs (OAA), funded by students, coordinates activities and programming events for all ALANA students and RSOs.

Academic Support Programs are funded by the university and designed to advise ALANA students on academic and personal matters. There are three Academic Support Programs; the Collegiate Committee for Education of Black and other Minority Students (CCEBMS), the United Asia Learning Resource Center (UALRC) and the Bilingual Collegiate Program (BCP).

Sidonio Ferreira, a CCEBMS counselor, said that it is very important for incoming freshmen to come and visit the Academic Support Programs. He

GLBT opportunities plentiful; UMass support readily available

By Jamie Sinsheimer
Collegian Staff

In most high schools across the country, topics such as homosexuality and bisexuality are taboo. In many small towns and in some cities, the topic of sexuality is forbidden to be talked about. But at the University of Massachusetts, this is not the case.

The five-college area, otherwise known as the Pioneer Valley, has a reputation as a popular location for GLBT people to live, go to school, and work.

At UMass, students of the gay, lesbian, bisexual, transgender community (GLBT) are offered numerous opportunities for social and educational programs, in addition to counseling services.

Some of these opportunities range from membership in GLBT political organizations, to browsing at Pride and Joy, a store in nearby Northampton specializing in GLBT books, videos, t-shirts, and other merchandise.

On campus, there are three major resource and support centers serving the GLBT community: the Stonewall Center, the Lesbian Bisexual Gay Alliance, and the 2 in 20 Floor for GLBT students and their heterosexual allies.

The Stonewall Center

Located in Crampton Residence Hall in the Southwest Residential Area, the Stonewall Center was created eleven years ago to serve GLBT students, faculty, and community members as well as heterosexual allies.

The Stonewall center offers many in-house resources, including:

- A large lending library of books, newspapers, periodicals, videos, and articles.
- The largest computer data-base of gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgender resources in the Pioneer Valley.
- The yearly publication of Lesbian, Bisexual, Gay, Transgender resources, listing groups, organizations, and services in the Five-College community and the Pioneer Valley.
- The LAMDA Project, a 24-hour telephone information service, with information about groups, services and events.
- A monthly newsletter, BLATANT, which is free to all five-college addresses, and includes articles, announcements, and an events calendar.
- A full staff waiting and ready to answer questions, provide referrals, and address immediate needs.

The center also operates several other services on campus, including a GLB Speaker's Bureau, a GLBT information service available on the Internet through the UMass gopher, and helps provide staff and faculty development sessions and consultation on heterosexism and homophobia.

The Stonewall Center also sponsors the GLB Studies Brown Bag Lecture Series, which brings in speakers from all over the country to speak on GLBT issues. In past years, the lectures have addressed such issues as censorship, transsexuality, AIDS, and racism. The lectures, which are held in the Campus Center, are free and open to the public.

A monthly Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender Cafe series with local and national performers is also sponsored by The Stonewall Center.

The Lesbian Bisexual Gay Alliance

Formed as a registered student organization in the early 1970s, the Lesbian Bisexual Gay Alliance (LBGA) continues to serve UMass GLBT students through meetings, dances and other support services.

The LGBA office, located in the Student Union, is a comfortable room filled with couches, books, newspapers, magazines, and a large bulletin board listing GLBT resources and events. During the school year, the office is staffed by student volunteers who offer their time to visitors in need of assistance.

Every Tuesday night, the LGBA sponsors "Info-Socials" in the Campus Center that allow GLBT students the opportunity to socialize and exchange information with each other. Discussion topics range from coming out to coping with how to deal with homophobic teachers and roommates to parents. Meetings sometimes include guest speakers, videos and food.

LGBA is responsible for three major events throughout the school year. They include: National Coming Out Day on October 11 which usually involves a rally on the Student Union Steps. Queerfest, an all day festival that's held in the spring semester outside on the lawn near the Campus Pond, and LGBA monthly dances.

The 2 in 20 Floor

The 2 in 20 floor for GLBT students and their heterosexual allies is a special interest residential program that offers GLBT students the safety and community that might not be available in other on-campus housing arrangements.

UMass is one of the only universities in the country that has a program like the 2 in 20 floor since its inception four years ago. Located in Mary Lyon Residence Hall in the Northeast Residential Area, GLBT students live in a co-ed environment complete with special workshops and a bi- annual open house.

Students at UMass also have access to many more GLBT resources and services, including the following:

- Classes at UMass and the other five colleges that explore and/or focus on GLBT issues.
- Counseling through UMass Mental Health Services by counselors and psychiatrists trained to be sensitive to GLBT issues.
- Protection from discrimination and mediation provided through several UMass agencies, including the Ombuds office, and the Dean of students office.
- Local GLBT businesses, political organizations, and social groups that are open to students.

The print shop may also hire one student to run an off-set press. Students must bring their schedule, work study papers and any proof of qualifications to the shop at the beginning of the center. The Print Shop is located in the Campus Center across from the Coffee Shop.
- The Peter Pan ticket office is work-study only. This office is located next to the Print Shop in the Campus Center. Anyone interested should apply in early August. Contact David O'Connor at the front desk of the Campus Center Hotel.
- Auxiliary Services hires all students. Students interested in becoming maintenance assistants should contact Tim Cox, head of personnel, on the 8th floor of the Campus Center Hotel.
- The Craft Center hires all students. Acting Director John Taylor said the center will be accepting applications for nine potentially open positions. Students with experience in ceramics, stained glass, fiber arts (silk painting, tie dying and batik) and jewelry making are encouraged to apply. The center will consider all applicants who are friendly and want to work with the public. Ask to speak with graduate assistant Nam Mokwunye or the director in the early fall.
- The UMass Student Federal Credit Union offers volunteer positions. General Manager John Wagner said it is a great opportunity to gain business experience, community service and build a resume. About 20 tellers will be accepted. Apply in the first week, training begins a week and a half into the semester. The Credit Union is located in the Student Union.
- Student Union Post Office hires all students. The post office needs two or three student employees this fall. Anyone interested should speak with Manager Deidre Spezeski at the beginning of the semester or during orientation.
- Bicycle Co-op hires all students. The co-op needs student volunteers and hires people with experience as mechanics. Head Mechanic Bill Vandervalk said the co-op benefits include free work on your bike, great deals on parts, and the chance to meet many riders. The co-op is located in the Student Union. It will be open and accepting applications the first day students move in.
- People's Market, hires all students. Michael Gearin, a co- manager, said students should apply within the first week of classes. He said this student-run co-op provides experience in student business and participatory management. People's Market is located in the back of the Student Union. Applications may also be picked up at the Student Businesses Office upstairs in the Union. Another co-op position to check out is Earthfoods, a cafeteria next to People's Market.

said that study skills are the most important skills freshmen need to have when they get on campus.

There are many RSOs which are geared toward the ALANA community. There are approximately four umbrella ALANA RSOs, which include the Asian American Students Association (AASA), AHORA, Black Mass Communications Project (BMCP) and the Black Student Union (BSU).

Dan Lizana, outgoing President of the BSU, said that there are 24 ALANA RSOs on campus.

"It's important to get involved, because the policies which effect the outcome of the organizations will affect everyone. Policies can work for you or against, you but if you don't get involved they'll always work against you," he said.

ALANA can also become involved int the Student Government Association (SGA) and the ALANA caucus, a part of the SGA Senate which is always seeking new members.

At the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, the ALANA diversity desks, which include Black Affairs, Developing Nations and Multicultural Affairs, are available.

Special Interest Residential Programs (SIRPs) are created by students who wish to be in a living environment which focuses on ALANA issues and concerns. Such SIRPs include the Nuance floor located in Gorman Residential Hall, the Native American Floor in Chadbourne Residential Hall and the Asian/Asian American Floor in Dwight Residential Hall. Students who wish to live on such floors can sign up in the Housing Assignments Office.

cated about the issues and empowered to advocate on their own behalf.

"When students are united, there is very little that can not be accomplished," Kenen said.

In 1993-94, SCERA managed to achieve a zero-percent increase in tuition and fees. This was the first time in 20 years that tuition and fees were not raised.

Last spring SCERA attained the first decrease in tuition and fees, achieving a five-percent rollback.

Also, SCERA students negotiated with the University administration in order to gain $525,000 which will be distributed to student organizations and businesses over the next four years.

Within training, SCERA first earns the trust of those within the organization in order to assess the organization's needs. SCERA then supports the structural changes and develops and implements training programs.

"People involved with SCERA learn skills," said new SCERA Student Coordinator Jason Vecchio. "It is integral to develop the new staff into campus leaders."

SCERA has trained students in door-to-door canvassing, coalition building, lobbying, negotiating, press relations, group facilitation and many other organizational skills.

SCERA also does research, utilizing campus resources to gather existing information. After developing and implementing research instruments to obtain the necessary information, reports of findings and recommendations are prepared.

Course choices expand boundaries

By Daniel E. Levenson

With Amherst College, Smith College, Hampshire College and Mt. Holyoke College virtually right next door, a wide variety of possibilities, both academically and socially, are available to UMass students.

Incoming freshman are eligible to enroll in a five-college course after their first semester. UMass students earn full, academic credit at the University from the other colleges at no extra cost.

With rare exception, any class offered in the five-college consortium is open to UMass students for enrollment.

"Almost anything that's taught at Smith College is open to five college students," said Stacey Schmeider, of the Smith College Office of College Relations.

The UMass Five-College Office, located in the east wing of Machmer Hall, is responsible for coordinating UMass students interaction with the other colleges.

Carol Angus, from the Five-College Office, advises new students to check out what the surrounding schools have to offer in the fall semester.

"We want to remind them about the options available to them at the five colleges," said Angus "I think it's very exciting that our schools can work together."

Angus said that being immersed in a educational environment at another institution provides a unique perspective at one's own learning experience at UMass.

Additionally, the five-college consortium offers students specialized courses — among them a language program which allows students to study dialects that aren't usually available to undergraduates. According to Angus, this programs "allows students to take part in a guided course of instruction," in such languages as Swahili, modern Greek, and Hungarian, among others.

The five-college office also sponsors student symposiums which allows participants to share information in their chosen field of interest. Angus said that it "gives [students] a sense of what it's like to be in a profession."

Students can locate information on Five-College related events with a monthly calendar, published by Five-Colleges, Inc., available in the lobby of the W.E.B. DuBois Library and the UMass Five-College office campus.

Angus recommended that students take advantage of the resources offered by the Five-College library system. UMass students can borrow books or related materials at any Five-College library with their undergraduate identification card.

Students will find travel amongst the colleges convenient and inexpensive. The Pioneer Valley Transit Authority maintains several routes which frequent the five campuses, at no fare. The bus system allows students, in addition, to enjoy the social offerings available in Amherst and nearby Northampton.

Valley music scene;

A look at area clubs & record stores

COURTESY FRANK OCKENFELS

Melissa Etheridge set to perform Mullins Center on September 7.

By Mike Burke
Collegian Staff

Get your dancing shoes and ear plugs ready — you will need them to enjoy the excellent music scene that surrounds the Amherst and Northampton area. From night clubs to colleges to record stores, the Valley has it all. That is, as long as you know where to find it.

Live Music Venues

The club scene in Amherst is as dead as the glam metal genre, but no need to worry — there is the Mullins Center and Northampton.

The Mullins Center (officially in Hadley) brings the biggest and sometimes the best in MTV recording acts, such as Melissa Etheridge who is set to play on September 7; tickets are already on sale.

Northampton, on the other hand, has perhaps the best club scene in Massachusetts west of Boston.

Opened in 1979, the Iron Horse Music Hall was recently named one of the top 10 live music spots in the Nation by a prestigious British publication. The sound system is state of the art, and the club is cozy enough to feel at home instead of something similar to an extra on the set of MTV's "The Grind."

Though the ticket prices are often out-of-reach for the average college student, who struggles to pay for a $4 calzone, the Iron Horse brings top notch artists in nearly every imaginable genre. From Dick Dale (see Pulp Fiction) to Jonathan Richman to Cassandra Wilson to Diamanda Galas, diversity is the name of the game here. Over the past semester the Iron Horse has reached out to the University by booking several Phish-orientated jamming bands such as Percy Hill, Moe and Synaesthesia.

Take a five minute walk down the road to Pearl Street, Northampton's largest club, featuring an enormous upstairs room with a more intimate downstairs setting. Besides hosting extremely popular dance parties, the club opens its door to national acts from the world of alternative rock, rap, classic rock and metal.

Recent acts to take the Pearl Street stage have included the Ramones, John Zorn, Joan Jett & the Blackhearts and the Rollins Band. A couple times a month Pearl Street becomes a hard core haven with all-ages weekend matinee shows.

Besides the Iron Horse and Pearl Street, the area club scene

Artsy RSOs offer myriad of opportunities

By Lisa M. Oliveri
Collegian Staff

Do you consider yourself the "artsy" type? If so, the University of Massachusetts has many different Registered Students Organizations (RSO's) to suit your needs — covering art, music, theater and more. Completely student-run, the RSOs provide a fun and exciting way to become involved with the campus.

If theater is your forte, then the UMass Theater Guild is the RSO to check out. Formed in 1937, they have provided the campus the opportunity to learn about and perform in a variety of productions including musicals, drama, performance art and community outreach theater. This past semester the Theater Guild staged the musical Chess and Shakespeare's A Winter's Tale.

Members of the Theater Guild work in various positions of theater production as actors, set designers, directors and publicity coordinators. Many of the students involved are non-theater majors which allows the opportunity to work in a cultural and diverse environment.

The Theater Guild is a great way to meet others interested in the arts, and to gain experience in all aspects of theater. They plan to perform the Neil Simon play, "Rumors," and the Andrew Lloyd Webber musical, "Jesus Christ Superstar" this upcoming semester.

For those interested in applied arts, the University offers The Student Union Art Gallery, which provides both students and professionals a place to showcase their art. The gallery is committed to featuring art which addresses a wide variety of issues, cultures and lifestyles. Past exhibits have included an Indian artist who celebrated the Festival of Lights with Indian sculptures and paintings, an AIDS quilt constructed by members of the five-college community and a Holocaust remembrance exhibit by a Jewish artist.

The Gallery welcomes pieces from students completing thier MFA or BFA at the University. Undergraduates are also welcome to apply for internships or jobs at the Gallery. The group strives to introduce inexperienced artists to the realities of public exhibition.

For those more inclined to the broadcasting side of arts, UMass offers WMUA, a student run radio station that is on the air from 6 a.m. — 4:30 a.m. daily. The station enables undergraduates to become dee-jays and host their own show.

Although no experience is required, potential DJs must pass a five-week training course.

The station features a diverse schedule of music, news segment and public affairs. WMUA has their own extensive record library, but many dee-jays use music from thier personal collection.

Heard of Spring Concert yet? Well imagine the whole campus chilling out by the campus pond listening to bands like Blues Traveler or the Beastie Boys. Sound like fun? Hell yeah, but just don't ask the freshmen about the big gig, because due to a slew of problems this spring, the show was cancelled. Lucky for you, next year should be a blast.

University Productions and Concerts (UPC) is responsible for Spring Concert, as well as other on-campus musical events at the Student Union Ballroom.

The student-run organization gives students the chance to gain hands-on experience in concert production — plus the chance to meet rock stars (if you are lucky).

Lastly, if you're pining for reruns of "Soul Train" to be broadcast over the UMass cable network, but have yet to find them, then Soul TV may be for you. This weekly television show, scheduled to begin in the fall, will showcase student talent in a "Soul Train" type-format.

And if none of these are of interest, you can always start a group of your own.

Cheap tixs for area flicks

By Laura Stock
Collegian Staff

So now it's time for a trite, shameless plug for all the movie houses in the area in the name of informing all you incoming students.

Welcome to the University of Massachusetts, where the movies are cheaper than your average cup at the ragin' kegga. Where your student I.D. is good for more than the redemption of savory beef strudel and chicken pucks at the dining commons. That's right — one of the best things about being a student is you can get movie tickets dirt cheap.

Except for the occasional on-campus freebie or the incessant replays of Basic Instinct on Housing Services Cable Network (HSCN), the best flick for your buck can be had at either the AMC-owned Hampshire Six Theaters (at the Hampshire Mall) or the Mountain Farms Four Theaters (at the Mountain Farms Mall — a.k.a. the "dead mall"). Both theaters offer a $2.50 "twilite" showing, as well as $3.50 student discounted tickets for the matinee and evening showings.

The mall theaters are a haven for the more "mainstream" movies. You know, the popular ones. Be forewarned though, these two theaters tend to generate quite a crowd on weekends — hence, you must go early to avoid long lines. Not too early though. They don't let you purchase your tickets until two hours before the show. For those of you sans automobiles, the Hampshire Mall (walking distance from Mountain Farms) is on the PVTA bus route.

Downtown Amherst has its own movie theater — a single- screen, "vintage" (a nice way of saying "old") 600-seat venue that, despite is dilapidated exterior, is a fairly decent place to catch a movie. The Amherst Cinema tends to feature not-so-brand-new movies that are in limbo between the big theaters and the video store. It is also on the bus route, as well as an easy walk from campus.

If arty movies are what you crave, then downtown Northampton has a fairly sizable selection to suit your tastes. The Pleasant Street Theater (on Pleasant St.) has two cozy little rooms for viewing off-beat, independent type films. Pleasant Street also has a steady stream of foreign films, as well as the occasional animated feature.

Keep travelling up Main Street and you'll find the Academy of Music — another location for art house films. The Academy usually hosts two movies per week, and with its red curtains and balcony seating, it's a unique place to view a film.

Pleasant Street and the Academy are the most pricy of the lot, averaging around $5 per ticket. The two theaters only offer student discounts occasionally.

So that's the scoop on all the hottest places to catch a movie in the Valley. As for popcorn ratings, you'll have to judge for yourself. Happy viewing.

Hey freshmen! The Arts & Living page is always looking for interested writers to cover music, film, theater, books, television, games and just about anything else. Stop by the Collegian at 113 Campus Center basement (opposite the ATM Machines) and ask for Mike Burke, the Arts & Living Editor. We may be hungry, but we don't bite.

The ABCs to college, a guide to campus life

Mark McGrath

Alright little University of Massachusetts tykes, it's time for the first lesson in the finer points of what I like to call "UMass culture." I realize this whole college thing is and will continue to be thrown in your face for quite awhile, so take heart. We're giving you a head start. So here we go, the ABCs of UMass culture.

A is for Antonio's Pizza — Where else can you get a baked bean avocado slice of pizza with a mad cow lover's bacon hamburger slice all for an affordable price? Quality, value and convenience, what a concept!

B is for Bulger — Billy Bulger, our esteemed president. Sightings of this specimen are so rare that Bulger-watching societies are springing up all over campus. Your best chance to see this specimen is at basketball games and other high- profile photo opportunities.

C is for Coach Cal — "The Man who Built Mullins" (and the basketball program for that matter). Can you say "cult of personality?" Yes, he's done a lot for the University, but don't let him fool you into thinking he's anything more than a well-dressed deodorant pitch man.

D is for D.P. Dough — "What's a calzone?" you ask. Well, basically, it's a pizza crust filled with really cool things and rolled over. My favorite: "Buffalo Zone." Hot sauce and chicken mixed in with blue and mozzarella cheeses. What more could you ask for?

E is for Extravaganja — Every spring the Cannabis Reform Coalition and its deviant associates gather for a festival of... you guessed it — pot smoking on the town lawn. Wow! a festival dedicated to the habit-forming gateway drug. Don't let them fool you. Even though you'll be in college, drugs are still for losers.

F is for Fine Arts Center — The massive concrete monster south of the Campus Pond. This piano-shaped behemoth was designed for a southwestern campus, and the architects didn't account for rain, so the University just spent a gazillion dollars to repair it. Guess what... it still leaks.

G is for Greek — When you hear the word Greek used on this campus, don't think salad, Athens or anything having to do with the European country. Rather, think of those wonderful members of fraternities and sororities who are working diligently to get their good names back after a couple of embarrassing incidents involving alleged rapes and sexual assaults in their houses.

H is for Health services — I'm going to let you in on a little secret. Unless you're dying, you'll be waiting for up to three hours. Practice the line, "I have a (long pause) fever of (another pause) 106. I think (pause) I may die within 15 minutes."

I is for Internet — Arrrrgghh!! It's impossible to escape the addiction of the Highway to Hell. Steer clear of all computers and you'll have a chance of getting through your first semester successfully.

J is for jalopy — That's what we have on this campus. If you want to see real cars, go over to Amherst College or follow a tenured faculty member.

K is for Kentucky — They may have gotten us in April, but if they're even thinking of looking forward to next season, THEY ARE STUPID. The Minutemen are gonna take it to their sorry Wildcat asses, and don't you forget it.

L is for library — Yes, that tall brick phallus in the center of campus is a library. We'd describe the inside for you, but you'd forget it all by the time you actually make it there. Oh yeah, watch out for falling bricks.

M is for Mullins Center — Here's a little bit of trivia for you — the Mullins Center isn't even in Amherst. It was also constructed with your money, and doesn't even have the seating capacity to pay for itself, given its rather sparse event schedule. It is the home of the basketball team and some pretty cool concerts. Take advantage.

N is for Natty Light — Alright, you're looking for something to drink but you really don't have a lot of money. What do you do? It's natural. Natural light that is. You may claim to be a sophisticated beer-drinker with your own brand and all, but everyone has to drink the Natts at least once in their college career.

O is for orientation — What is it now? Two or three days of running from place to place not knowing where you're going or from where you came. All we can say to you is get used to it.

P is for PVTA — The last "free" bus system in the country. The system takes quite a bit of getting used to. Just remember this — the Belchertown Road and South Amherst busses will take you to Antonio's Pizza.

Q is for quiet hours — Yeah right like maybe!

R is for RAs — Resident Assistants. You leave your parents at home and what do you get? College students who are paid $53 a week to make sure that you stay in line. If you want to know the truth, these upstanding ladies and gentlemen are some of the hardest working and lowest paid individuals in the world. Take it easy on them.

S is for Southwest — Five really tall buildings and 11 smaller shadow dwellers. I heard that Southwest has the highest population density in the world for an area of its size. If you want a sure-fire record, try path dentistry.

T is for Townies — Believe it or not, everyone in Amherst isn't a student. There are also those who live here on a permanent basis. They can be spotted by their rather "real" mink and the hunting permits on the back of their hats.

U is for Underage drinking — Never seen it, never will.

V is for voice mail — You know you've had a bad day when you return to your room and the red light is blinking but then the operator says, "You have no new messages in your mailbox. Main menu. To send a message press two. To disconnect press ' ' "

W is for Whitmore — Home of UMass administration, also known as "witless." Undoubtedly over the course of your college career, you will have to go to this poor excuse for a file cabinet. Just make sure you have about three hours per errand — and don't forget your VISA.

X is for — eXperience. That's what you're here for, the college experience. Take advantage by getting from it what you can.

Y is for You — The most important part of the UMass community are the individual students. While people may say that beautiful palaces like classrooms make for better colleges, we know better. When it all comes down to it, You are what makes UMass great. So what if you don't play for the basketball team?

Z is for Zoo — 'nuff said. Now let's get going.

has seen better days. Turmoil brewed in Northampton last winter when the Grotto started hosting local acts and a few national bands. But recently they have decided to change format.

The Bay State Hotel has long been the place to see up- and coming bands but the club has been under management changes.

Poor folks head over to the Fire & Water Cafe for an earthy, intimate club that is always free admission. Live bands perform six nights a week and the kitchen serves up scrumptious food.

Club Metro is the closest Northampton has to a true nightclub. New York City style. DJs from around the globe spin the tunes in the multi-room complex.

Record Stores

So you saw a great live band at the Iron Horse and need to buy all their recordings? The immediate area serves up ten record stores so you are sure to find exactly what you need. In town, Newbury Comics, Mystery Train and For the Record compete for the University market.

Newbury Comics offers the best in alternative rock on CD at very reasonable prices. Plus their selection of posters, magazines and new vinyl is second to none in town.

Mystery Train, which recently opened in Amherst, is a used CD/record haven. If you need extra cash, take that old copy of Jesus Jones and trade it in so you can eat — Mystery Train's buying policies are the best in the Valley.

An Amherst classic, For the Record is known for their extensive and diverse catalog, plus the knowledgeable staff. If you are looking for a recording outside the realm of the rock world, look no farther.

Record buyers brave enough to leave Amherst will find Media Play, featuring an enormous selection at the Hampshire Mall that is second to none.

Northampton is filled with record stores from Main Street Records to Dynamite Records to Discoveries to B-Sides Records to Turn It Up!

Main Street features the best new vinyl selection in town, especially for seven-inch singles. Dynamite and Discoveries are filled with nuggets usually at decent prices.

Used CD buyers are advised to check out Turn It Up! Every CD is $7.99 or less, and the staff is more than helpful. Plus, you can listen to the recordings before you buy them.

For sure there is something for every music fan in the Valley from live shows at the Iron Horse to used records at Mystery Train.

UMass takes four fall A–10 Conference titles

By Chris Stamm
Collegian Staff

As the autumn leaves fell, so too did opponents and Massachusetts school records.

The University of Massachusetts finished the fall season with four conference championships, in women's soccer, men's and women's cross country and men's water polo as athletes like Rene Ingoglia and Frank Alessio wreaked havoc on the record books. Here's a wrap of what took place:

When women's soccer coach Jim Rudy earned his 100th career win in the season opener against St. Bonaventure, the Minutewomen could sense that this would be a season of success.

Finishing with an overall record of 14–4–2, 8–1 in the Atlantic 10, UMass proved to be a contender as it played the vast majority of the season with a top 10 national ranking, climbing as high as the No. 6 spot in the country.

In the post season, the Minutewomen walked away with the A–10 Championship title with two impressive shutouts. In the semifinal round, UMass downed George Washington 2–0, as a prelude to its 6–0 annihilation of A–10 newcomer Xavier in the tourney finals.

Perhaps one of the most exciting victories in UMass history came in the gut–wrenching 2–1 double overtime win over Hartford in the first round of the NCAA's. In the final seconds, senior captain Rachel LeDuc headed a cross inside the 18–yard box in the pouring rain to advance the Minutewomen. In the second round, UMass would end its season in a 3–0 loss at the hands of UConn once again.

Men's Soccer

The men's soccer team finished out a solid fall season with an overall record of 14–4–2, 8–2–1 in the A–10. The Minutemen earned a landmark win as ,they beat national powerhouse Boston University (the No. 1 ranked team in the '94 season) in a 2–1 win at home on Garber Field. The following week, UMass travelled to California to beat the No. 20 Dons of San Francisco. Rounding out the roadtrip, the Minutemen tied coach Sam Koch's former team Stanford.

Football

Looking back on UMass' '95 campaign on the gridiron, one name stands out. Rene Ingoglia.

In addition to being the Minutemen's key offensive weapon, Ingoglia also earned the team honor or re–writing the record books breaking seven all–time UMass records before signing a CFL contract this spring. Ingoglia earned the all–time UMass record for career rushing with an impressive 3,978 career yards. Ingoglia earned top honors in: career TD's (43), single season receptions by a freshman (10), career rushing yards in a game (115.7 yards/game) and single game rushing yards with 313, to name a few. However, this last mark didn't stand long, as teammate Frank Alessio shattered Ingoglia's record rushing for 337 yards in a 28–23 win over Northeastern. Ingoglia and Alessio combined with freshman Matt Jordan for one the most potent running game in the Yankee Conference.

The team met with mixed success UMass finished the season with a 6–5 mark. The Minutumen dropped its home opener 21–7 against former UMass coach Jim Reid and his Richmond Spiders. It's most impressive win came at the hands of Holy Cross, as they shutout the Crusaders 51–0.

Men's Water Polo

UMass finished the regular season undefeated in the Easter Water Polo Association 9–0, 19–2 overall. Brian Stahl finished the season as the Minutemen's leading scorer with 93 points while Luis Limardo did his part tallying 69 goals while notching 21 assists.

After earning their third straight EWPA Championship, the Minutemen advanced to the NCAA Final Four, the first team from the east to advance that far.

Later in the year, the UMass community was struck by the loss of water polo and swimming stand out Greg Menton. Menton was the fastest swimmer on coach Russ Yarworth's water polo squad winning every game starting swim off.

Volleyball

The past fall proved to be a landmark season for the Massachusetts volleyball team. Coach Bonnie Kenny and the Minutewomen finished the season 24–10 overall, 15–5 in the A–10. In pre–season play, UMass swept the field of the Hofstra/Spalding Invitational before taking second place in the annual UMass Invitational losing to Syracuse in the final round as captain Giza Rivera and freshman Michelle Paciorek were named to the All–Tournament squad.

The Minutewomen also played the first ever volleyball game in the William D. Mullins Center as they hosted UConn (and lost) in preparation for the NCAA Tournament which was hosted in the Mullins. UMass closed out its season winning 12 of its last 13 games before losing to URI 3–0 in the A–10 Tournament in the Curry Hicks Cage.

Field Hockey

The Minutewomen finished out the season with a mark of 9–11 after playing a rigorous schedule filled with nationally ranked opponents. Kyle Rothenberger carried UMass throughout the season and took home All–America honors. Senior Streya Volla battled through a season plagued by injuries to help carry the team.

Men's Cross Country

The UMass harriers were the third team to earn an A–10 Championship title. The Minutemen beat the second place team by 18 points, as Matt Behl and Mike Macieko were the first two runners across the line for Massachusetts. In addition, UMass took fifth place in the BC Invitational at Franklin Park in Boston and fourth place in regionals.

Women's Cross Country

The women's cross country squad teamed up with the men's for dual A–10 Championships. The Minutewomen edged out conference powerhouse St. Joseph's 46–49 as Rebecca Donaghue crossed the tape in second place with a time of 17:38, just nine seconds off pace of the first place runner. Jen Wagger took fourth place overall finishing in 18:13 as Katie Greenia took 10th overall with a time of 18:45.

The team took fifth place in ECAC's as Donaghue's first place showing earned her a spot in the NCAA's where she finished in 50th place.

Women's Tennis

The Minutewomen earned the New England Championship title. At the beginning of the season, coach Judy Dixon had some doubts about the maturity level of her squad as she had only two returning upperclassmen. Regardless, the UMass squad finished the year with an 8–1 record and used the off season to prepare for the A–10 Championships which they would host in the spring.

Men's Tennis

The Minutemen finished their season with a record of 8–1. Freshman Todd Cheney finished with a final fall record of of 6–2. Fellow freshman Jason Blind finished out the season undefeated.

A pleasant addition to the squad was foreign exchange student Gregor Rummel. After losing his first match of the season, Rummel didn't drop a match the rest of the way with a final count of 7–1. Senior co–captains Justin Lynn and Darren Tow. Tow will need to fill in the gap for No. 3 singles player Ankur Baishyu, who had to withdraw from the University the week before the final match of the season due to medical problems.

"We've taken a giant step," said UMass coach Judy Dixon, "We've had some things really go our way. Gregor Rummel coming on this team was something that was unexpected, and he made a huge difference."

Winter team results red hot, hoop teams storm NCAAs

By Fred Hurlbrink, Jr.
Collegian Sports

Not even the mountains of snow that blanketed the Massachusetts campus could keep the Valley from being Happy this winter.

The UMass sports scene was for the most part anything but dreary as championships, milestones and records were splashed all over the back page of the Collegian.

Where to begin?

• The men's basketball team won the Atlantic 10 regular season and tournament title for the fifth straight season, falling just once in the conference, that to nemesis George Washington who halted the Minutemen's 26–game winning streak. They were the No. 1 team in the country for most of the season earning the top seed in the East region of the NCAA tournament. Consensus Player of the Year Marcus Camby led the Minutemen to the Final Four where they lost to Kentucky. Edgar Padilla (honorable mention All–American) and Carmelo Travieso established themselves as one of the best backcourts in the country.

• Joanie O'Brien's women's basketball squad made school history by securing the program's first ever NCAA tournament bid this winter. The Minutewomen went to overtime before Michigan State was able to knock them from the tournament. Senior standouts Octavia Thomas and Melissa Gurile put up spectacular numbers while trudging through one of the tougher schedules in the country. The Minutewomen hosted national power Stanford the day after Thanksgiving and came away with one of the biggest wins of the winter.

• The quickly rebuilding hockey program made more strides this season as they found their way into the Hockey East playoffs for the first time. Getting the eighth seed, the Minutemen were quickly, and rudely, eliminated by Boston University, Joe Mullen's charges won the inaugural Alumni Cup, winning a three–game series with fellow state school, UMass–Lowell.

• On March 2, the men's gymnastics team captured their eighth consecutive New England championship while junior Gabe Columbus took home the all–around title. Senior co–captain Steve Goldman scored consistently all season including notching two first place performances at the New England meet. Freshmen performers Brad LeClair and Phil Leiberman were among the team's top scorers all year.

• UMass's Atlantic 10 dominance was in effect in women's gymnastics as well, as Dave Kuzara's corps hosted and won the A–10 Championships. In addition to winning the conference title, the Minutewomen swept the post–season awards. Kuzara was named the A–10 coach of the year while Denise Johnson earned Freshman of the Year honors. Tara Swartz (A–10 Gymnast of the Year) and Lianne Laing were veteran standouts.

• Led by fantastic freshman Tom Toye, the men's indoor track team logged a best–ever third place finish at the A–10 meet this season. Toye broke Kevin Walters' school record in the 200m dash with a time of 22.36 at the St. Valentine Invitational in Boston, and went on to break that mark twice more in the winter season. Senior captain Marc LeFebvre was another consistent scorer for coach Ken O'Brien's team.

• Thanks to a slew of top performances, the women's indoor track team won their first ever Atlantic 10 championship becoming only the second team in conference history to win both the cross country and track championships in the same year. Sophomore Rebecca Donaghue won two events at the A–10 meet and provisionally qualified for the NCAA meet in the mile. Julie LaFrenier was named A–10 co–coach of the year.

• The men's swimming team suffered through a tragic season as one of the best swimmers, and persons, in school history, Greg Menton died after collapsing at a meet at Dartmouth (N.H.) College. Despite the shocking loss, the Minutemen pulled together to win the A–10 meet and place second at New Englands. Junior Sean Anderson, one of the Minutemen's best performers, took fourth place in individual scoring at NEs.

• Senior Sarah Baker was a consistent first place finisher in the 50– and 100–yard freestyles helping a young women's swimming squad grab third place at the A–10s and second place at the New England meet. Baker won the New England individual title in the 50–yard freestyle while youngsters Kerrin McCarthy (soph., 200–yard back), Irrina Kossenko (soph., 200–yard butterfly) and Julie Alexander (fresh., 200–yard breast), all of whom performed well all season, notched third place finishes.

• The woeful winter weather couldn't thwart the season of success had by all sports teams on the UMass campus as they brought home four A–10 titles among other regional and national honors.

Welcome incoming students,

There will be a meeting early in the semester for interested new writers. Stop by our office at 113 Campus Center basement or call co–sports editors Casey Kane and Chris Stamm at 545–0719 for more information. Watch the Collegian for info on our first meeting. he'll do it all with a tenacity that cannot be expressed on a scouting report. The way he attacks the game of football cannot be measured, timed or weighed by any old scout.

All that a guy like Rene needs is a chance. Give him a chance to show that he will run through a wall for you and prepare to make plans for the carpenter to come repair the damage shortly after. You've heard about the Notre Dame–caliber high school back who suffered the knee injury his senior year, before venturing on to an outstanding career at UMass. You've heard about the natural tailback being converted to fullback for the sake of the team.

Unfortunately, the NFL didn't.

So Rene Ingoglia is now a member of the Montreal Alouettes. He'll play in the eight–team Canadian League, the minors of the NFL. He'll make less than an NFL minimum wage, but, as he terms it, "a good first job salary." He said a couple of NFL teams did end up calling him, interested in his services. But by then, Rene had already brainstormed. He had weighed his options.

"I was invited to a couple of NFL camps. We decided I had a good chance of starting for the Alouettes by going up there for two years," Ingoglia said.

If he went to the NFL camp he was invited to, he faced the possibility of being cut at any time, maybe even before he had a chance to prove himself on the field. By going to Montreal, he'll be able to showcase his talent, and that tenacity of his, amidst all of the scouts searching for NFL talent. And going to the CFL team will give him something that and NFL team can't offer him at this point and time.

Stability.

"If you get cut for any reason, you're left out in the water," Ingoglia said. "Now, I have the chance to produce and do well for the next couple of years."

His plan is just that. Two years. Or shorter, hopefully. Rene is using this as a springboard. His dreams consist of the NFL. The disappointment of the last two weeks can't even squelch that.

Let's hope that Rene makes it. Not just because he's a UMass alum, or because he works so hard. If you know him, you know what I'm getting at. He's a class act, one of the friendlier guys I have encountered in interviewing athletes. As much passion as he has for the game of football, he treats people with an equal amount of respect. Win or loss, good game or bad game, drafted or not drafted, Rene Ingoglia treats you the same way, regardless.

Bonne chance, Rene.

the Hokies could muster.

Gorrie put another run on the board in the fifth, and freshman designated hitter Brian Samela scored a UMass run in the sixth.

In the bottom of the eighth, Massachusetts put three more runs on the board. Samela was hit by a pitch for the second time in the game, Hodgson was walked and leftfielder Ryan Jette singled to load the bases. Gorrie knocked a triple to left center, scoring all three baserunners.

Freshman lefty Bill Cooke pitched 4–1/3 innings of scoreless relief to earn the win.

"It feels real good to win two games today, because we know we beat a good team," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "We took a really aggressive approach to the games today."

Murphy, UMass' centerfieder, was named the tournament's Most Valuable Player after he went 3–for–6 on the day, with three RBI and a home run. Over the course of the tourney, Murphy was 9–for–18 with three homers and a A–10 Tournament record 13 RBI.

Kiah, Dart, Gorrie and Mazzaferro were named, along with Murphy, to the All–Tournament team.

With the A–10 win UMass will receive an automatic bid to the NCAAs. Regional pairings will be announced next Monday.

all–time leader in shooting percentage (.559) and is in the top 10 in nine career categories, not to mention five single– season lists.

His impact on the aquatics program was immense, but his impact on the people in the program and in his life was far greater.

"I don't think it was his athletic achievements that attracted most people to Greg," diver Justin Murphy said. "It was his love of what he was doing and his love of life."

"He loved what he did. Every time he was in a race he gave it 100 percent. He was so intense," senior swimmer and tri–captain Dave LaPorte said.

"He never just thought about himself, he was always there for us," Yarworth said. "Greg was a sweet, sincere young man. He knew how to live. He was a special kid and a special and talented athlete, but his impact on the UMass community was more than athletic achievement. He was a dedicated teammate, a true friend and a tremendous representative of the university."

Earlier this spring, Greg's water polo No. 6 was retired in an emotional ceremony in Boyden Gym. He became the first player to be so honored in the history of UMass aquatics.

"[Seeing the banner in the future] will be inspirational," Yarworth said. "It will be bitter sweet, thinking about what could have been, but we'll do what Greg would want us to do. We'll be champions."

the second half. In the second round, a pesky Brevin Knight wouldn't let his Stanford team roll over until a 10–foot Bright jumper finally put the Cardinal to rest.

On to Georgia and a defensive masterpiece against Arkansas that ended shortly after it started, as the Minutemen trap broke the back of the Razorbacks and their freshman–laden squad early in the Sweet Sixteen.

The Elite Eight was rumored to be the final stop for the UMass express, as they were pitted against Allen Iverson and Georgetown. That couldn't have been further from the truth as the Minutemen put the clamps on the Hoya scoring machine, and were never threatened after halftime. After UMass advanced with the 86–62 dismantling of John Thompson's bunch, the stage was set for a highly anticipated rematch with Kentucky in the Final Four.

It was in the Meadowlands where the top two teams in the land all year met in what was billed as the actual National Championship. A valiant second half run led by Camby and Giddel Padilla cut a double digit Wildcat lead to three with five minutes to play, but UMass could not get any closer and the unprecedented ride finally stopped at the hands of Pitino and his eventual champions.

Even though 1995–96 went by without a national title for the Minutemen, the 35 wins, which were still tops in the country and the season overall, will be the one against which all other UMass hoop teams will be measured.

Mareina never touched the ball.

"Whenever the ball was hit everybody made the play," Henderson said. "In the first game I didn't strike a lot of people out, but we made all the plays in the field."

Henderson walked none, for only the second time this year in a complete–game, as the only Marist runner reached on what was unquestionably an error at first. Officials from both teams agreed that it was a botched play and not a hometown scoring decision.

Regardless of Henderson's dominance, Sortino did not even have to consider who to start in the second game of the doubleheader, completing her line–up card far quicker than usual for the night cap.

"Harry," she said afterwards. "There was no decision."

After her no–hitter, Henderson, and her microscopic 0.91 ERA, took to the hill for a second time, and got fans thinking of the only thing more sensational — a perfect game.

Through two innings, she was flawless and had retired 27 of 28 batters on the day as defensive replacement Rachel Ammons strode to the plate leading off the third.

Ammons blooped an astounding bunt just over Sam Cardenas' head at third, and just far enough away from shortstop Ashlie Hayes to sneak in for a bunt single.

The hit had minimal effects on Henderson though, as she cruised through the duration of the game, striking out eight and allowing four hits.

"She's probably one of the top two pitchers we've seen this year," Marist coach Jonnah O'Donnell said. "After the first game I had a good feeling going into the second game because my kids were putting the ball in play, but she just over–powered us [in the second game]."

"She's just going to get better too," Stevens said. "We're still just at the tip of the iceberg with her. She was very dependable today. Whatever I called she was right in that general area. When she got behind in the count she got right back and didn't dig herself in deep and start to rattle. I didn't ever feel like she was not in control of the game at any point. She was calm and confident and the one time she did get into trouble, she knew that there was a billion ways out of it.

"She's getting rock solid."

Perhaps the most frightening sight of things to come for UMass opponents came late in the mercy–rule slaughter of the Red Foxes, when Henderson made the long–awaited debut of her knuckle–ball.

The antithesis of her blazing Randy Johnson–styled fastball, the fluttering off–speed pitch baffled Marist batters beyond belief.

"It finally worked," an excited Henderson said. "I've been trying and I haven't been able to throw it, so Mona couldn't call it [in a game]. Finally I just relaxed and threw it."

"We've been trying to work that in and she's started to do a good job with that," Stevens said. "She's been off and on with that, but we decided it was a good time to start throwing it in [during a game]. She's got potential for that pitch. It's going to be huge and a very big pitch for her."

Good hitting, an old adage says, is all timing, and good pitching is breaking up that timing. For this reason many teams feared playing the Texas Rangers a few years ago, wary of facing knuckleball legend Charlie Hough one night, and the flame–throwing Nolan Ryan the next.

Just the thought that Henderson's opponents now have to make this adjustment within an at–bat could throw some beyond the verge of insanity.

Simply watching it from the press box is frightening enough.

On diamond, UMass sweeps in A–10 Champs

■ Freshman star sparks Minutewomen

By Leigh Torbin
Collegian Staff

In the final NCAA play-in series of her illustrious 17-year coaching career, Elaine Sortino opted to start Danielle Henderson, playing in the first series of her young career.

Under the pressure of having the team's season on the line, and asked to pitch two complete games, the freshman phenom responded with a mesmerizing no-hitter, the first of her career, and showed no signs of fatigue in the second game, throwing a complete-game four-hit shutout with eight strikeouts.

The fact that she was pitching an NCAA play in game was lost on the fire baller as she exhibited poise well beyond her years on the mound.

"I don't think Harry even thinks about [pressure]," said associate coach Mona Stevens, who handles the team's pitchers. "She just gets out there and throws. She doesn't get really excited or really down, she's just right there all the time. She takes that into big games and it doesn't change her.

"She doesn't get rattled. She's settling in and not trying to over-pitch. She's just hitting her spots and trying to stay settled. She's not trying to do anything fancy. She's staying nice and sweet with her motion and hitting her spots."

"She was cranking today," catcher Kelly Buckley said. "She just went out and threw the way she throws. She didn't put any pressure on herself by thinking about what she had to do. She just went out had fun today."

That fact was obvious to all in attendance who witnessed Henderson's mastery of the Red Foxes. In her brilliant no- hitter, Henderson was short on strikeouts, but Marist batters could only make feeble contact with her pitches.

Only two balls left the infield in the opening game, both routine fly-outs to left and right. Centerfielder Stephanie

When the members of the Massachusetts baseball team took to the field to begin yesterday's first game with Virginia Tech, they knew they had nothing to lose and everything to gain.

When the Minutemen walked off the field in Boyertown, Penn., they hadn't lost a thing and they had gained the Atlantic 10 Tournament crown by defeating the Hokies in two games, 5-2 and 8-2.

Going into the day's Championship, Virginia Tech held a decided advantage over the University of Massachusetts. The day before, the Hokies had handed the Minutemen their first loss in the double-elimination tourney. Virginia Tech had yet to lose a tournament game, and could have claimed the title with only one win.

In the afternoon's first game, senior pitcher David Dart threw a complete game six-hitter. He retired the last 10 batters he faced, and didn't allow a hit after the fifth inning.

"I felt really good out on the mound today," Dart said.

Virginia Tech led after five innings, 2-0, courtesy of single runs in the second and fifth frames. UMass came back to score four runs in the top of the sixth to take the lead, and the Minutemen didn't look back.

With one out in the sixth, junior shortstop Brad Gorrie and sophomore second baseman Muchie Dagliere singled, and Gorrie scored on a Nate Murphy double. Freshman Doug Clark singled to bring both Dagliere and Murphy home. Freshman third baseman Bryan Mazzaferro connected for a single to score Clark, giving UMass a 4-2 lead.

In the top of the eighth, Murphy singled to reach base, and eventually scored when senior catcher Andy Kiah was walked with the bases loaded, closing out the game's scoring.

In the afternoon's second game, Virginia Tech took a one- run lead in the first inning. After hitting a pair of singles, UMass starter Jeff Puleri walked the next two batters he faced to bring in a run.

In the Massachusetts half of the frame, the Minutemen easily took back the lead. With one out on the board, Gorrie connected for a single and Murphy knocked a shot out of the park to make the score 2-1 in favor of UMass.

After Kiah drew a walk in the bottom of the second, freshman first baseman Ryan Hodgson cracked a two-out double off Hokie pitcher Matt Litchel to bring the catcher home.

Virginia Tech cut the Minuteman lead to one in the top of the third, but that was the last offensive effort

Men's hoop season one to remember

By Justin C. Smith
Collegian Staff

One historic year

The year was shared by every member of the Massachusetts men's basketball team, as it rolled to a 35-2 record, a record fifth straight Atlantic 10 tournament title and a school first trip to the Final Four.

The 1995-96 season will be remembered as the year Marcus Camby won as much National Player of the Year hardware as there are Craftsman tools in the Do-It-Yourself department at Sears. But almost every Minuteman down the roster provided a classic moment that will be forever etched in the memories of each UMass fan.

Maybe the most important game of the season for the Minutemen didn't show up in the actual results for the season. Just two weeks before their showdown with pre- season No. 1 Kentucky, John Calipari's squad ran into a buzzsaw known as the Converse All-Stars. Former Minuteman Derek Kellogg came back to his old stomping grounds and taught his old teammates a valuable lesson: No matter how talented you are, you can't afford to take anyone lightly.

The loss to the exhibition squad turned the team's question marks from whispers in an ear into screams through a megaphone. Camby shrugged after the Converse loss, "If we lose to these guys, then what are we going to do against Kentucky."

If anyone answered that question with "win," there would have been resounding laughter in the room, but they also would have been correct. Camby showed his Player of the Year form against the Wildcats with a 32 point, nine rebound, five-block performance in wrestling Rick Pitino's Cats into submission, 92-82, in the season opener.

UMass followed that with a win at the Franklin National Bank Classic tournament over Maryland and Florida before two of the more anticipated match-ups of the year.

When Wake Forest, ranked 10th in the country at that point in the season, came to Amherst, the Demon Deacons the highest-ranked team ever to play the Minutemen on campus. Doubling the excitement of the game was the matchup of Camby and Wake's high-profile center, 6-foot- 10 Tim Duncan, a pre-season All-America selection. The nationally broadcast game was the showcase for the two unenviable NBA lottery picks.

The Minutemen prevailed 60-46 as Camby shut down his counterpart, holding Duncan to a measly 4-for-18 shooting and just nine points.

Just three days later John Calipari's squad took part in the first, and what promises to be a long line, in a series of match-ups with Boston College, in the Commonwealth Classic. The game was held in the state capital, pitting the State U. against the city's media darling at the FleetCenter.

Trailing by 13 late in the first half, the Minutemen used a 17-1 run that bridged the first and second halves to take their first lead. Down the stretch with the game on the line, it was senior co-captain Donta Bright who hit a three and a driving lay-up to pull out the victory for UMass.

As Christmas break approached, UMass participated in the Jimmy V. Classic, where it first watched A-10 sister school Temple knock off then top-ranked Kansas. The Owls had given UMass a wondrous X-mas present, a shot at the top spot in the polls. They received the gift with gratitude, and beat Georgia Tech and freshman phenom Stephon Marbury to lay claim to No. 1.

The Maui Classic was next for the Minutemen and the next hurdle for the UMass squad was in the semifinals when Marcus Camby went down with a leg injury in the first two minutes of the game and was unable to return. Tyrone Weeks stepped off the bench, dropping home 16 points, as UMass moved on to the finals where it disposed of eventual national runner-up Syracuse, to enter 1996 still unbeaten.

Calipari said that if his team went 7-6 in their 11 non- conference games he would be happy — entering game 11 against Memphis his team was perfect, and tops in the country. It kept on rolling, disposing of the third-ranked Tigers 63-61 in the Atlantic 10/Conference USA challenge.

Every great season usually comes when a team has to endure an unexpected happening which binds it closer than ever. Jan. 14 was the day that made the team come together as its superstar Camby collapsed without warning just before taking the court against St. Bonaventure. The game against the Bonnies was played without its center or coach, but Weeks again came up big for the Minutemen as UMass pressed on without its marquee player.

Bright scored his season high and Carmelo Travieso caught fire form behind the three-point arc, putting up their two biggest point totals of the season while their friend and teammate was still sidelined. And even though there were never any answers to the mysterious collapse, the victories continued to pile up for the Minutemen.

Camby's return didn't rock the UMass boat a bit when Jan. 27, ironically in a game against the Bonnies, the team offered up a 25-point blowout where he blocked nine shots, tying a school record. Not only was he back, he was as good as ever. The unbeaten streak continued even with a huge scare at Xavier and a stiff test at Virginia Tech, until the perennial thorn in the Minutemen's side finally burst UMass' bubble.

Mike Jarvis and the George Washington Colonials came to the William D. Mullins Center for the second straight year and beat UMass, this time 86-76, ending the dreams of a perfect season for the Minutemen. They were now 26–1, and could set sights on the ultimate goal, a National Championship.

Calipari's crew finished the regular season with only the GW blemish, and breezed through the A-10 tournament, finally ending its four-game losing streak to the Colonials, and beating Temple for the fourth straight year in the finals to advance to the the NCAAs as the nation's top seed.

Central Florida was the first step along the way for the Minutemen. The Golden Knights hung around for a half before being blown out by, among other things, Edgar Padilla's quick hands in

After record senior year, Ingoglia signs with CFL

Andrew Bryce

Rene Ingoglia, the greatest running back in Massachusetts football history, signed a two-year contract with the Montreal Alouettes of the CFL last Thursday. He reports to camp in two weeks, and the season starts in late June.

"Hopefully, this will be a two year stint," Ingoglia said.

I talked to Rene Ingoglia less than four days before the NFL Draft a couple of weekends back. The reason I spoke with him was because there was a chance he would be drafted. If he wasn't drafted, free agency would be a possibility. In fact, Rene thought he would be was a sure invite to an NFL camp, and that he would know his destination by 10 p.m. on that Sunday night. He thought there would be about 20 teams looking to take a shot at him.

He thought.

But as the draft came and went, he wasn't drafted. When the draft was over, and the NFL teams were scurrying to grab others for their camps, he wasn't called. The phone was ringing, but the persons on the other line were not the ones he wanted to hear. It was his agent telling him the disappointing ongoings. It was curious reporters, like me, looking to see which NFL city was going to welcome the former UMass star.

Rene woke up the next morning wondering where his career was going. The next two weeks were spent in limbo. His career hadn't even started yet, but already it was giving him problems. These two weeks were supposed to be of anxiety, but not as to if he was going to get a professional football contract.

It was supposed to be where that chance would be given.

An NFL team had to take a chance on Rene Ingoglia. I mean, he did rush for over 4,600 yards and scored some 50 touchdowns in college. He did run a 4.4 40 at an individual workout, benchpressed 225 pounds 23 times, jumped 39 inches off the ground, broad-jumped 10 feet.

Nope.

Unfortunately there were many other running backs in higher demand as they were drafted in the seven rounds of drafting. Unfortunately, there was that inevitable, "Hell, he did all that on the Division I-AA level."

Unfortunately, those NFL teams just don't know Rene.

Around here, we know he'll do anything a coach asks of him. He'll run. He'll block. He'll catch passes. He'll block kicks. He'll return kicks. He'll block for kicks. He'll be a spot back. And

Greg Menton

Menton remembered as athlete, scholar and friend

Fred Hurlbrink, Jr.

It's extremely difficult for me to define who Greg Menton was and what exactly he meant to his friends, teammates and coaches here at the University. I envy any person who can properly put into words how great Greg was, and in many ways still is.

His athletic prowess was surpassed by his ferocious intensity which was in turn surpassed by his easy-going, approachable, good-natured personality.

I feel almost fake writing such a personal tribute to a man that I never met, but you can't help but know by hearing what other people say that he was a tremendous individual.

"When you think about Greg, he was totally committed to make everyone better in swimming, water polo or otherwise," coach Russ Yarworth said. "It just felt good to be around him."

"Greg was a huge part of the program; he always showed the importance of hard work and discipline — he never missed a practice." 1995 water polo co-captain Luis Limardo said. "I think that discipline is the best thing that Greg taught me.

"He was such a great guy to be around. That's why people care so much about him, not because he was a great swimmer."

He was more than just a great swimmer, though, he was a record-setting swimmer and an integral part of the water polo squad.

"The name Menton immediately grabs your attention when you look at the swimming record board," Yarworth said.

Greg went into his junior year already owning two UMass sprint records in the 100-yard backstroke (51.83 seconds) and the 100 yard butterfly (50.14). He is also a member of two school best relay teams: the 200-yard free relay (1:23.18) and the 200 yard medley relay (1:33.71).

In contrast to being the standout performer on the swimming and diving team, Greg's water polo performances were often over shadowed.

His 71 points (40 goals, one 2-pt. goal, 29 assists) ranked him fourth on the team, but the real measure of his value to the team was the dirty work that he did. In 1995 he set a team record for steals with 63; he won 82 swim-offs for the Minutemen and his aggressive play earned him the dubious distinction of leading the team in fouls.

Greg ended his water polo career at UMass as the club's
